Other programs center more specifically on religious language and symbols. "God-talk" deals with how we put words around our experience of the infinite and ungraspable, the love which some people label "God". A series on "Jesus-God-Man" looked at the man that many people have called "the Christ". We asked the questions: What can we know about this man? Can we believe what we are told about him? Was he a man? Was he also God? What difference does it make what I believe about him?

Also, these questions of identity are met on the individual level through personal counseling by the Episcopal Chaplain, Gene Robinson. These questions of identity might include anything from sexual problems to draft counseling.

Another major thrust of St. Anselm's has been the building of a community centered around the Sunday morning worship experience. Our services are consistent only in the fact that they are informal, comfortable, and never quite the same. Sermons range from movies, small group discussions, and dialogue to conversations with Paul Meyer about the needed response of Christians to the growing afflictions of the United States. Though an Episcopal service of Holy Communion is used, those who attend are from nearly every Christian denomination. There is a healthy mix between University and townspeople at St. Anselm's, and more and more we begin to see how much we need each other.

St. Anselm's tries to facilitate the asking of basic religious questions, namely: Who am I? Where am I going? Why am I here? Because St. Anselm's is not the only group capable of asking these questions and offering some answers, it realizes the need to enable other groups to reach students. Therefore, St. Anselm's is open to most any group on campus who needs a place in which to raise those kinds of questions. Two yoga groups meet at St. Anselm's weekly. Too, questions of sexual identity and the implications of human sexuality are explored in several discussion groups which meet weekly at St. Anselm's.

More than anything, St. Anselm's hopefully witnesses to the reality of the love of God, and shows how that love needed thing in today's world. It tries to tell others of that love by its actions and its quiet witness.

Film Star Champions Ecology

Washington, D.C.—Film star-ecologist, Robert Redford, has been named National Chairman of the 35th annual National Wildlife Week, March 19-25, sponsored by the National Wildlife Federation and its state affiliates.

The 1972 Wildlife Week theme, "Ecology: A Wild Idea," focuses on the fact that wildlife is a part of the environmental crisis and is dependent upon quality natural surroundings.

The bald eagle, emblem of the United States, is in serious trouble. Its plight symbolizes the fate of 100 other American wildlife species threatened by extinction due to man's interference with the natural world.

"The bald eagle is more than a decoration for dollar bills, postage stamps and commercial advertising," Redford said. "It is a symbol of strength, freedom and quality of life."

"It may be a wild idea to believe we can reverse environmental destruction to protect the bald eagle and create a quality life for man, but this country was founded on the wild idea of independence, and not so long ago a wild idea took us to the moon. Ecology is another wild idea that will work."

Throughout Wildlife Week the National Wildlife Federation and its 3 million members will be urging people throughout the United States to consider their relationship to the natural world and make personal commitments to help achieve environmental quality.

Review On 'Cotton' 'Utterly Banal...'

Partners being well known and all. Well, these guys chase a bale of cotton around Harlem. This is called irony. That old bale gets around. Uncle Bud gets around too. He is played by Redd Foxx, who is also famous on T.V.

Calvin Lockhart is good. Judy Pace is great. All the others are great and good. Those production credits couldn't be better. They too are famous on T.V.

This satire is meant to convey two facts. First: The review of this picture in the Cynic was utterly banal. Second: The entire black-conscious, so vibrant in this particular picture, was destroyed.

Illegal Cars Park On University Grounds

by David Buckley

The Executive Secretary of the University Parking Commission estimated Monday, Feb. 28th, that there are, at least, 2000 "ghost" commuter student parking at and around the University. That is, at least 2000 students park cars on and about University grounds which are not registered with the University security force and are therefore subject to a $25.00 fine, a potential revenue of $50,000.

As of December 21, 942 commuters, 649 residents, and 2171 faculty-staff were registered; leaving several thousand students unaccounted for. Compounding the problem there are at the present time only 925 commuter spaces available all of which are in one parking area up on the hill behind Mary Fletcher hospital. There are 1273 faculty-staff spaces available, all conveniently situated near the heart of the University.

Make commuter parking not yet a reality, the topping to the cake has yet to be applied. The increase of $2.00/semester for students and $10.00/semester for faculty-staff was to have gone into effect this year, if not for the price freeze. It will go into effect next year. The Executive Secretary of the Parking Commission, Mitchell Call, explained that a portion of the increased revenue will go toward greater enforcement of existing parking regulations.

Students, wake up. The Parking Commission as well as the University Executive Vice President, Dr. Paterson, are accountable for providing convenient parking for the student body. It appears only too obvious that they have not done so and have no viable plans to do so in the future. They have only demonstrated a conflict of interest in priorities; a stubborn refusal to recognize by their own estimate 2000 "ghost" commuters.

As a final note, the city is in the process of banning ALL on-street parking in the immediate University area as demonstrated by the loss of spaces in front of Waterman and on College Street. Parking is going to become worse in a situation where it is almost non-existent.

Students Tire Of Classroom, Produce T.V. Show

by Barbara Frankel

Students taking the second semester Basic T.V. Production course, tired of studying television production in a classroom situation and desiring practical experience, are currently producing a weekly television show about the university. The show, entitled "Inight UVM" is aired Sundays at 1 p.m. on Channel 22 (WVNY).

Their basic goal is to present activities and issues of interest about the university to the Burlington community. The program is taped three weeks in advance at ETV (Channel 33), which is owned by UVM. A new producer, director and crew are chosen each week from members of the class. It is a responsibility of the producer to select and coordinate talent for the program. Members of the class work in various capacities, such as lights, audio, graphics, set design, etc. Ray Dilley, the instructor of the course, works through ETV. He is a liaison between the students and the station and is always available for technical advice. Programs will continue until May and, if there is enough student interest, will be continued again next year.

The first show had three segments. In the first segment, Dr. Donald Gregg of the Chemistry Department performed "chemistry with magic", chemical experiments which he has performed in various schools throughout the state for the enjoyment of the children. The other two segments consisted of three workers from the Office of Volunteer Programs who showed slides and an E.E. Cummings poetry reading done by Professor Carl Schneider. This Sunday, the program will deal with Mitchell Kohl, a university administrator, who will discuss new buildings and renovations (Sector at UVM, For example, a Living and Learning Center is going to be built at Main St., with an underground connecting the library to this. In addition, a new theatre is being planned to replace the small Arena Theatre now in use. A folk singing group will also appear on the program this week.

Plans for future programs include next Sunday's offering which will feature the theme "Mass Media at UVM." The first half of the show will be about WRUV AM-FM. Dr. Jack Haggell, who is in charge of the stations will be on hand, along with the student directors of the stations, Dr. Kim Warden and one of his students will discuss his course on film making techniques. They will show films made by students in the course, dealing with such topics as the Shelburne Museum and the admissions office. On March 26, "Inight UVM" will focus on Ed Orr, director of the Environmental Art at the University. Additionally, an instructor from the women's physical education department will demonstrate a fencing match using two of her students.

Parochial Schools' Plight-No Money

by Dan Hadam

One of the greatest problems which faces schools today is not an academic one, but rather a grave financial crisis. Consider the plight of the public schools, and then consider what faces private and parochial schools. Their problems are compounded by the lack of a tax rate to rely on, and their security is threatened by the traditional taboos of support by the government to private institutions disregarding their secular/non-secular nature.

The Vermont Cynic examined the nature of this financial crisis with respect to its effect on parochial schools in Burlington, specifically at the secondary level.

Father Wendell Searles, principal of Rice Memorial High School, terms the current effect of money shortage to Rice as "extreme". Since its thirteen year history, Rice has gone from a non-tuition school to a current tuition level of $400 annually per family. In the last seven years tuition has jumped nearly two-hundred per cent because of striving to make ends meet.

Rice's income is derived from three main sources: the first, through tuition, which meets about 50% of the total need. The twenty Catholic parishes in the county are then assessed annually according to how many students attend school from their district, which brings in another 25% of the budget. The remaining bulk of funds is met on the state doleman level from a $75,000.

grant. The rising cost of private education has left its mark at Rice, too. From a peak attendance level of 1100 students in the years 1963-64, Rice has dropped drastically to a current 800 student level. Raising the cost of tuition has defeated its practical and ethical purposes as it drives away students unable to afford increases, but Father Searles notes that this is the grim necessity.

Costs, substantially less in parochial schools than in public schools, are perhaps more difficult to meet in the parochial schools. The per-pupil cost is significantly less, Father Searles states, because parochial faculty members receive less. The average salary for a priest at Rice is about $2500 a year as compared with a starting salary of over $5000 for a Burlington lay teacher.

One of the biggest thorns in the side of parochial education is the position of the federal government. The government has long upheld its policy of separation of church and state, which some feel is an outdated and unjust policy. Father Searles feels that for the secular activities in parochial schools there "should be some form, some degree of aid." He further feels that the tax dollar should in some way be redirected to aid parochial schools for those people who choose private parochial education. Tuesday, March 7, the Burlington voters passed a special tax increase of $425 which would be used to hire public school teachers for parochial schools. The issue, which represented about $36,000, passes by a margin of 100 votes, but was subsequently overruled on the state level as unconstitutional.

Father Searles, concerned about these recent developments, stated "We don't know where we're at now." In spite of the unconstitutionality of the appropriation, the Burlington voters have given their OK to the measure, and Father Searles feels enthusiastic about the issue finally having been brought before the public.

The quality of parochial education has not dropped, Father Searles argues, in spite of the financial woes. Since its realization in 1959, Rice has improved its two basic curriculums of college preparatory courses and those of business education. The traditional, conservative approach to instruction has been lessened, Father Searles feels, through "less rigidity in the curriculum."

In a trend of studies courses there is a trend of non-graded classes, and last year a pass-fail program was enacted for senior electives. This is the program's second year of operation due to the faculty's unanimous vote to the faculty's unanimous vote to the faculty's unanimous vote to the

Putney Swope: A Different Kind Of Film

I personally did not like the film. This is solely my own opinion and has nothing to do with the quality of the film as an art work or with the fact that someone else may not like it. Still, the film has many interesting facets and should be viewed while you have the chance. If you cut it to make it suitable for television, there would be about thirty seconds of original film left.

Secondhand Censorship

The reason I bring the matter up is that several people have expressed interest in seeing Sweet Sweetback. Headassess Song, a black film which has been advertised for some time but has not come. The film has done well in other sections of the country, but the box-office potential of black films in Vermont is unsure. I've heard Sweetback is very good, and the previews shown here bear this out. Theaters will only book films that appear to be potentially profitable. An audience exists in Burlington for specialty films, demonstrated by the success of the Lane film series and the S.A. films. If you want to see films of this and other types call the theaters. If enough people call, they'll book a film. If you want to see Sweetback, call Cinema 1&2. They can't be expected to book a film and lose money on it, and they won't know there's an audience for it unless you call.

Professor Thompson pioneered the study of African aesthetics, and is the foremost authority on the Nigerian Yoruba tribe with whom he lives for years. Even now he divides each year between Yale and Africa. He is currently involved in studying the influence of African art and music upon Black America. Professor Thompson's latest book is called Black Gods and Kings, and is a photographic essay on the Yoruba art at U.C.L.A. THE INSIDER

by Sam Simmons

Before I began to write this last "Insider," I thought back about my four years playing hockey at UVM. It has been an experience I shall never forget and it is primarily due to one person, Jim Cross. And now the University of Vermont is faced with a problem: they may be looking for a new hockey coach pretty soon.

Since Jack Kelly is leaving Boston University for a coaching position in the recently formed WHA, that institution is searching for a replacement and Jim Cross is being seriously considered. That job would seem to be a hockey coach's dream-come-true. Last fall they built a new rink that is one of the finest in the East. The hockey team has an operating budget of $50,000 per year. (Grants-in-aid are not included in that sum. They come from somewhere else). B.U.'s hockey reputation is one of the best in the country. Plus, Boston University is Jim Cross' alma mater.

Compare that to what he has at UVM. He gets 1 1/2 scholarships a year. His operating budget is $14,000. His teams play in a rink that is rapidly being dated and in need of renovation. His salary doesn't compare. What man in his right mind wouldn't jump if that job in Boston were offered to him?

I think perhaps I have gotten to know him well enough in the past four years to believe that he might be crazy enough to stay here. If some changes and improvements were made. At UVM, the hockey team is what it is today because of him. He built it up from nothing. He is the reason people come here to play. He can make UVM hockey go places. But the University doesn't seem to be fully aware of this. For too long they have been giving the hockey team the runaround and it may be too late to do anything about it, unless some people really get moving. When you think about it, somewhere in that menagerie on top of the hill there must be a few more grants-in-aid and money for new seating in the rink. That doesn't seem to be asking for much. What sport brings in the largest percentage at the gates? What sport has posted the most consistent winning record over the past years? What sport is on the low end of the financial totem pole?

Consider it, UVM: If you want to kiss off your hockey team, let Jim Cross go to B.U. But if you really want hockey to remain a part of this campus the way it is now, you had better find a way to keep him and quickly. Time is running out.

UVM Skaters Fall To Bullish Onslaught

by Dave Clark

Well the hockey season is over and now all the mourners and Monday morning quarterbacks can expound at great length as to why it ended so soon.

The game last Wednesday was lost because of a number of reasons. The main reason for the loss was the fantastic goal-tending of Buffalo's Larry Dunn who stopped something on the order of 39 shots. When a team puts that many shots on goal it is expected that they will score three or four goals at least.

Vermont didn't score any goals because they didn't finish plays and because Mr. Dunn had tremendously fast reflexes.

Dunn was everywhere the puck was and a few places it wasn't. The few places he wasn't was when the Cats were lucky or unlucky enough to hit the post with a shot.

Ted Yeates, Sam Simmons, Bob Hodde and Ned Grant have played their last game for Vermont. This situation always brings a feeling of sadness. Being a Senior in any sport and especially on a winning team is not an easy thing and often lends itself to many memories. These can be both good and bad ones. These seniors played to my line of thinking on the last UVM hockey to date.

This team had more balance, teamwork, desire and a greater standard of excellence than any other team to play before them. They tried harder and played harder than they were asked and most often were their own most severe critics.

As I left the arena last Wednesday night I didn't feel mad or sad (while I am sure those feelings were there) just void and maybe stunned. The whole season seemed a waste but now I realize that this was not true. Vermont played well all season and set all kinds of records. Some of you may feel that the records will mean nothing because we were denied the title. To those people I say come to a UVM hockey game in a couple of years and while you are there look at the program. When you see the list of accomplishments for the 71-72 season you will have to say to yourself "That was a great year."

Sue Rich Paces UVM Skiers

by Joan Mollica

The University of Vermont women's ski team defeated seven other ski teams at Pico Peak March 3-4 to win their last ski meet of the season. The UVM team amassed 285.56 points for first place over Middlebury with second place at 283.23 and the University of New Hampshire scored 273.00 points for third.

Sue Rich paced the Vermont women by capturing both the slalom and giant slalom events. Finishing the two-run slalom in 78.44, Sue was followed closely by Vermont's Missy Dever 6th place, in 82.52 and Barb Thomas, 7th, in 82.63. Mrs. Rich went on to take the giant slalom in 97.05 seconds. Thomas was 8th with 101.21 and Dever finished 12th in 103.23.

In the 4 1/2 kilometer cross country race held at Mountain Top Inn, the University skiers placed 2nd, 4th and 12th. Joan Mollica ran the course in 20:51 followed by Pam Knights with 22:06 and Marcia Sears in 23:25.

The women's team competed in two other college meets in which they placed third. UVM finished third at Middlebury Carnival behind UNH and Middlebury, who won their own Carnival. At Colby Jr. College, UVM placed third behind UNH and Colby Jr., who won their own meet, too. The women's team competed in numerous Eastern and club races all season long, also.

WHY WOULD A WOMAN AT UVM WANT TO TAKE ROTC?

She probably wouldn't. But she might be interested in taking some courses with ROTC students. Military affairs are certainly important to all of us, so why shouldn't the UVM cad enroll in one or two of the following courses to be offered in 72/73 by the Department of Military Studies?

MS 1 Introduction to Military Studies. Fall Semester. Relationship of war to society; impact of technology on warfare; role of logistics and administration. Political, social, economic factors making up current military power. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 2 U.S. Defense Establishment. Spring Semester. Organization of Department of Defense. Process of formulating national security policy. Impact of economic factors on the decision making process. Case studies of current issues affecting national security. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 12 Contemporary World Military Scene. Spring Semester. Seminar on current international use of military forces, viewed against a background of long-range national concerns, especially of U.S., Western European countries, U.S.S.R., China. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

Don't expect to find drill, or marksmanship, or first aid in these courses. Don't expect to be reading Field Manuals. Do expect to find provocative questions raised by the faculty and by the commercial texts to be used, such as Military Power and Potential by Knorr; How to Control the Military by Galbraith; Defense Strategies for the Seventies by Halperin; and others. If you are interested in more information or a complete listing of courses for next year, drop by the Department of Military Studies or call 956-2986. Currently there are four non-ROTC men taking our courses, Wars of Revolution. We hope many more men and women will consider Military Studies courses during pre-enrollment, March 12-April 14.

'Blood, Sweat and Tears'

Blood, Sweat and Tears, one of the most popular groups, will perform on Friday, April 21, at Memorial appearance in Burlington.

There will be two performances, for which reserved seats are the spring recess, on Monday, April 24 and 25.

The opening act is folk singer, album, "I'm a Stranger Too!"

SAGA

by Mary Jo Dahlbloom
Robert C. Stetson, SAGA Food Service District Manager, as announced that a multiple meal ticket system will be instituted at UVM in September. Mr. Stetson indicated that by instituting this alteration in the present system, the food service is endeavoring to "react to changes in student life styles." Late in October of 1971, Mr. Stetson, Keith Mier, Director of Residence Halls, a group of students and other interested persons met to discuss options on meal plans available to them. In addition, a questionnaire was sent out to 150 randomly selected students concerning the type of meal plan they would prefer, as well as other aspects of the meal ticket system. Of the 150 questionnaires distributed, 130 were returned. The new meal ticket plan takes the results of this survey into account.

Under the new system, students have the following options: the regular 20 meal-a-week ticket may be purchased, a 15-of-20 meal per week ticket may be bought, the 12-of-20 meal ticket may be selected, or a 9-of-15 meal ticket offers another choice. Under the 15-of-20 plan, students are entitled to eat fifteen meals each week on campus. The 12-of-20 plan provides for eating any twelve meals per week in the cafeteria. However, the 9-of-15 meal plan is restricted to weekdays. If a student selects the 9-of-15 plan, he may eat nine meals on campus only on Monday through Friday. This final ticket plan is not able to be used at all on any weekend.

The new meal ticket will consist of a picture ID card and a fold-down punch card. The number of punches across the card will vary according to the plan that the student has selected. If a student selects the 15-of-20 meal plan, there should be fifteen punches across his card. It will not be possible for the student who has purchased the 15-of-20, 12-of-20, or 9-of-15 meal ticket to carry over meals not used in a previous week into a following week. Neither will

Recently a number of students were ripped off by local garages for major and minor repairs to their automobiles. This is not only immoral, but in many cases unlawful. This has become an increasingly growing problem in the Burlington area, especially for college students. So, if this has happened to you or some of your friends, let us know about it. Write a short paragraph stating who ripped you off and for what services. Be specific with prices; your name is not necessary but would be helpful to us for future reference. You can drop this off at the Cynic office or contact Brian Doxsee, 201 Davis Hall, 656-2314. This will enable us to at least make public "Where not to Go" and, with your help, perhaps rectify the situation.

Scholarships Awarded

For environmental work, scholarship and environmental projects they will carry out in their senior year. The awards were presented by Dr. P. Ovis Blackwell, associate professor of community medicine and environmental health specialist, at a luncheon at the University sponsored by the UVM Environmental Studies Program.

Mrs. Cathy Pawlowski Farnsworth, of Burlington, and Robert A. Baird, of Pittsford, both University of Vermont juniors, have received $250 scholarships paid for by Economics Laboratories Inc. of White Plains, N.Y., and awarded through the National Environmental Health Association, on the basis of

1972 Catalogue Of Courses

The 1972 Catalogue of the University of Vermont made its debut this week in a new, "economy version," and featuring academic freedom as its cover theme.

The catalogue traditionally appears in the spring as current UVM students enroll for the fall semester. The enrollment period begins Monday (Mar. 20) and continues through April 14.

This year's catalogue with 256 pages has approximately 100 pages less than last year's—the result of an effort to reduce text to save money. Most of the page savings were made possible by elimination of introductory and "back-of-the-book" material; and course descriptions have been pared also from 163 pages in last year's catalogue to 114 in this year's.

Some additional savings were affected by using one color ink on the cover instead of two colors as last year.

The statement on academic freedom, adopted by the UVM Faculty Senate in September of 1954, is featured on the cover design, beginning in larger screened type on the front cover and continued on the inside covers and concluded on the back cover.

A spokesman for the UVM Public Relations Office, which edits the Catalogue in cooperation with the Academic Deans and department chairmen said the academic freedom statement was featured on the covers "because this seemed a logical and appropriate way to give the statement wider readership."

The statement notes both the responsibility of the teacher to the institution and to his profession and the responsibility of the institution to the teacher. It quotes from and subscribes to the statement on academic freedom adopted by the American Association of University Professors, and quotes Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to prospective faculty members at the University of Virginia: "For here we are not afraid to follow truth wherever it may lead, nor tolerate error so long as reason is free to combat it."

Financial Aid Applications

Present and readmitted students who want to apply for financial aid for the academic year 1972-73 may now obtain the appropriate materials and instructions at the Financial Aid Office, 320 Waterman Building.

To apply for aid students should (1) submit a Family Financial Statement directly to the American College Testing Service with proper notation that it be forwarded to the University of Vermont, and (2) submit a Financial Aid Application directly to the Financial Aid Office. Although there is no final deadline for applying for financial aid, applications received prior to June 1, 1972, will be considered first. Applications filed after that date will be considered in chronological order according to date received and will be subject to the availability of funds.

Vermont Residents should also apply for assistance to the Vermont Student Assistance Corporation, 191 College Street, Burlington, Vermont. Follow carefully the Family Financial Statement instructions. Please note: Students who would qualify for assistance from the Vermont Student Assistance Corporation will not be considered for University assistance unless they have applied to that agency also.

Separate applications are not necessary for restricted forms of aid. Eligibility for all assistance is considered when the application documents are reviewed.

Camp Staff Interviews

Male staff is still needed for Boston Children's Services Association's Camp Baird, located in Plymouth, Massachusetts, is a residential treatment camp for emotionally disturbed boys, ages 8 to 12.

Candidates should be at least a college junior, having experience working with the emotionally disturbed child and also some previous experience counselling within the camp setting. Positions are available for both counselling and waterfront staff. Salaries range from $500 to $700, and the camp season extends from June 24 to August 31.

Director Dean M. Coe will be interviewing interested students at the Office of Career Planning and Placement, 224 Waterman, tentatively around April 17. For further information about the camp and interview "sign-ups," stop in at the Placement Office as soon as possible.

COMMERCIAL METALS RECYCLING AWARD

Purpose of the Commercial Metals Recycling Award is to draw the student writer, editor and/or photo journalist's attention to the need for recycling basic resources such as metals and to force attention on the economic as well as the ecological aspects of recycling. Problems and/or solutions involved in recycling include demand, prices, supply, technology, as well as cost and availability of air and water pollution control devices for processing equipment. Sponsored in cooperation with National Council of College Publication Advisers and Associated Collegiate Press.

ENTRIES MAY INCLUDE:

Feature Articles:
1. Any original, special article, news story or editorial dealing with recycling in ecology, including metals reclaiming.
2. Any series of original articles dealing with ecology and the recycling of resources, including metals.

Pictorial Journalism:
1. Any original, special photography and/or original artwork, dealing with recycling in ecology, including metals reclaiming.
2. Any series of original photographs and/or original drawings dealing with ecology and the recycling of resources, including metals.

Entries will be eligible which have been published Sept. 1, 1971, to May 15, 1972. Any combination of feature article with artwork or photographs may be submitted in both categories and will be judged on individual merit for the particular category. Photographic special effects are acceptable.

Awards will be given on the basis of excellence in reportorial skills involved for each category, for clarity, for imagination and in-depth study of the need for and problems involved in recycling, with special emphasis on metals reclaiming.

It's the real thing. Coke.

Real life calls for real taste.
For the taste of your life—Coca-Cola.

Bottled under the authority of The Coca-Cola Company by COCA-COLA BOTTLERS OF BURLINGTON

Pictures talk. Some little boys don't.

Some inner-city ghettos have special schools. For little boys who don't talk.

Not mute little boys. But children so withdrawn, so afraid of failure, they cannot make the slightest attempt to do anything at which they might fail.

Some don't talk. Some don't listen. Most don't behave. And all of them don't learn.

One day someone asked us to help.

Through Kodak, cameras and film were distributed to teachers. The teachers gave the cameras to the kids and told them to take pictures.

And then the miracle. Little boys who had never said anything, looked at the pictures and began to talk. They said "This is my house." "This is my dog." "This is where I like to hide." They began to explain, to describe, to communicate. And once the channels of communication had been opened, they began to learn.

We're helping the children of the inner-city. And we're also helping the adults. We're involved in inner-city job programs. To train unskilled people in useful jobs.

What does Kodak stand to gain from this? Well, we're showing how our products can help a teacher—and maybe creating a whole new market. And we're also cultivating young customers who will someday buy their own cameras and film. But more than that, we're cultivating alert, educated citizens. Who will someday be responsible for our society.

After all, our business depends on our society. So we care what happens to it.

More than a business.

Consumer Protectress Betty Furness To Speak April 6

Betty Furness will speak in the Ira Allen Chapel on Thursday, April 6, at 8:00 PM.
Admission is free with UVM
ID: $1.00 without.

At noon on April 6, SASpeakers will present Dr.
Benjamin Spock in the Allen Chapel. Dr. Spock will lecture and entertain questions. The presentation begins at 12 o'clock noon in the chapel;
admission free with UVM ID;
$1.00 without.

Betty Furness, who was once the United States' most famous saleslady, became the official champion of the American consumer in March, 1967, as President Johnson's special assistant for consumer affairs, a position which she held until January, 1969, when the new administration took office. In August of 1970 Miss Furness was appointed by Governor Nelson A.
Rockefeller as Chairman and Executive Director of New York State's Consumer Protection Board, but she resigned from this position in July, 1971, when it appeared that the New York State Legislature was not acting on any of her suggestions and had drastically curtailed the Department's budget, an indication to her that the work she was doing was fruitless.

Although there was considerable doubt about her qualifications among consumer groups because of her admitted lack of expertise, Miss Furness did more to change that opinion during her two years in office earned wide praise for the excellent job she did. She embarked on her new task with the same great charm, zeal, outspokenness and efficiency which marked her earlier career in show business. She amply demonstrated that she was aware of and prepared to fight for such consumer problems as credit regulations, federal meat inspection and hidden interest rates. She developed a very effective campaign on the consumer's behalf: to educate the consumer on his rights and how to buy, to persuade vendors to be fair voluntarily, and to support legislation to require fairness if persuasion was not feasible.

Miss Furness continues her work speaking for the consumer as a member of the Board of Directors of the Consumer Union. She is also a member of the Advisory Council to the Senate Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs, Vice-Chairman of National Committee on Tax Justice and Vice-Chairman of the Citizens Committee for Postal Reform.

Educated in New York City—at the Brearley School—she attended Bennett Junior College in Millbrook, N.Y. and then began a very brief career as a model. She was soon given a screen test and went to Hollywood for REO, remaining there for six years. She appeared in a number of motion pictures of the Grade B variety which she herself describes as "appalling except for two—"Swing Time" with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, and "The Magnificent Obsession."

She gave up Hollywood to return to New York and the stage, but discouraged by lack of success she entered the pioneering television industry in 1948. She did narrations and commercials and in 1949 began her work for Westinghouse, which she continued for almost twenty years. In connection with her Westinghouse commercials she became interested in politics, and in 1960 gave up the commercials to become involved in television news and public affairs, which she did for American Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting.

In 1964 she began working for Citizens for Johnson and Humphrey, and at the end of this successful campaign she started work as a recruiter for the VISTA and Head Start programs. When she accepted the appointment by President Johnson she gave up all of this and made her new job more than a full time occupation.

Miss Furness was named Woman of Achievement in 1967 and was also awarded an Honorary LL.D. by Iowa Western University.
She is married to Leslie Middleley, executive producer of News for CBS. She is a member and past president of the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences and a member of the Academy of Dramatic Arts.

S.A. Meeting: Constitutional Amendments Proposed

by Jeri Covey

At the last Student Association Senate meeting on March 15, a rash of constitutional amendments were proposed to the new constitution.

Eight constitutional amendments were proposed by the Constitutional Revisions Committee. All of these amendments deal with making optional the use of caucuses to govern the business of the Senate, the Council, the Fraternity Forum, and the Inter Residence Association.
Originally these caucuses would have effected a merger of these organizations into the Student Association.

A series of amendments proposed by Carroll Hirm would have the President appoint a cabinet, including the Treasurer, Secretary of Student Activities, Secretary of Electronics, and Secretary of Communication, with the advice and consent of the Senate. As it stands now, these officers are elected at large.
The purpose of this amendment is to allow the President to have direct control over his officers. Ace Bugbee commented that this amendment would give too much power to one person. An opposite point of view was taken by Bill Sisco who felt that the student government has been ineffectual in the past and this would give the President the needed support.
Other amendments by

Carroll Hirm called for the Chairman of the Senate to be elected from the Senate, not at large. An amendment was also proposed that would provide a method of impeaching the President.

Paul Cillo offered an amendment for Dick Cassidy that would eliminate the condition that candidates for the offices of President and Chairman of Senate have to have served as a Senator for one year. This amendment was proposed on the basis that this is a democratic society and anyone should be allowed to run for these offices.

Amendments proposed by Bill Sisco asked for the institution of an Appointments Committee. This would be a standing committee to be composed of the President, Chairman of the Senate, and three Senators. The purpose of this committee is to appoint with the advice and consent of the Senate members of the SA Speakers Bureau, Concert Bureau, and the respective Committees of the Board of Trustees for student representations.

In other business, a motion was made by Ace Bugbee to support a proposal by the University of Miami in Ohio.
The proposal reads: "Whereas the cost of education is extremely high, and whereas many potential students cannot attend institutions of higher learning because of the financial handicap, and whereas the majority of students work full-time, part-time, and during the summer to gain the privilege of education and pay for essentials of life, and whereas higher education should be made available to as many citizens as possible, be it resolved the Miami University Graduate Student Association and the Student Senate recommend to the Congress of the United States, the tax deductibility of tuition fees up to the amount of $500.00 in any tax year, applicable to Federal Personal Income Tax."

Rich Moss proposed a motion that a survey be held at the next SA campus wide election making the following questions: do you know the name of your SA President? do you keep abreast of SA weekly business? do you feel that SA is in a worthwhile purpose? The purpose of the survey would be to provide statistical information.

A motion was made by Dave Carter that all student representatives that are appointed to the Board of Trustees committees also serve on the corresponding Faculty Senate Committees.

Paul Cillo moved that the Senate appropriate $50 to send two UVM students to a National Student Lobby Conference in Washington, March 22, 23, 24. The

Amanda Award Offered

Each year an award is offered to the University of Vermont for excellence in vocal or instrumental composition. The award, known as the Amanda award, in the form of a silver cup on which will be inscribed the names of winners in an annual competition, has been given by Mrs. George E. Bantel and Mrs.
Dorothy Bantel Dragonette, in honor of Professor Betty Bantel of the English department, who has done much investigation concerning early Vermont composers of anthems, hymns, and "fuguing tunes", and whose play,
"Amanda", named after a hymn-tune by Justin Morgan, was given a semi-dramatic performance by the University Players in the spring of 1968.

In 1969 the Amanda Award was presented to Susan Abair; in 1970 it was presented to Robert Allen, and in 1971 to Steve Lano.

The competition is open to all students of the University, and the winner will be announced on Honors Day. If possible, the winning composition will be performed by one of the University musical organizations, or by one or more appropriate soloists. Manuscripts should be submitted to the department of music on or before March 24th. They should be signed with an assumed name, and be accompanied by a sealed envelope containing the real name, with the assumed name written on the outside.

Doctor Psychic Does It Again

by Rick Mitz

Friday night eight o'clock.
Hundreds of people slumped
into plastic bump-back chairs in a hotel ballroom. Stumpy stout and starched old ladies/men with pot bottoms and bellies with horoscopes hope/young men in short fur coats and long fur hair/ hurried husbands worried wives and purring babes/ wenchies wrenching down ice-cubed Scotchies/ bloodied Marys looking for answers/ waiting for words from Doctor Psychic.

Three-fifty admission. They paid the same price for 3 1/2 hours of Fiddler on the Roof for this fiddler on their roofs.
They wait in the palm of his hands; their past in his pockets; their present in his know-all mind; their presence in his presents to them—a little bit of prediction, a slice of truth, $3.50 kaptank in a Friday night waiting to be proven wronged.

Friday night—eight-twenty o'clock. Somebody's young blond boy walks out to announce to the crowd that Dr. Richard Huntington—star of hotel ballrooms, private consultations and black and white advertisements in the movie sections of both the Dailies—is—"gasp"—late/dead/ ill. The mind's multiple choice game is open for fate.

Instead—"Hello."
So this is Dr. H with his black-buttoned suit and Dick Cavett face, sparkly eyes on a small man with a small head.
How could it ever hold all that information? How could he ever tell us everything we always wanted to know about everything? And no one's afraid to ask.

An hour warm-up session complete with dream talk, ESP pointers and the audience sings and sways and whoops—they're his as he's about to be theirs. And during that hour: three magic mots that will put young Dr.
Huntington in a trance.
"Write me questions on paper cards about anything.
Sign your name. Tape my eyes so I can see the stars and blindsight them thrice and no smoking and put your hands on your laps facing up and..."

Tension headaches from all several hundred. The good doctor takes cards, deliberates just long enough, passes them over his Johnson & Johnsoned head like decks of cards being patted in the air.

"Mary Humph."
"Moak 'yes."
"You're pregnant."
"No...I'm not."
"Yes you are."
She crosses her legs. What she is there to say?
"Bill Bill..."
"Yeah."
"You have an injury...I know how you got it...in your upper back... see a new doctor..."
"How did he know?"
"Ruth...I see a murder of a woman...I see a bullet hole through her head..."

Palms up, tension incredible. No body moves, nobody breathes and, God forbid, nobody crosses their legs.
"I know who did it...see me tomorrow."
Kahuna time. "You're going to be involved in a rock festival in June or July, aren't you?"
No...no...yes... "It's going to be another Woodstock...but don't take the first two sites...I see nothing but legal problems
...but it will be successful...I put a Kahuna on you."
In unison: smile. Kahuna equals good luck. We should all have such good luck.
...a man rises upon hearing his name called.
"Yes?"
"I see an accident...an automobile accident...in a blue Volkswagen...tonight."
"I don't have a blue Volkswagen."
"I still see it..."

"My daughter's boy friend has a blue Volkswagen."
And everyone GASPS and GRUNTS and GOES WILD and boy ohh boy this guy can do no wrong and wow ohh wow we believe and sure hope he isn't cheating because we believe we believe because we want to believe we have to believe...
...and twenty-four hours later, little Dr. H. Huntington sits eating musk melon in his hotel room talking to the depressing press. "Where were you born
...how old are you...are you married...so you're single then ...how-do-you-do-it" when a how do you do would have been enough.

Thirty-year old Dr. H. smiles and tries to be friendly, but why don't they ask what he really wants them to ask (and so why doesn't he make them?) and why can't he answer what he really wants to answer?

"Three months out of the year I am Richard Huntington... three other months I am a Shakespearean actor named John T. Campbell, my real name...I paid money to get the
"Dr." so I wouldn't be driven out of every town... and counseling is my specialty...
I'm not a fraud (why do I have to keep proving, proving, proving) and I don't want to help people become responsible for their own lives
...to help them gain control, that's what's important to me.
I am a psychic, not a freak show..."

But he never gets a chance to say it.
"Dr. Huntington"...see reporter says... "Will you tell me everything about myself?"
"It takes an hour for me to get warmed up...I have to put all that tape on again...and when I take it off it hurts...I'm losing my eyebrows... but if you insist..."
"I'd really like that."
Dr. H. wouldn't really like that—oh, it's not that he can't do it, it's just that he can't do it... "Secretary Lisa pops in."
"Doctor, your seven o'clock appointment is here and waiting... He'll be right out."

The reporter from a large metropolitan daily goes away unsatisfied and ready to write up his psychic experiences in twelve minutes for all of the city to read and experience.

Outside in the nest room a family sits, clutching a cassette to memorialize the visit, (little boy on the floor watching TV and waiting for his twenty minutes of $25 truth. "Good luck," Dr. H. says to the reporters. The family's eyes gleam: Good luck—Kahuna?
—from Dr. H. How lucky you are. It's all too real.

And Dr. H. is real. He's real because he's real/ he's real because they make him real/he's real because it doesn't matter one bit whether he's real or not/ because he's plopped into these peoples' minds life-long lists of important—care about yourself, take control of your life, you are the most important person in the world,
I know.

Dr. Bill Huntington doesn't care if they think he's real. He only cares if they think they're real. Which is much harder on a Friday night eight o'clock for hundreds of people slumped
into plastic bump-back chairs
to believe.

traffic. The solution is less cars.
Why a $600,000 bandaid?
A petition was also available for the reinstatement of passenger train service in Vermont because trains have the air pollution as highway vehicles. A letter writing booth was set up for people to write letters to Vermont senators to ask for a ban on non-returnable soda and beer cans. Stamps, envelopes, pens and paper were all provided.

One of the games available to play was "Fish in Dirty was to see who could catch the biggest beer or soda can.

Door prizes were given out at the end of the fair. These included two gift certificates to Solanacher's and three memberships to Vermont
Tomorrow and ZPG.
Money for the fair came from dorm funds and the students' own funds. Any extra money they make from the games and the organic foods they sell will go to Vermont

students responsible for the

was to make people more and give them a chance to get interested in getting involved."

Editorial

From time to time questions are raised regarding the editorial policies of this newspaper. We feel that we owe students a brief statement regarding the nature and policies of Cynic editorials.

(1) They are opinions, preferably supported by facts, expressed by members of the Cynic editorial board on issues which they feel important. Guest editorials are allowed from time to time for important personages, whose opinions are fairly compatible with the Cynic's. We have discontinued the use of initials after editorials because we felt it looked rather pompous. The only time initials will appear again is when the writer is in sharp disagreement with all of the other editors. Otherwise, the opinion expressed in the editorial may be presumed to be held by all of the editors, and is the official stand of the paper.

(2) The Cynic has no political affiliations. We are the student newspaper and we try to stand at all times for the student interest on this campus. We do not favor any particular interest groups or organizations, whether they be clubs, action groups, social groups, or an official governing body.

If you have a grievance or disagree with our policies, we welcome Letters To The Editor, and try to print them as space permits—and this includes topics besides the status of freshmen men and women. This semester has seen a dramatic increase in letters. We hope it is an indication that more people are looking past the "Doctor's Bag."

A Young Man's Letter To Draft Board Number 13 and Friends

Dear Adeline and Friends,

This letter is to inform you of several facts which may alter my classification:

(1) Any person who alters, forges, knowingly destroys, knowingly mutilates or in any manner changes life for the purpose of "Living-On-The-Dying", is not being human (or perhaps is being tragically human and should be humane), and should be returned to humanity. The said person is characterized by an inability to respond to such human stimuli as love and life.

Will you understand human beings are never the "enemy" as they seem on color TV football games and presidential speeches and in the toy section of the department stores and not the "enemy" in the ugly movies and TV programs and obscene memories of war and books of war? People, killed, are non-returnable (if the slang of the market-place is the only language that reaches you), and people are non-toxic unless treated with hate. They are perishable! How have the men you drafted killed the "enemy" and been made dead? Has fire bubbled their skin and sucked life out of smoked lungs? Have their genitals been ripped away by fraying? Does red, useless blood in the last hours die at the base of their broken spines while low moans of screamed-out throats blow like dead sweeping desert winds up their stretched necks? Do they wonder at their own unfeeling arms, still grabbing at death, twenty feet away? From the air are they flung on a window sill? Do they die with a last long rush of blood to stop the pain, the life they cannot sense anymore? O, tell me how your "men" die! Like cattle! Like swine! Like chickens with their heads cut off! Exactly like soldiers die when they go off to kill. And they die without meaning. Not even the vultures who scavenge auto accidents pay them heed. They cannot even make the front page anymore, opened up finally in a self-expression of blood and bones and the organs silent dirge. How do young men die? Do you know?

(2) Too many died who could have lived. Soldiers are killed by soldiers and war, armies make soldiers and war. Armies kill. Selective Service Systems make armies. Selective Service Systems kill. Governments make Selective Service Systems. Citizens kill. People make citizens. People kill. Who is not guilty of killing fellow human beings and destroying property? All who die are too many, and all who live are guilty too. We should all stand trial, and perhaps we will. America, land of the greed, home of the grave. "Everybody must get stoned", blown with heroin, shown with acid, known with alcohol, home with depressants, groaned with sedatives, phoned with Dial-A-Prayer, moaned with barbiturates, loaned with Dale Carnegie, toned with Mantovani, owned with GMAC, colonized with Avon, zoned with Zip Code. Stoned-with-stones. Gravestoned.

War is the word of the state, the orphan in the state ward who's father is wanted, paid humbly (i.e., so humbly), a medal, the state ward where worn soldiers find wayward death, the warren who warns the prisoner of peace, the warrior ward of the world, weary of war, worried of worse. War is raw backwards into savage history. War is a malignant wart on our faces; war is the where we use to deny love; war is a warrant for the arrest of life; war is warping our feeling for living; war is, War, war, War! You people send people off to war, off to kill off every enemy you can imagine, to destroy trees and homes and animals and minds. You people send people to the army to waste years and money and people and to war. You people! War is death and destruction! War is where America is and what America is and what America gives away. You people, war is when humanity dies. War for what? War for why? You people, stop the war! Stop the murder! Stop recruiting sacrifices for your alteration! Stop the war!

(3) The amputees wheel around in wheel chairs, sometimes looking for feet where they are missing, sometimes feeling pain in legs that have long since evaporated. Before they change the tubes that run into the arms, up into the nose, or down draining the wound, the nurses check sometimes to see if the patient is still alive. Many patients tried to cure themselves, with private needles, and some die trying. They write letters, forget about sex or running, and lay in damp beds with bandages and pills and needles and X-rays and sometimes flowers and radios and no arms, or no fingers, or (check the appropriate space; example: (), hands (), fingers (), toes (), ears (), arms (), legs (), feet (), genitals (), eyes (), miscellaneous (). Do not begin until you hear the first scream, and stop when the elevator goes clear down to the morgue, filling in space.

(4) Adeline, Friends, please explain to me why I have a Selective Service System to write letters to and why I have to carry a card (am I carrying it now?), which has your autograph on it? What am I supposed to do with it? It is stupid. I know my name, first, middle initial, and last. So what is the function of this ugly card, this certificate of systematic murder and destruction, this license for licentious killing, this form to shape me, this membership card in a major league, this piece of paper negating peace, this card, the joker. Please explain. Explain how the S.S.S. means anything. Explain why, explain war. You people! You people explain to me why America, why any country or individual kills! Injuries! Destroy! Explain to me what death is worth the life it takes! You People, stop the war! I cry for you.

Love,
David L. Ingraham

Si Vous Parl

by Dan Hadam

It would be making an understatement to say that life in Slade Hall, the French-speaking dormitory, is dull. No one could say that there is intelligent life in the "Maison française", but it is certainly not dull. It's a dorm with a lot of character.

A typical evening with the French clique starts off in the Wright dining hall, where the gourmets congregate and enjoy the cuisine, spouting off deep French phrases like "Pardonnez-moi, s'il vous plaît." Properly at 5:25 a number of our residents will make the pilgrimage back to our "salon" to hold idol worship of the "Entreprise" and its crew on "Star Trek". The evening activities do not get off the ground until Leonard Nimoy has breathed his last for this evening's program. At around 6:30, the rest of Slade's routine unfolds. The resident bridge team convenes on all available tables to spend their evening triumphing and being dummies. (In the game only, of course) The evening will conclude quietly, in the typical French fashion and tradition. There's the twenty-one gun salute to Georges Pompidou (with real or fake guns), followed by three choruses of the French national anthem before we turn in.

In general, Slade Hall is similar to the other small dorms in facilities, however we differ in that we use IRA money on exotic wines like Students Busted —For Alcohol!

Chester town, Md. (CPS)—State and county police raided a small bar called the Plaza Lounge here late last week, rounding up 39 Washington College students and charging them with possession of alcohol by a minor of 21.

The loitering charges stemmed from a Kent County law prohibiting minors from entering any place where liquor is sold. Maryland's legal drinking age is a rapidly enforced 21.

The police raid, which has become a common practice in bars on Maryland's Eastern Shore, was reportedly planned three weeks in advance with the aid of an undercover agent working in the Lounge.

Most of the students arrested were members of either Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity or Alpha Chi Omega sorority. The Plaza Lounge was heavily attended by students on the night of the raid because the bar offers special prices for women on Thursday nights.

The Cynic And I

The Old Man's Maria

by Steven Rice

No one seemed to know where he was; his disappearance was a mystery. For two weeks, I had glanced at the newspaper's hospital admission notes, and sometimes, the obituaries, in ghouliah desperation...

St. Patrick's Day arrived. Appropriately, a pea-soup fog smothered the campus green. The morning rains had created miniature waterfalls; they danced merrily down the roadways and sidewalks.

Near Billings Center, several had joined together to form a lake. It was five feet in diameter, and several inches deep.

An old man, with a black umbrella, approached it with caution. Shrugging his shoulders, he decided to jump over it, but failed in his leap. Cursing, he wiped his pants legs; his umbrella then dropped into the mud.

Remembering my days as a Boy Scout and good deeds, I ran over, and picked up the umbrella. As I returned it, our faces met: It was the Cynic!

"Well, Sir, long time, no see..." I said. "Yes, that's true. Been a little under the weather."

"Oh, I'm sorry to hear that. What was the matter?"

"Well, dear boy, I did a plumb fool thing when I last saw you. I had dinner in one of your dining halls. I swear to God that meal was almost perfect, and even tasted alright...I'mph, I even went back for a second dish, partially because I wanted another look at the pretty dish who was serving it..." He winked.

To escape the rain, we decided to have a cup of coffee...

The Den, as always, was dotted with human figures: men and women in late teens and early twenties wearing yellow, grade-school raincoats...

The Cynic spotted a girl wearing a green carnation as she walked by. It was pinned on her orange coat. Her red hair was tied in a neat bun.

"Pretty, ain't she?" inquired the Old Man. "Yes...why, very..." I began to answer. Turning his head around to catch another glimpse of her, he remarked: "She reminds me of Maria."

He looked at me. He took a sip of his coffee as he leaned back in his chair. The Old Man began:

"One would think forty years is a long period of time, but, to me, those years went by too fast. You see, dear boy, that's how long I spent with my wife, Maria."

His voice lowered to a whisper. "She passed away at about this time this year..."

"I'm sorry to hear that," I offered weakly.

"You know, on every St. Patrick's Day, I would go out and buy her a green carnation from the neighborhood florist..."

"Well, when I bring the flower home to Maria, she'd be all prettied: Her red hair tied into a bun, usually with a yellow ribbon...some kind of oil on her face to make it rosy-like, and of course, just a touch of perfume that smelled right dandy..."

He smiled. "When I give her the carnation, she put her arms around me, kiss me like she did on our wedding night, and say to me, 'Why Joe, you're never to grow old...' Then, she kiss me again..."

The Old Man's eyes danced. At times, he would pause, look down at the table-top, as though he could see Maria's arms reaching for him.

"Well, after a grand St. Patrick's Day meal, we would sit by the fire-place with the flames crackling, and reminiscence of the first days we were together. We remembered those quiet walks on our special mountain when the trees were giving birth to spring leaves...our little adventure in a cave we discovered: Our candles had gone out, and seeing as how I forgot the matches, we had to feel our way out...and of course, we remembered the time I proposed marriage to her: It was under an apple tree with golden, October leaves, with the pink-suff-caroling the lake..."

For quite some time, the Old Man told me about Maria. When he finished, his usual sombered face relaxed with a smile. He wiped away a tear in his eye.

As we were readying to leave, the young girl we had noticed earlier, neared us again. She was smiling, and the Old Man wished her a happy St. Patrick's Day.

Surprised and delighted, she leaned over, and kissed him on the cheek...

'Destitute UVM, Here's My Annual Contribution'

Dear Cynic, I don't really expect you to publish this letter. I couldn't get you to publish my when I was paying you an obligatory subsidy of $25 per year, so I don't have much of a chance now. (As a matter of fact, I'm not even sure the CYNIC exists anymore; it seemed to be in its death throes a year ago and things at UVM have a way of going from bad to worse.) Anyway, this morning I received a letter from the University of Vermont Alumni Fund Office requesting a financial donation to help relieve the University's financial plight. I would like to make my reply a matter of public record.

Dear Destitute U.V.M.,

How thoughtful of you to think of me in your hour of need. And I thought you didn't care. I realize that things are becoming increasingly difficult for you in these times of recession. Where will it all end? I can see it now—a vision of Armageddon: Professors tearing up wall-to-wall carpeting for fuel; men coming to campus—the air conditioners—the multi-million dollar symposium lying in rubble—the locks have all left because you can no longer afford to subsidize them. What self-respecting university can expect to survive without the necessities—football players, carpenter, air conditioners, I.B.M. machines...? And in this dismal future, I foresee that if you build sidewalks or even a new ramp for Wasson Infirmary, you will only be able to afford to build them once. No second chances—what deprivation! The vision fades. I bleed for you.

Now you would like me to give you a financial contribution in some way from this fate. Is this, I wonder, in addition to the $12000 I shall owe the University from here till eternity? Unfortunately, I have been in something of a financial slump myself—for the last twenty-three years. I did pretty well last year—I made $446.61—as a busboy. Even so, I had to trade in my Rolls for a Cadillac. We all must make sacrifices in these difficult times. But not you, dear University. I would no more ask you to economize than I would ask Ronald Reagan to pay income taxes. No more than I would ask Richard Nixon to halt the space program.

the A.B.M. or the war. I would rather stare first—that's the American way. Anyway, although I can't help you financially, I am certainly not going to forget you in your hour of want. No sir, not after all you've done for me. Thus, I have composed a list of suggestions which I'm sure you'll find invaluable for raising revenue:

1) You have an unrealized asset in Michael Parenti. Many people, it seems, would gladly pay to be rid of him. Therefore, why not stage a lynching? $5 (or whatever) a head to see Commrade Parenti get what he so justly deserves.

2) Having thus disposed John Beckley, you get him to sign over the royalties on "Goodness-Aime-Master How You've Changed." If the 19th Century ever comes back you'll make a fortune.

3) You have not yet begun to explore the possibilities for levying fees upon students. The last I knew you didn't charge them a penny for the ground they walk on or the air they breathe. Surely you're not going to let them get away with that.

as smart as you seem to think, you'll be able to come up with some other ingenious ideas for supplementing your income. I have faith in your ability; you will never let glorious ticky-tacky mediocrity perish.

In closing let me say that I hope my suggestions will be as helpful to you as my "education" has been to me. I hope I have repaid, in measure, your affable consideration of me over the years. And I hope that in the future you will not feel called upon to ask me any favors.

Obligingly yours,
Donald Foster

NEWARK, N.J.—Being a presidential election year, 1972 will be "open season" on politicians for America's newspaper editorial cartoonists, but it may also be a field day for campus cartoonists.

The Higgins Ink Company, a division of A.W. Faber-Castell Pen Co., Inc., one of the world's largest manufacturers of art materials, today announced that it will award prizes with a total value of more than $1,000 to "the best student editorial cartoonists of 1972." According to Jack Doyle, director of marketing, it is hoped that the contest will encourage more young people towards political cartooning.

Does Vermont Need More Liberal Abortion Laws?

the doctor's bag

by Arnold Werner M.D.

Address letters to Dr. Arnold Werner
Box 974, East Lanning, ME 48623

QUESTION: Whenever I leave a building and walk into the bright sun, I invariably sneeze, often repeatedly. After this initial outburst I can remain outside for as long as I like with no further difficulty.

This never happens on overcast days. It does not seem to be seasonally dependent, nor does it depend on where I am. Someone once told me that I must be allergic to sunlight, but if I am, I think that I would get other reactions besides just sneezing.

This is certainly not a life or death situation; in fact, the only disturbing thing about it is that I don't know of anyone else with the same condition.

ANSWER: My initial efforts to come with an explanation for what you describe were to no avail, until I consulted with a very helpful allergist. He told me that he has seen a number of situations similar to yours; but, there is little or nothing written about it. An attempted explanation follows:

Sneezing is triggered by an irritation of the mucous membranes lining the nose. Such an irritation may be due to the presence of a physical irritant such as dust, or may result from swelling and inflammation of the membranes as occurs with an allergy or a cold. The lining of the nose is very sensitive, and emotional stress or a variety of other circumstances can produce subtle changes which result in sensory phenomena that trigger a sneeze. Some people, for instance, report sneezing when they are nervous. Nonspecific inflammation of the lining of the nose during pregnancy can also produce periods of frequent sneezing. My consultant tells me that some people who feel an impending sneeze can trigger it by looking at a bright light. People who sneeze in sunlight tend to have other allergies or to have very sensitive linings in their nose which react to a whole variety of nonspecific stimuli.

Wearing dark glasses will probably abort the sneezing. If it is really an annoyance, an interesting test would be to have a physician prescribe antihistamines (which are used to treat allergies) to see if that doesn't relieve the symptoms. Of course, taking medication regularly for such a minor inconvenience would be ill advised.

QUESTION: This past weekend was the first night that my girlfriend and I had sexual relations and spent the whole night together. The following night my roommate woke me up and said I was trying to rape him in my sleep. Naturally, he pushed me out of his bed. Later in the night, it happened again. I have taken precautions to prevent a recurrence. My question is: How could I do such a thing in my sleep? Does it indicate a psychological disorder on my part, or is it a preoccupation with sex expected from "rookies?"

ANSWER: You never indicated whether you were actually in his bed when he woke you up which makes me think that something else is going on. Some readers of this column are convinced that a number of the letters I receive are put-ons. In this particular case, I have a strong suspicion that your roommate is putting you on. Though people may deepwalk during times of stress or when they are leading particularly overactive lives, I know of no information indicating that this is a more common activity following sexual intercourse. "Rookies" may do however, tell roommates about their activities. You may have set up a situation from your friend to reward you for your generosity.

QUESTION: Do cockroaches carry disease, and if so, do you have any suggestions for protecting oneself against them? After repeated attempts at trying to eradicate these insects from my room, I am still not successful. I understand that many other residents of my dorm also have the same problem.

ANSWER: Cockroaches are generally associated with poor sanitation and accumulate where garbage and other food debris is found. Dormitories are popular feeding grounds for insects like cockroaches since many of the inhabitants of dormitories leave odd bits and pieces of food in their rooms. Discarded food near dispensing machines is another source of nutrients for the roach. Dirty pots and pans hidden under beds seem to be especially fertile breeding grounds for roaches. Unlike some other insects who can only feed on liquids because they have sucking mouths, roaches are omnivorous and are equipped with jaws with hard parts so they can chop through a variety of food stuffs.

The roach is basically a nocturnal creature and can be seen to scamper wildly when you turn on a room light and catch them unawares. The adult size varies from about a half an inch to about two inches depending on the species. The adult male and the female deposits the fertilized eggs in a nice, warm, dark nook or cranny, under a piece of furniture, in a drawer or other convenient place. In a few days to a few weeks, depending on temperature and some other conditions, the eggs hatch and in a little while there is a new supply of roaches.

Getting rid of roaches is relatively easy. The first task is to get rid of all food debris. While you can do this rather easily in your room, unless the entire floor or the entire dorm makes a concerted effort to get rid of food debris, the roaches will continue to wander in and out of everyone's rooms. In dorms where there are no ducts leading from room to room, you stand a pretty good chance of keeping them out of your room by using special insecticides placed on the door sill and other likely places to prevent them from sneaking in. A product called Johnston's "No Roach" works well.

Since cockroaches wander indiscriminately, they can physically transfer harmful bacteria from one place to another just as other insects can, including houseflies. The chance of transmitting serious disease in the dormitory setting is not very great, but it is certainly possible. The greater the number of roaches, the greater the possibility for disease transmission. The roaches themselves are not infected with diseases transmissible to man.

Sex Bias At Universities

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (CPS)—Members of the National Organization for Women (NOW) unanimously passed a resolution last Sunday, March 5, demanding that the federal government fully report details of certain sex discrimination cases.

The resolution, formulated at a workshop during NOW's regional conference in Minneapolis, is intended to force the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) to disclose publicly its investigations into sex discrimination at universities and colleges.

The resolution demands that the HEW office for Region Five, which is composed of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois and Indiana, report: "The names of colleges or universities that have complaints filed against them, that have had compliance reviews, that have filed affirmative action programs for women or that have had federal contracts withheld or suspended. The dates of complaints, visits by federal compliance officers, completion of the investigation, submission of the report to HEW in Washington, HEW approval, acceptance or refusal and the dates and amounts of federal money withheld because of discrimination. The names of all individual women complainants."

"We've got to put pressure on the government not business, industries or universities," Mary Lynn Myer, "chairperson" of the workshop which wrote the resolution said.

Myer, national compliance coordinator of NOW, said the threat of withdrawal of federal grants-in-aid for university building and funding is virtually the only way to force universities to comply with federal discrimination laws. Many other federal grants cannot be withdrawn, although the institution may be discriminatory, she added.

'One Who Destroys The Work Of God Is Called A Sportsman'

by Jeri Covey
Mark Van Doren, noted poet and author, was sponsored by the SA Speakers Bureau to speak at UVM last week. Mr. Van Doren, whose first book, on Henry David Thoreau, was published at the age of twenty-two, has written numerous books, essays, plays, poems, and an autobiography. He is now a professor at Columbia University.

The small, white-haired man seemed dwarfed by the echo of his words as he lectured under the dome of Ira Allen Chapel. The theme of his lecture was Animals and Stars, in which he read some of his poems on these subjects and talked about them.

He considers these two subjects similar; they are two forms that exist in the universe for "man to be aware of," and that God seems to love them more than he loves us. He wishes that God would protect them from extinction. Animals have an instinct to live, whereas it seems that man only has instincts "to kill and die."

According to legends the stars in their constellations are animals. "Ancient man showed his respect for animals by placing them in the skies." The first poem that Professor Van Doren read was entitled "Animal Worship." It is about a time when man worshipped animals. Now, many people are indifferent to animals, they "are astonished that I am interested in them."

Mr. Van Doren says that the "truly mysterious thing about animals is that their bodies and souls are exactly the same thing." Animals are graceful from birth, man has to learn to be graceful. In another aspect animals are like angels, and don't have to think; man is "miserably in between."

In another of his poems, "And Did The Animals," Mr. Van Doren explored the situation of the animals in Noah's Ark. The problem was that you could not reassure the animals as to what was going on.

Many of his poems were also about birds, because he is very devoted to and interested in birds. One of his poems, "Birds In The Morning" relates the experience of listening to the birds waking in the morning and starting to sing, at first slowly and sleepily, later more fully.

In regard to hunters, he tries to understand them, but he asks why if hunters know and respect their animals do they kill them? "One who destroys the work of man is called a vandal, one who destroys the work of God is called a sportsman."

Saturday, the 18th, Robinson Hall sponsored an Environmental Fair in the lounge at WDW. Scheduled to run from 4 to 10 p.m. the Fair included exhibits, speeches and films by groups such as ZPG, OVP, Vermont Tomorrow and the Vermont Natural Resources Council. Residents of Robinson displayed home crafts and sold organically-grown foods and natural products. There were projects dealing with Red Rocks Park, Mt. Independence, and the proposed Spear St.-East Ave. intersection.

Student's Appraisal Of The Board Of Trustees

by Brooks McCabe

It is an undeniable fact that UVM's Board of Trustees has given the University many headaches. These headaches are the direct result of the structure of the Board. This same structure is the basis for the Board of Trustees of the proposed Vermont System. The Higher Education. The Vermont System is thus guaranteed built-in headaches. Before examining these questionable features of the Board, it is noteworthy that the proposal was written entirely by present trustees, with the help of attorney Jonathan Brownell.

The first questionable feature of UVM's Board of Trustees is its political nature. Nine members are chosen by the State Legislature. Three are appointed by the Governor. Nine are chosen by the Alumni Trustees. Therefore, twelve of the twenty-one trustees, or 57%, are appointed by the State Government. Because the majority of the trustees are State appointees, and because the trustees control UVM's budget, the State controls the University's budget. State control is out of proportion to the State support. Vermont currently provides about one quarter of the University's budget.

The proposed Vermont System's Board consists of six trustees appointed by the State Legislature, nine appointed by the Governor, and six appointed by the newly composed Board of Trustees. This process of trustee appointment puts the Vermont System even more under the control of the State politicians. This disproportionate legislative influence also poses another problem for the Board. Because many of these trustees are legislators, they are elected officials. As such, they will be most sympathetic to their constituents' interests, not the University's. If UVM considers funding minority students and the folks at home are opposed, where does the trustee stand? UVM suffers greatly from this conflict of interest. Perhaps the only way to avoid such a conflict is to not allow public office holders a chair on the board. The legislative Board members are not the only ones with potential conflicts of interest. Several other trustees head firms that do a large volume of business with the University. Thus, their vote on University matters could conceivably be based on their business interests.

UVM has suffered from the lack of a racially balanced population. This deficiency exists because there are no funds for minority recruitment. The Board of Trustees is directly responsible for the lack of funds. What can one expect from a group of successful businessmen and politicians? The average Board member is 56 years old. He might be a Vice-President of General Motors, a Director of the Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corporation or of the Vermont Petroleum Association, or a member of the Elks Club. The trustees are continually stating that their job is to represent the people of Vermont. If this is so, then why does the make-up of the Board not reflect it? "Since the board of trustees represents the public interest, it seems best to provide that lay members shall be in the majority." Lay members can bring a fresh perspective to education, particularly if their backgrounds are varied. Do men in finance, business administration and law represent the average Vermonters? There are no moderate or low income trustees because to be a trustee involves a considerable personal expense. He must pay for his own transportation, room, and board when he attends bimonthly meetings. Because the proposal for the Vermont System does not contain an expense account for its trustees, the Vermont System is assured of having only successful businessmen and politicians as trustees. This criteria effectively screen out most young people, women, and minorities, including French Canadians. Where the control of a System of Education is at stake, why is there no provision that the trustees be qualified educators? UVM was thrown into turmoil over Parents because an academic decision was made by politicians and businessmen, and not by academicians. Furthermore, the Board made the decision not on the basis of the academic evidence presented to them, but on information not directly related to the issue at hand.

This illustrates the Board's lack of understanding of academic freedom.

UVM students are not alone in their criticism of the University's Board of Trustees. On the subject of UVM's trustees, Dr. Warren G. Bennis once commented that the Board, as currently structured, is headed for a "train-wreck." Dr. Bennis received his Ph.D. in Social Sciences and Economics from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and is an internationally recognized scholar of organizational behavior. He is currently the president of the University of Cincinnati.

How has such a doomed structure managed to persist, and why is the Vermont System being placed on the same track only to head in the same direction? Thorstein Veblen, a noted economist, pondered this question in 1918:

So far as regards its pecuniary affairs and their due administration, the typical modern university is in a position without loss or detriment, to dispense with the services of any board of trustees, regents, curators or whatnot. Except for the insuperable difficulty of getting a hearing for such a proposal, it should be no difficult matter to show that those governing boards of businessmen commonly are quite useless to the university for any businesslike purpose. Indeed, except for a stubborn prejudice to the contrary, the fact should readily be seen that the boards are of no material use in any connection; their sole effective function being to interfere with the academic management in matters that are not of the nature of business, and that lie outside their competence and outside the range of their habitual interest. The Board of Trustees, as now constructed, has the competence to handle only business and political affairs. It is entirely unqualified to determine academic policies, a role which it assumes when it holds its yearly vote on staff appointment and tenure.

Can Students Learn Without Grades?

Iowa City, Ia. (I.P.)—Students at the University of Iowa say they take courses on a Pass-Fail (P-F) basis to ease their anxiety about grade or course difficulty and to conserve their energy for other courses and interests, according to a research report recently released here.

The report was written to provide factual information for the liberal arts educational policy committee, and it is not an evaluation study of the merits or demerits of P-F, according to Douglas R. Whitney, examination service bureau director.

Less than one-third of the students polled said they took courses P-F so they could explore areas outside their majors. Only five per cent identified personal interest in a subject as the most important reason for choosing the P-F option, the report of the Evaluation and Examination Services concludes.

The report consists of six parts: (1) background information, (2) policies regulating P-F at the U of I, (3) who took courses P-F between 1968-70, (4) who took courses P-F in 1970-71, (5) reasons for choosing the P-F option and (6) a comparison of P-F grades with regular grades in the same courses.

Students here choose relieving anxiety and conserving energy by a wide margin over the other two most common positive reasons for choosing a P-F system of grading. The other two, exploring areas of knowledge of personal interest and studying for knowledge not grades, were both far down the line of preference, according to the poll.

The negative arguments for adopting a P-F system, namely that traditional grading is inaccurate, unstable, subject to sex bias, encourages conformity and is destructive of creativity, were not part of the present study.

Among the other results of the study are:

The use of the P-F option at the U of I is increasing, from six per cent in the Fall of 1968 to 13 per cent during the Spring, 1971. However, policy changes and special circumstances at the University accounted for some of the increase. On the whole, better students take courses P-F more often than do poor students. Students with a grade point average (GPA) above 3.0 (a B or better) take twice as many courses P-F as do students between GPA 2.0 and 2.5.

About 70 per cent of the currently enrolled upperclassmen have taken at least one course P-F. Most students who take courses P-F take more than one.

Students enrolled in courses on a P-F basis during the 1970-71 school year earned grade averages slightly lower than those enrolled for credit in the same classes.

The proportion of lower-level courses taken P-F is more than twice that of upper level courses.

Whitney and James T. Stewart, a research assistant in the service bureau, gathered the information and wrote the report.

In the appendix, an evaluative study of a controlled P-F experiment at a New York state college is described. The study, called the Gold report, indicates clearly that "fear of a massive switch to P-F by students is unwarranted."

"Students have learned to work for grades and appear to learn a little in the process," the Gold study continues. "It is doubtful whether many (students) have discovered how to learn without grades."

In another of his poems, "And Did, The Animals", Mr. Van Doren explored the situation of the animals in Noah's Ark. The problem was that you could not reassure the animals as to what was going on.

Many of his poems were also about birds, because he is very devoted to and interested in birds. One of his poems, "Birds In The Morning", relates the experience of listening to the birds waking in the morning and starting to sing, at first slowly and sleepily, later more fully.

In regard to hunters, he tries to understand them, but he asks why if hunters know and respect their animals do they kill them? "One who destroys the work of man is called a vandal, one who destroys the work of God is called a sportsman."

Concerned Groups Sponsor Successful Fair

by Kelli Wheeler and Wendy Nelson

Saturday, the 18th, Robinson Hall sponsored an Environmental Fair in the lounge at WDW. Scheduled to run from 4 to 10 p.m. the Fair included exhibits, speeches and films by groups such as ZPG, OVP, Vermont Tomorrow and the Vermont Natural Resources Council. Residents of Robinson displayed home crafts and sold organically-grown foods and natural products. There were projects dealing with Red Rocks Park, Mt. Independence, and the proposed Spear St.-East Ave. intersection.

The scheduled events opened with a film and talk by ZPG. This group is working to stabilize world-wide population, especially in the U.S. Because one American consumes the same amount of produce as 35 Indians, ZPG believes we should work 35 times as hard as India in a population control program.

Robert Babcock of Vermont Tomorrow next spoke on the importance of action now more than ever before. A man of action, Mr. Babcock resigned from the Environmental Control Commission to form Vermont Tomorrow when he became dissatisfied with the commission's progress.

Vermont Tomorrow is a full-time lobby group in Montpelier. Mr. Babcock stressed that because they now have the vote, 18 yr. olds have no excuse for political inaction. He said Vermont residents are responsible for environmental legislation, and that it is no longer sufficient just to educate people, but we must act now to save the Environment.

OVP's film "Do Nothing With Someone" traced the life of a college student from the time he decided to volunteer for OVP. It explored some of his experiences in becoming a Big Brother. Although the theme of the fifteen minute film was the Big Brother Program, the Office of Volunteer Programs does have equally challenging and important fields and welcomes all interested persons. Their only requirements are for you to care and have a little time.

"So Goes Vermont" was the film shown by Vermont Natural Resources Council to show what can happen if Vermonters let developers in without controls. Pictures and comments dealing with the Wilmington-Dover area in southern Vermont were interspersed with shots taken at the auction of a farm. The people involved in the auction voiced their hopelessness of the situation. They have seen the lands around them sold to out-of-state and developers, knowing there is nothing they can do to stop it. The presentation also dealt with the Quechee Lakes Project, an area which is primarily intended for recreational use; condominiums and second homes, lakes and a country club being the main attractions.

After a short break, Bob Glean and Bruce Talbot showed a sizable audience slides they had taken on a cross-country bicycle tour last summer. Some of the problems they experienced were flies, pecking woodpeckers and the hills in New England. They enjoyed the people, the scenery, and the Dairy Queen.

Because the film and talk took longer than was expected, the drawing for door prizes took place before "The Time of Man" was shown. Prizes were a membership to National ZPG, which went to Lin Obasiewicz, two memberships to Vermont Tomorrow for Steve Worthen and Nick Colangelo and two three dollar gift certificates from Solancho Natural Foods to Randy Pratt and Brenda Snow.

The Museum of Natural History's film "The Time of Man" was extremely interesting. One of the main points brought out by the film was that animals and non-civilized man depend wholly on their environment for sustenance and take from it without affecting it. Civilized man does not depend on the variations of his environment nearly so much, yet does affect it deeply through his technology. The movie made no attempt to rationalize this behavior; it just presented a fact. It did stress the necessity of limiting family size and of educating people to think in terms of "not man alone."

On the whole, the fair met with considerable success. Approximately 500 people came, 50 letters were written to Montpelier in support of the bill to ban non-returnable bottles, and numerous petitions were signed opposing the proposed Spear St.-East Ave. intersection.

Robinson Hall still has applications for people who would like to live there next year. Pick them up anytime and return them by April 5.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Film Review:

'Cabaret' Fine Drama

Sally Bowles
Brian Roberts
Max
Natalie Fritz
M.C.

Directed by Bob Fosse, screenplay by Jay Allen, Hugh Wheeler, photography Geoffrey Unsworth. Produced by ABC pictures. Running time 123 minutes, Rated PG.

Cabaret is an unusually fine mixture of music and drama that causes the film not to be a musical in the traditional sense of the word. It is a musical in the sense that the integration of these two types of entertainment is carried out with such mastery that the film never becomes tedious, as do some musicals which bore you to death between musical numbers. Busby Berkeley may not have done this way, but his is not the only type of musical.

The film is about the lead singer at the Kit Kat Club, Sally Bowles. The club is located in Berlin, Germany in the early thirties. It is a place where you leave all the troubles of the outside world and have fun; at least, that's the line the M.C. gives to each new audience. In fact, the club is a microcosm of German society at this time. The major events that are shaping Germany either effect the composition of the audience or are parodied on the stage by the entertainers. The life of Sally inside and outside the club is examined throughout the film.

A major point presented by the film is that things are not what they seem. Sally pretends to be a femme fatale but most of this is an act, as anyone who knows her soon finds out. The band and chorus line are not what they appear to be, in fact, at times they are kind of a drag. The band is reminiscent of the Lemmon-Curtis hit in Some Like It Hot and the chorines, while queens of the stage, are not exactly the Rockettes. Also in the film are young boys dressed like boy scouts who pass out leaflets, sing nationalistic songs, and wear Nazi armbands. Even the popular playboy Fritz finally reveals himself when he admits he is Jewish out of his love for Natalie. The film blends the happy atmosphere of cabaret life with the storm clouds of Nazism until Nazi, who were thrown out of the club at the beginning of the film, have now become a large part of the audience as the final scene fades to a close.

The film shines, of course, when musical numbers are presented. The best of these are done by Liza Minnelli, who can really belt out a song. In fact, one flaw in the film is that it is hard to understand why so good an entertainer is stuck working in a dive. Minnelli is almost too good for the part. The films best numbers are the versions of the title song done in German by Joel Grey (who, in repeating the role he played on the stage, is just great) and in English at the end of the film by Minnelli. Also good is a number done by them together about how "Money makes the world go round." (A reference to Jewish bankers.) By far the worst moments in the film come during a number, which is as subtle as a John Simon film review, in which Joel Grey explains his love for a guy in an apartment house, saying "If you could only see her through my eyes, you wouldn't notice she's Jewish."

The production values are excellent. If the plot isn't cutting during the musical numbers is well done so that just as you get used to a particular camera angle, the angle changes, sometimes with amusing results. Too, many filmmakers simply let the entertainers perform in front of a basically fixed camera. There are several good transitional sequences, notably the opening one in which you are kept guessing about the scene of the action, and the whole film shows quality workmanship. Even Michael York managed a good performance, after his disaster in Zeppelin.

It is hard not to compare this movie with another on the same subject, The Blue Angel. In fact, one scene in which Joel Grey crows like a rooster is taken from it. Both effectively capture the feel in Germany in the early thirties. Great attention to detail was the order of the day in Cabaret, to make it as authentic as possible; it was even entirely filmed in Germany.

One final note before you put this review down, get a date, and go see the movie. There is a wild rumor going around that the rating on this film, PG, stands for Parental Guidance. This film may contain material not suitable for pre-teens. Don't believe it. PG stands for Positively Gay.

Scottish And Irish Concert Presented By Lane Series

The Celtic heritage of Scotland and Ireland will be re-lived in song and dance Thursday (March 23) when the Clann Gael, a company of 20 singers, dancers, and musicians perform for the University of Vermont Lane Extension Series in Springfield.

The third concert of the 1971-72 Lane Series at Springfield High School, the Clann Gael will appear under the auspices of the Series, and of the Southeast Council on the Arts - the Springfield Rotary and the Vermont Symphony Orchestra Association.

The 8:30 p.m. concert will present music "that ranges from the melancholy to the joyous, from the mischievous to the sentimental."

The program is drawn from both the popular and classical traditions of Ireland and Scotland, from the ballads and reels, jigs and laments that are the very essence of "these green and crazy lands."

The voices, flutes, bagpipes, fiddles, and other instruments are authentically Gaelic, from the Irish harp to the bagpipes and plaid kilts of the Scottish Highlands, and the drummers and dancers of their common heritage.

The Clann is headed by pianist Eily O'Grady, also musical director and producer, a well-known performer in the British Isles; and by Frank Patterson, a Tipperary native with a voice that a Washington Star reviewer called "like sterling silver."

The program, an appropriate sequel to Friday's St. Patrick's Day, will open with "Scotland the Brave" by the bagpipes and drums, followed by a series of Scottish songs and dances.

The Irish program follows, opening with "The Kerry Dances" by the singers, and including many songs in Gaelic and English.

The concert will include songs based on the poetry of Tom Moore and Robert Burns, and songs about Bonnie Prince Charlie and the Golden Years of Percy French.

Now on their second tour of Canada and the U.S., Clann Gael won cheers from audiences of North America in 1969. A Daily Oklahoman reviewer wrote "The Clann Gael is a group of talented youngsters - young enough to love what they are doing and fresh enough in show business to not be blasé."

Admissions, $3.50 for adults and $2 for students, are available from the Village Music Studio in the Shopping Plaza; the Chamber of Commerce at 2 Valley St.; and Town Cut Rate at 52 Main St., all in Springfield, and by mail from Eliot K. Buckingham, P.O. Box 111, Springfield, and at the door on the evening of the concert.

For information telephone Buckingham at 855-2767.

The UVM Lane Extension Series concerts are supported by a Lane Series subsidy and gifts by local individuals and organizations. Co-chairman of the Southeast Council on the Arts are Mr. and Mrs. Eliot K. Buckingham.

The final Lane Extension Series concert of the current season will be by the Vermont Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Alan Carter, on April 8.

National English Journal Sponsored Here

For the first time in its history, the University of Vermont's College of Arts and Sciences will sponsor the publication of a nationally and internationally known scholarly magazine, it has been announced by Dr. John G. Weiger dean of the college.

The magazine, "Exchange: A Journal for English Teachers in High School and College," will emanate from the department of English, and will have as its co-editors Paul A. Echholz and Alfred F. Rosa. Arthur W. Biddle will serve as managing editor. All are assistant professors of English.

In a sense the magazine will be returning to its home state, since it was begun in 1953 at Bennington College by Professor Thomas W. Wilcox. The publication moved to the University of Connecticut when Professor Wilcox transferred to that campus, and its editorial office even followed him to Alaska during two years that he spent in that state.

Recently the University of Connecticut decided to withdraw its support of the journal, and Echholz and Rosa negotiated to acquire the magazine for UVM and to make it self-supporting by offering it on a subscription basis at one dollar the copy. The magazine, which currently has a circulation of over nine thousand readers, is issued twice a year, carrying to English teachers everywhere practical suggestions from other teachers on devices that have "worked" in the classroom to smooth the way for students struggling with the mysteries of language and literature.

The editors hope to bring out their first issue in mid-winter of 1972-73. Since they must have a minimum of 2500 subscriptions to sustain the magazine without cost to the University, they are already planning a publicity campaign to bring the journal to the attention of all former and prospective readers. At present subscriptions to the "Exchange" come from as far away as South Africa; from many parts of the United States, and from such other countries as England, Scotland, and France.

The magazine, which was inaugurated "to encourage teachers of language and literature in secondary schools and in colleges to communicate their ideas and to swap examples of their teaching methods," offers short practical articles of interest to teachers of linguistics and mythology as well as to those in the more common fields of language and literature. All teachers in these fields are invited to submit manuscripts.

Editorial supervision of the "Exchange" will be exercised by Professor Biddle, while Professors Echholz and Rosa will manage business details.

Echholz and Rosa, with Prof. Virginia Clark, also of the English department, are editors of a forthcoming book, "Language: Introductory Readings," which St. Martin's Press will publish March 15.

enemies that we are ready for any attack and that we uphold our commitments.

The general is against any drastic reduction of the military budget. Withdrawing from Vietnam will not solve all our security problems. The forces of the Soviet Union are still above necessary defense levels, while our forces in Europe are at the minimum level.

Outlining the accomplishments of NATO since it was instituted twenty-three years ago, he called it a "successful means of halting communist aggression without resulting in war." Even though there have been fifty-one wars throughout the world in the last twenty-three years, not one of them has been in the NATO area.

In response to a question about an all volunteer army, the general said that this is a misnomer and said that it should be referred to as an all "volunteer armed forces." We need two and one half million men to maintain our armed forces, and we require highly skilled personnel in these positions. He went on to say that he would like to see a zero draft, but we need to maintain the draft mechanism in case of a crisis. Lemnitzer doesn't like the implication that a rise in pay will meet personnel needs, you "can't buy patriotism, courage, or duty to one's country. It is one's duty" to serve your country.

U.V.M. SPORTS

Women Swimmers Set New Records

by Gretchen Vonberg
The University of Vermont women's swimming team finished up the season last week with the Eastern Regional Championships. Out of the 29 schools competing, UVM placed 12th, reaching the championship finals in four events. Considering that only six UVM swimmers qualified for the meet, this was a surprisingly good showing.

The 2000-yard freestyle relay, consisting of Suzy Walsh, Carolyn Worcester, Gretchen Vonberg and Cindy Matheson, placed fifth in the consolation finals and eleventh overall. Their winning time was a new UVM record—1:54.29; another record and established approximately five seconds off the entry time!

Patty Spencer finished 10th in the diving event, defeating 17 other eastern divers. She did ten dives off the one meter board, totaling 268.20 points.

Cindy Matheson also did well in placing 6th in the consolation finals and 12th overall in the 100-yard backstroke. She set a new UVM record of 1:10.48.

The last event placing in the finals was the 200 yard medley relay. Cindy Matheson, Suzy Walsh, Gretchen Vonberg and Carolyn Worcester did a fine job, coming in 2nd in the consolation finals and 8th overall. Again the team broke their winning time was a new UVM record—2:06.81!

Other events entered included: Sue Silva in the 50-yard breaststroke who placed 16th; Suzy Walsh who finished 22nd in the 50 yard butterfly; Gretchen Vonberg finished 28th in the 50 yard butterfly, while Sue Silva placed 16th and 17th in the 100-yard breaststroke and 100-yard medley respectively. Cindy Matheson posted a 16th place finish in the 50-yard backstroke and Suzy Walsh placed 18th in the 100-yard butterfly.

Since the beginning of the season in October, the women's swimming team has had an undefeated team in dual meet competition. They defeated Plattsburg, Green Mountain, Middlebury, Stidmore and UMass. They also finished a close 5th behind Radcliffe in the New England.

Congratulations to the Women's Swim Team for a fine season!

Now That It's All Over Hockey In Retrospect

by Dave Clark
The hockey season has ended as you all well know. I have regrets as to the way it ended but I am certainly not unhappy with the season itself.

To begin with the Cats have lost the services of four very good hockey players through graduation. Ted Yeates, Bob Hodde, Ned Grant and Sam Simmons will never play for the University of Vermont hockey team again. That statement bears a sort of finality which brings on a great deal of sadness to this reporter and to many other people I am sure. The degree of sadness is intensified because of the quality of hockey which this four men played.

The season has been a long one starting back on November 6 (November?) and ending on March 8th at 10:27 P.M. (there is one for the trivia buffs) The first game was a laugher by most standards but gave the Vermont fans a chance to see the talents of the freshman and sophomores which became a very integral and essential part of the team. The talents of this group are easily proved by the performances of Ted Castle, Chris Hurley, Chris Miller, Roger Mallette and John Murphy to mention just a few.

Since everyone else claims to be a hockey expert, then it is only right that I have my chance to make some statements about the players and the past season. I wish to make three awards to players for excellence in play. The Most Valuable Player award goes to Ted Yeates. My definition of a most valuable player award is that the person named isn't valuable but rather invaluable to the team. The team could not function well without this individual. On this basis I name Ted. Ted Yeates played well in every game this year and was the main reason the Cats not only won but won convincingly the games that they did. Ted was the singular strongest and supporting force of the Vermont defense.

Teddy Yeates became the all-time leading scorer for defensemen in the history of Vermont Hockey. Ted was the fourth leading scorer on the team. He proved that he is of that new breed of rushing defensemen. He blocked many shots and his quickness was the only reason that many opponents rushes didn't turn into goals.

Ashford To Be Captain

Junior forward Greg Ashford of Teaneck, N.J. has been elected captain of the 1972-73 University of Vermont basketball team. It was announced by J. Edward Donnelly, director of Athletics.

Often used as a "Swingman" (rotating as a guard and forward), Ashford averaged 12 points, six rebounds, and three assists a game. Ashford is 6-3.

The Catamounts, with its best freshman club in a decade and the return of such veterans as Ashford, 6-7 George Peredy, 6-3 Nate Reeves, 6-4 Bruce Fields and sharp-shooting guard, Jim Ducey, hope to rebound after this year's disappointing 5-19 campaign.

Vermont's freshman cagers were 11-1, losing only to Dartmouth, 100-98, in overtime.

Ashford, an All-County and All-League selection in basketball and track at Teaneck High School, is majoring in political science at UVM.

He is also a standout high jumper for Vermont's indoor and outdoor track teams.

Intramural Results

Last week was a big week for intramural squash fans. Tournaments to decide the champions in the three classes were held. Winner of the Class A tournament was Dave Sutor who defeated Wesley Graff 16-14, 15-7, and 15-8.

In the Class B tournament, Stephen Rae defeated Robert Comoli 15-10, 15-7, 11-15, and 15-11. In the Class C tournament, Cain defeated Bernhardt of SAE 17-16, 15-11, and 15-9.

Elsewhere in the intramural scene you bowling fans who were rooting for Alpha Gamma Rho will be happy to know they defeated Sigma Alpha Epsilon. It seems that last week was a good one for SAE.

IMPORTANT

The Physical Education Department requests your patience in deciphering the class schedule. For computer convenience, activity classes indicate a 95 minute class but actual class periods will generally continue at the original 50 minute module.

Gymnastic Team

Hosts Ridgewood

This Friday, March 24, the UVM men's gymnastic team will close its season with a meet at Patrick Gym at 7 p.m. against Ridgewood N.Y., YMCA. This should prove to be an exciting meet because the New Jersey team is coached by Tom Pomer an alumni and a former captain of the UVM team.

So far this season the Catamounts have posted a 2-2 record. Their latest win was one over the Royal Military College from Ontario earlier this month.

The Cats were also participants in the New England championships at MIT. In that meet, Jake Foley placed eighth in vaulting.

The reason for the excitement over this event is one of psychological rather than physical excitement. Present coach Tom Dunklee had been coach of the Ridgewood High team prior to his coming to UVM. In addition, the present gymnastic team captain, Doug Mackey started his gymnastic career at Ridgewood High and has started several others of the YMCA competitors on their way.

These two teams will meet this Friday night with no charge to the public.

NEW YORK—NBA Commissioner Walter Kennedy announced that the Los Angeles Lakers, who clinched the Pacific Division title for the second straight season, will open the Association's 1972 Playoffs against the Chicago Bulls at Los Angeles on Tuesday, March 28.

The Bulls have clinched second place in the Midwest Division and have a slight mathematical chance of overtaking Milwaukee, the division leader. As of March 13 the Bulls trailed by six games with seven to play. If Chicago finishes first, Alternate dates will be announced.

Otherwise, it's Chicago at Los Angeles on March 28 and Thursday, March 30. Game three will be Sunday afternoon, April 2, in Chicago, then Tuesday, April 4, in Chicago.

If necessary in the best-of-seven series, game 5 would be Friday, April 7 at Los Angeles; game 6 would be Sunday afternoon, April 9 at Chicago; and game 7 would be Wednesday, April 12 at Los Angeles.

What's What

by Sam Whitehead

Sports fans are often accused of lacking in their appreciation of the finer things in life. That is, the only culture which they are expected to enjoy is the Sunday afternoon game and a couple of cold Buds.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. As a matter of fact, the appreciation of contemporary literature is one of the sports fans greatest attributes, especially on the part of the coaches.

So, in order to give a true view of the behind the scenes action which many of us aren't fortunate enough to share, the Sports staff of the Cynic has done some undercover work. We have dug into the private lives of some of the brass over at Gutterson and found those books with which the coaches have found their greatest moments of happiness, and their greatest moments of inspiration.

The staff of the football team always keeps an extra copy of "Catch-22" in their lockers. The explanation is apparently that this represents a silent plea from the team having something to do with the hopes of the passing game for the entire coming season.

For the Basketball team's stock reading matter, along with the play-book is "Everything You Wanted to Know About Sports but Were Afraid to Ask". Presumably, in this veritable encyclopedia of trivia, the mystery of 18 losses in one season can be explained, or at least justified.

For both clubs, an alternate piece of literature is "The Sensuous Coach". What better source of finding the hows and whys of turning your team on to a decent season, if not a decent one.

A copy of "Poorboy's Complaint" can be seen being passed to eager hands around the rink. When a team gets free cokes and pocket change every second Tuesday to support the program, it is no wonder the complaint has not been louder. Another interesting piece of reading matter, a new found favorite of the team, was "The Longest Day" whose pages were well worn while Coach Cross was pondering the decision to move down to Boston University. Good thing the book had such a happy ending.

Coach Doug Holmquist, who led the Frosh basketball club to a eleven and one record, walks a lonely road with his book, "Exodus". This University loses a fine coach and a fine baseball program due to a tightened budget.

For the skiing team the only appropriate novel would have to be "Where Eagles Dare", although watching them a more appropriate novel would appear to be Durkheim's "Suicide".

For the Soccer and Swimming teams, we really couldn't discover any literature despite our work, outside of the first book mentioned for the Hockey team. I guess some teams are happy just on account of being good.

Foul Shooting Never A Perfected Art

NEW YORK—Foul shooting is an art that can never really be perfected. Patience, concentration and constant practice can boost a player's percentage. Jack Martin of the Baltimore Bullets, who takes special pride in his ability to excel at the line, is polling ahead of Houston's Calvin Murphy in their two-man battle for the National Basketball Association free throw percentage title.

Martin made all six attempts last week to jump two points to .897, while Murphy made 22 of 22 tries. This lowered his percentage to .890 with two weeks left in the 1971-72 season.

Meanwhile, Milwaukee's Kareem Jabbar had 45 points against Boston and 35 against New York last week while boosting his scoring average to 34.6. Not since Rick Barry averaged 35.6 in the 1966-67 season has an NBA player scored as much.

Wilt Chamberlain of Los Angeles continued to lead in field goal percentage (.853) and rebounding average (19.1). Lenny Wilkens, Seattle's player-coach, continued to pace all playmakers. He had a 9.7 per game average after 73 games, while Jerry West of Los Angeles is second at 9.4. Cincinnati's Nate Archibald, who ranks third in scoring, is also third in assists average at 9.2.

Annual Winooski River Raft Race Set For April 22

The fourth annual Winooski River Raft Race has been scheduled for Saturday, April 22, with a raindate of April 29. The yearly competition will commence at 9:00 AM and continue until all rafts are launched. The starting point is Bolton Falls, on the Winooski River, about nine miles from Richmond Village, 30 miles from Burlington (see map on page 2). Each raft will receive a number and litter bag from the starting line judge, who will make final judgement concerning eligibility of any raft. The finish line is one-half mile upstream from the Jonesville Bridge, seven miles from the starting point. The course begins at Bolton Falls below the old power dam. One-half mile downstream is the one major rapids, known as Rainbow Rapids. This culminates in the swift run beneath the notorious railroad trestle at North Duxbury. The last six miles are more smooth, but there are smaller rapids which appear at different water levels. The entire course bisects the backbone of the Green Mountains. Total floating time usually amounts to about one hour and thirty minutes. Trophies for first and second prizes will be awarded to the fastest rafts in the Male, Mixed, and Female Divisions with a Grand Prize awarded to the raft with the fastest overall time. Trophies will also be awarded for Most Unusual in Design, Most Unusual Mode of Propulsion, and Largest Crew Finishing the Race.

See page seven for rules and regulations and entry blank.

Students Selected As Reps To Board

Nine students at the University of Vermont have been named student representatives to the University's Board of Trustees. It was announced by Brooks McCabe, Jr., immediate past chairman of the student representatives to the Trustees. The nine students begin their new assignments at the next meeting of the Trustees, April 14-15.

Named to the committee were: Chairman Eugene Beaudoin (Latham, N.Y.), former Student Association President; Educational Policy; Marcia Browne (Whitman, Mass.), past Panhellenic (sorority organization) President and Vice-President of the Pre-Med Club; Development Angela Franklin (Chicago, Ill.), a freshman Pre-Med major and Governance Terrance Demas (Burlington), former treasurer of the Student Association.

Also named to the group were: Investment David Stacey (Plainfield), a graduate student in psychology.

Management and Planning James Sloman (Pawlet), a recent transfer student from Ripon College majoring in Self-Design; Student Activities Richard Cassidy (Rutland), former Student Association Vice-President of Internal Affairs; Building and Grounds Brenda Faxman (East Hardwick), a junior psychology major and Finance and Budget Daniel Bryden (Groton, Conn.), a junior majoring in elementary education.

Senate Submits New Constitution For Vote

by Jeri Covey

The new Student Association constitution was the main topic of discussion at the last SA Senate meeting on March 22. After the inclusion of several amendments, the new constitution was passed on a vote of nineteen to two. It will now come up for a student referendum vote next week. (A copy of the constitution as it is to be voted on is reprinted in this week's Cynic.)

The most important amendment to be added to the constitution was a proposal by Carroll Hirsch that sets up a cabinet under the SA President. According to this amendment the Treasurer, the Secretary of Student Activities, the Secretary of Elections, and the Communications Officer will be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Only the President will be elected at large by a plurality vote of the students. Carroll Hirsch commented that this new method will make the cabinet officers responsible to the President. Dean Powers agreed with the amendment saying that accountability should rest with the President. The amendment was passed on a roll call vote.

Carroll Hirsch also proposed two other amendments at the meeting. One would provide for a method to recall and impeach the President. The other amendment provided for the supreme judicial authority of the Student Association to be vested in a committee of five members to be elected by the Senate. Both amendments (continued on page three)

Cynic Interview

Dr. Low, New Trustee, Comments On Board, Student Voting, VPIRG

by Jeri Covey

The following are excerpts from an interview with Dr. Paul R. Low, a recently appointed member of the Board of Trustees. Dr. Low graduated from UVM in 1955 and took his Ph.D. from Stanford in 1963. He is now General Manager of I.B.M. in Essex Junction. While a student at UVM, Dr. Low was Chief Justice of the Student Court and a member of Sigma Phi Fraternity. Dr. Low was also a faculty member here from 1955 to 1957.

Question: What are your feelings toward your position on the Board of Trustees and how have they changed?

Answer: Well, I think I said that I felt a little insecure and ignorant about what the proper role of a member of the Board of Trustees really was. There were at least three constituencies that I felt I should serve. The first was the students, then the faculty, and then the citizenry of the state. And I feel that I should qualify for some knowledge of all three. First, I was a student, second, I was a faculty member, and I am a citizen of the state. On the other hand my concern about my experience as a student was that I am not sure that it was relevant. The change in attitude, the change in the intellectual approach of the student, the more adult behavior, the more questioning behavior, and this is all to the better. I think this has made me question my own background as a student, when I try to represent in my own way the feelings of the students. So, I think I've got a great deal to learn, of what the students view are their problems with their University. I hope to profit from this by getting in a little better contact with the students. That's a personal profit. I hope it will also help me as a member of the Board of Trustees.

Secondly, as a faculty member, I was a faculty member here very briefly, from 1955 to 1957. I think the problems of today's faculty are quite different. So I have to be very careful about using the opinions that were formed during the period of 1955-1957 as a faculty member on the 1972 faculty. Thirdly, I am a citizen of the state and I have the concern of the citizen and what Vermont's University should be. And I suspect that I probably represent them best. I have a great deal to learn of my first two constituencies, but I think I have some knowledge of the third.

Question: How would you characterize the role of the University in the Burlington community and in the state?

Answer: One of the things that I hope to figure out is how the University can be of more service to the state. I think Vermont is very, very fortunate. When you think about it, it is a very small state and it is not a terribly well to do state, and yet it has here in the University some of the finest consultants in almost any field that you can think of. I need to get a better understanding of how the University serves the state today, but I'll be willing to bet that there are areas where it can serve the state even better. And one of the things that I hope to urge is that we explore this area. For example in the field of technology, it has an engineering school which ought to offer a fine set of consultants, to the governor, to the legislature, to the various commissions of the state in fields such as the technological aspects of the environmental problem, energy sources, and these sorts of things. One would hope that there would be great deal of service. I know that there is service, but I think that there could be more. I think that probably this is at least as much the problem of the state as the University. I am sure that in the field of agriculture where there is the State Agricultural College and the Experimental Station there is a fine group of people serving the state. In the

Medical College there is a great deal of effort. I think that that is good.

Question: In regard to the VPIRG, my exposure to it has been limited to viewing a news program or two when it was established. Off hand it seems like, without a great deal of information, a very useful organization. And I think that I should learn some more about that.

Answer: I'm pretty ignorant or VPIRG. My exposure to it has been limited to viewing a news program or two when it was established. Off hand it seems like, without a great deal of information, a very useful organization. And I think that I should learn some more about that.

Question: Being a resident of Burlington, do you think that there is a separation between the University and the town?

Answer: Well, let me say that when I was a member of the University community, both as a member of the faculty and the student body, I felt that there was a separation that I see here, or perhaps even the difference of opinion that I see, is nothing compared to that of which I saw in Poughkeepsie, between the town and city of Poughkeepsie and Vassar College. There the college was totally ignored, or worse, frowned on, and generally just not thought well of. There was almost no integration of the Vassar life and the Poughkeepsie life. Especially cultural, it was very difficult for the people of Poughkeepsie to find out what sort of cultural attractions, lectures, concerts were going on at Vassar. Quite the contrary here in Burlington, perhaps the Lane Series which has both the town and gown participation has helped to overcome some of that. I see quite a contrast between the attitudes of the University and the city of Burlington, and Vassar College and the city of Poughkeepsie. And I must say that the Burlington UVM situation, compared to the Vassar - Poughkeepsie situation, comes out very favorable.

Question: Would you be in favor of students having voting power on the Board of Trustees?

Answer: I don't really know. I've had a couple of questionnaires from students concerning this, it's clear that the role of the students and the Board of Trustees is on the minds of the students. And again, you see I'm left to my own inadequate background of students, when that never even occurred to me. And so I'm a little puzzled by that concern. I would think that the students would be more concerned in having direct, interactive voice with the day to day administration of the University, since the Trustees

Question: What is your opinion of the proposed jug-handle which would connect Spear Street and East Avenue? The proposal would use some University land.

Answer: I am not sure what problem the proposed jug-handle would solve. I guess until I understand the problem that it would solve, it would be difficult to be in favor of it. Better informed, I might be. But to just use up the University land for no solution to a particular traffic problem, it wouldn't be a good course of action. But, I am not well briefed on what problem it is that it is trying to solve. I know that from personal experience it is very difficult to traverse that area in an automobile at certain times of day. I would be delighted to see some solution to the traffic problem. But I haven't seen enough data that will tell me that the jug-handle will solve that traffic problem.

Question: You mentioned that in your briefing with Dr. Andrews last week you had discussed financial problems. How do you feel that the University is doing financially? There is some talk that there will be a deficit next year. There was also an article in the Free Press that Dr. Andrews was supposedly "blackmailing" the legislature with the threat of an $800,000 deficit. How would you characterize this situation?

Answer: There is clearly a severe financial situation at the University, as there is at almost every institution of higher learning that I know of. And there is a distinct possibility that there will be a deficit. At least on the limited briefing that I have had, I think that the use of the word blackmail is inappropriate. From what I can gather, and we did see some of charts that were used in the presentation to the legislature, it seems to me to be a very accurate representation of the financial situation of the University. Rising costs of operating the University, both administrative costs and rising faculty salaries, not terribly great increases in enrollment, which is one of the principle sources of income and revenue for the University; it is very difficult business management problem. Wayne Patterson has a tough task on his hands, to get those issues clarified and to understand what options the University has.

Question: How do you view the decrease of enrollment in colleges across the nation as compared to four or five years ago?

Answer: Let me say that my interaction with universities is really limited to the two that I attended, the University of Vermont and Stanford. But it is a common problem. I am sure that some of the young people today who are trying to decide whether or not to go to college are questioning what value this expenditure of money and four years will have. I am sure that the job situation in industry for those people going to college with learning a career as their main objective, looks a little dismal to them. They look for an alternate to that. I'm sure that people who want to go to college to learn, to gain intellectual growth, are questioning whether or not those aspirations can be realized. And I think also that cost of a college education is forcing some people into just having to pursue other options. They or their parents just don't have three or four thousand dollars for four years. That is a lot of money. And I think that in particular, you can say that for some Vermont families, this is an incredible amount of money. That might be a couple of times what the total income of the family is. And if you have a family of three or four children, maybe you can't send them all to college. It is a puzzling thing, four or five years ago the question was what college can you hope to have the opportunity of your children to enter, because they were all so overcrowded that it

Commencement Ceremonies To Be Split In Four This Year

by Jeff Yacker

The traditional single commencement ceremony at the University of Vermont is now a thing of the past. The Commencement Committee decided this week to hold four separate ceremonies on May 20-21, replacing the old single graduation exercise. On Saturday, May 20 at 10 AM in

Patrick Gymnasium, five divisions of the University will hold a joint ceremony. The School of Allied Health Sciences, the School of Nursing, and College of Education, the College of Technology, and the College of Agriculture and Home Economics will award degrees to graduates in the first segment of the four-part commencement. At 2 PM on the same date, the College of Medicine will award M.D.'s in Ira Allen Chapel. The third ceremony will be that of the Graduate College, held of Sunday, May 21 at 10 AM in Ira Allen Chapel, followed at 2 PM on that day by the final ceremony of the College of Arts and Sciences in Patrick Gym. All honorary degrees will be awarded at the ceremony of the Arts College this year because of prior commitments to recipients.

There will be no tickets at this year's commencement exercises. An open admission policy will prevail at all ceremonies. Processions will form approximately one-half hour before each ceremony: on Volley first floor for the Ira Allen Chapel ceremonies, and in Gutterton Field House for Patrick Gym ceremonies.

Information on caps and gowns will be forthcoming in the next week from the University Store.

Dr. George Little, Professor of Political Science and Chairman of the Commencement Committee, state that part of the reason behind the new approach to commencement was requests from students for separate exercises. Dr. Little added that commencement this year will be shorter, and more comfortable for all involved, and will give more people a chance to attend. Since there will be no tickets, quotas and allotments will not be necessary. Dr. Little stated that another result of the four-part graduation exercises, hopefully, will be more individual recognition of graduating students.

B S & T Concert Cancelled

The Lane extra performance of Blood, Sweat and Tears, announced for April 21, has been cancelled, the Lane Committee announced today.

Although contracts had been signed for concerts in Burlington and several other university and commercial locations, the company decided not to tour this spring. No reason was given for the cancellation.

Friends Of Lane Series Fight Inflation Through Donations

The Friends of the University of Vermont Lane Series will devote their efforts in the coming year to "renewing and counterattacking the inflation which threatens to erode the quality" of the concert series.

Friends Chairman J. Boone Wilson told a kickoff meeting at the University recently that "The Lane Series is one of the things that make for good living in Burlington," and urged a strong campaign to meeting the goal of $15,000 in gifts to the series.

"We reached this goal last year," he said, "and it can be done this year."

Lane Series Director Jack

Tzavathuk told the group, "The Series needs to have its budget increased by gifts in order to maintain the quality and scope of the Series."

"All of our artists," he said, "cost more than we receive from ticket sales. We don't want to continue raising ticket prices year after year, and an annual solicitation by the Friends seems to be the best alternative."

Beginning this month the Friends will contact potential donors in the Burlington area.

Members of the Friends steering committee are, in addition to Wilson, David W. Curtis, vice chairman, John T. Carpenter, Elden Decker Jr., Mrs. John T. Hanna.

Also, William M. Lockwood, Barry W. Messinger, Milton J. Nadworny, Mrs. Richard A. Snelling, and the 1971-72 Friends chairman, Bernard H. Fawcett.

St. Anselm's Chapel Services at 5 PM followed by a light dinner - beginning April 9th.

A distinguished scholar and journalist, Dr. Irving Dilliard, will be presented at the University of Vermont April 16, in an afternoon panel and evening lecture on academic freedom jointly sponsored by Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi.

Dr. Dilliard, Ferris Professor of Journalism and senior fellow of the Council of Humanities at Princeton University, was a member of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch staff for more than 35 years.

He will be a member of a press-faculty panel at UVM April 18, to discuss "Traditional and New Directions for Academic Freedom," and deliver an evening lecture on "The Greatest Freedom of All." Both events will be open to the public, and members of the Vermont Press Association have been specially invited to attend the panel and participate in informal discussion.

Prof. Dilliard will be joined on the panel by Ken Wild, managing editor of the Rutland Herald and president of the Vermont Press Association; Richard E. Gallagher, news director of WCAX-TV; Mrs. Ruth Page, editor of the Suburban List; Dr. Dean C. Corrigan, dean of UVM's College of Education; and Dr. Norman T. London, chairman of UVM's department of Communication and Theatre, who will moderate the panel.

The panel at 3:30 p.m. in Carpenter Auditorium of the Given Medical Building, will be open to the public, as will Dr. Dilliard's lecture at 8 p.m. in Carpenter Auditorium.

The program is being jointly sponsored by UVM's Phi Beta Kappa chapter and by the UVM chapter of Sigma Xi, national scientific honorary society. It is the first in a series of programs the two groups plan to sponsor as part of an effort to increase communication and understanding between the academic community and the public generally.

Dr. George T. Little of UVM's department of political science, president of the UVM Phi Beta Kappa Chapter, said "we are aware that we must join the interest and effort of a widening number of people to participate in the governance of higher education."

Dr. Jackson Clemmons of the department of pathology at UVM, president of Sigma Xi at UVM, added "our membership recognizes the need for the academic community to join in shaping constructive approaches to better communication and understanding."

"The honor societies are aware of changing trends in education and we feel a responsibility to take the initiative in providing leadership."

"Because of the special current interest in academic freedom, we feel privileged to have in Dr. Dilliard a respected scholar and a journalist of national esteem," Prof. Little said.

Dr. Dilliard is a graduate of the University of Illinois, which he served as a trustee from 1961-67. A member of the first group of Harvard Nieman Fellows, he joined the Post-Dispatch as a reporter in 1923, became an editorial writer in 1930 and from 1949-57 served as editor of the editorial page.

Dr. Dilliard is historian of the United chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, and a lecturer for the association.

He has edited "The Spirit of Liberty," a collection of Judge Learned Hand's papers, "Mr. Justice Brandeis, Great American," and "One Man's Stand for Freedom: Mr. Justice Black and the Bill of Rights." His articles have appeared in many magazines and newspapers.

Anthropology Club Speakers

Ms. Suzanne Blier, former Peace Corps worker, will be the guest speaker at the April 9th meeting of the UVM Anthropology Club. She will deal with objects of art from Africa.

The club's own Russell Barber will also speak on April 9th, rather than on March 19th as reported in the last minutes. He will deliver a paper on a case study of pre-historic burial change entitled, "Sand, Sun, Suffs."

The meeting will be held in the Seminar Room of the Anthropology and Sociology Building at 31 So. Prospect St. and will begin at 7 p.m.

Federal Grant Given To ETV

The office of U.S. Congressman Richard W. Mallary, on behalf of the Vermont delegation, announced yesterday (Mar. 30) the award of a federal grant of $152,840 to Vermont Educational Television of the University of Vermont by the Educational Broadcasting Facilities Program of the U.S. Office of Education.

The purpose of the grant is to purchase two highband color videotape recorders and necessary ancillary items of equipment. The new equipment will be compatible with that used by other public broadcasting stations, enabling Vermont ETV to share programs, record off the network for delay, and will be first facilities required to locally-produce programs in color. Color cameras are somewhere in the future.

Last year the Vermont General Assembly appropriated $55,950 to fulfill the requirement of matching state funds for the videotape recorder grant application to HEW.

Vermont ETV station manager John W. Dunlop said: "We are very pleased with the award of the grant and look forward to the programming benefits to be derived from the equipment. It is hoped to have the videotape recorders operative by the start of the school year in September 1972."

C. P. Smith School is going to have its semi-annual resale. Smith School is located at the top of Ethan Allen Parkway, off of North Avenue. The sale will be held on Wednesday April 12 from 9-4. Anyone may enter their hidden treasures into the sale to make money. Anything is acceptable except junk. For entry information, call Jane Nelson at 863-6642 before Tuesday April 11. The sale will include all kinds of clothes, household items, sports equipment, toys, books and appliances and furniture.

Lost & Found

There is a large collection of "lost and found" items at the Student Activities desk in the Billings Center, including books, letters, keys, glasses and clothing. This supply dates back to January. Any student or other person who thinks that he has lost something in Billings is urged to check at the lost and found.

"Insight UVM"

"Insight UVM," on Sunday, April 9, will take a look at the university from the students' perspective. Guests on the television show at 1 PM will be SA President Eugene Beaudoin, Cynic Editor Jeff Yacker, and Town Senator Carol Hirs. The show is aired on Channel 22 (WVNY).

IRA Meeting

There will be an Inter-Residence Association meeting on Tuesday night at 6:30 PM in MAT lounge. All members of IRA are invited to attend.

Her Majesty's Scots Present Pomp & Circumstance

The Regimental Band, Pipes, Drums and Dancers of Her Majesty's Scots Guards, the most famous of Britain's marching regiments, will appear in the Lane Series on Thursday, April 13, 8:30 p.m., in Patrick Gymnasium.

Tickets, $3.75, $4.50, $5.25, and $6 - all reserved seats - are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman and the Door. For reservations and information, telephone 656-3418.

A company of 80, the Scots Guards will present a musical spectacle of pomp and circumstance lasting for two hours.

The Scots Guards is in the tradition of two other similar attractions that have appeared in the Lane Series: the British Tournament and Tattoo (1969) and the Royal Marines Tattoo (1965). The Scots Guards Regiment was part of the Royal Marines Tattoo. Both Lane presentations were sold out.

The Scots Guards opened their coast-to-coast tour of the U.S., and Canada in late January, 1972; in Felt Forum, Madison Square Garden, New York City. Their 12-week itinerary took them south to Florida and across the southwest to California, Oregon and Washington. Performances also were given in Canada, with the tour to end in Boston in mid-April.

First formed in March, 1642, by King Charles I, the Scots Guards have seen service in all major British engagements: winning Battle Honors in, to name a few, the Marlborough and Crimean Wars, the Egyptian Campaigns and both World Wars. Significantly, the first Victoria Crosses for conspicuous

Vermont Symphony Perform At

The Vermont Symphony Orchestra conducted by Alan Carter will conclude the fourth University of Vermont Lane Extension Series in Springfield Saturday (April 8) with a concert in Springfield High School.

The program of works by Mozart, Wagner, Luening and Prokofiev will open at 8 p.m., a half-hour earlier than the normal curtain time.

The concert will be part of the Symphony Day activities in Springfield, which will include a free youth concert at 2 p.m. in Springfield High School. Also, ensembles from the Orchestra are currently giving concerts in schools in the Springfield area.

The Saturday evening concert will open with "The Marriage of Figaro," followed by the Prelude and "Love Death" from Wagner's "Siegfried."

Why doesn't General Electric talk about thermal pollution when they talk about nuclear power plants?

General Electric has been talking nuclear power plants ever since we pioneered them in the fifties. And we think they can help solve America's energy problems in the 70's and 80's. But we're also aware that nuclear power has problems of its own.

Problems worth talking about. Like the environment. Actually, we felt one of the greatest advantages of nuclear power was environmental.

Unlike fossil-fueled power plants, there is no smoke to pollute the air. But like fossil-fueled plants, there is warmed water released to surrounding waterways.

Cooling it. We recognize thermal pollution as a serious problem. And GE and America's utilities are working on thermal problems at nuclear sites on a plant-by-plant basis.

Many people don't realize, for example, that utilities are required by federal law to design and operate their plants within temperature limits prescribed by the states.

So utilities are spending millions of dollars on dilution control systems, cooling ponds and cooling towers to comply.

But, in addition, utilities are sponsoring basic research on heat exchange and its effects on aquatic life. More than 97 utilities have been financially involved in over 300 such studies.

Good effects? It's been found, in some cases, adding heat to water can actually be beneficial. Warm irrigation water has extended growing seasons. Warm water has created new wintering ponds along water-fowl migration routes. Florida is using it to grow shrimp and lobster. In Texas, it's increasing the weight of commercial catfish by as much as 500%.

Work to be done. Listing these benefits is not to beg the issue. Thermal effects remain a tough problem to solve at many sites. Each plant must be considered individually, in its own environment, and this is being done.

General Electric, the utilities and environmentalists will continue to work hard. Because we think the advantages of nuclear power far outweigh the disadvantages.

Why are we running this ad? It's one ad of a series on the problems of man and his environment today. And the ways technology is helping to solve them.

The problems of our environment (not just nuclear power problems) concern us because they will affect the future of this country and this planet. We have a stake in that future. As businessmen. And, simply, as people.

If you are concerned too, we'd like to hear from you. Write General Electric, Dept. 901-CN, 570 Lexington Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022.

Her Majesty's Scots Guards Dr. Low... Present Pomp & Ceremony

would be essentially impossible unless they were very genuine. And today, it is somewhat easier. Colleges are not as overcrowded and their enrollment is down. As an ex-technologist, I am most concerned by the total disenchantment of the students today with technology. I think that many people believe that the technologists are the bad guys. In the late '50's and the middle '60's, the Sputnik era, technology was a great god and everybody worshipped it. Now people have turned from that god. Probably, technology will come back in some sensible role, neither god nor devil. But, right now it certainly doesn't seem to be a very attractive field. Enrollment in the engineering schools, with a few exceptions, were down dramatically.

Question: Do you have any particular goals that you would like to fulfill as a member of the Board of Trustees? Are there any particular things that you would like to see done differently at the University? Answer: I don't know if I can talk about things that I would like to see done differently because I must admit that I don't understand very well how things are done. I would hope that in the six years I am going to be a member of the Board that I could make some contribution to relieving some of the frustrations of the students with the goals and objectives that their university has. On the one hand, I want to understand what the University's goals and objectives are, and two, to change the goals and objectives of the University where necessary to be more consistent with those of the students. I hope that I can participate in that dialogue; I like to think that I have a sufficiently open mind, time will tell. But, I certainly intend to try. And I would like to see if the faculty members couldn't be made more satisfying. I certainly have some reason to believe that there is some frustration on the part of the faculty as to what their role is. And finally, I would like to see the University and the state interact in an increasingly positive way. I think that a great service can be done by the University to the people of Vermont. Just as there are things that the people of Vermont must do for the University, I would like to see that role expanded.

Dr. M. W. Fennell, associate professor of psychology, Dr. Julian A. Waller, professor of community medicine, and Dr. Lawrence S. Harris, chief medical examiner, co-authored the final report and will conduct the briefing, being held at 2 p.m. in the faculty lounge on the top floor of Waterman Building at UVM.

These three scientists will report on the results of the project, their recommendations regarding use of this information, and programs that have followed the original ABETS study, such as Project CRASH, a four-year alcohol countermeasure program currently being conducted

'Drinking And Driving' Study Results To Be Revealed

Accomplishments of a two and one-half year study of drinking and driving will be unveiled April 7 at a University of Vermont briefing to which local, county, state and University officials have been invited.

The study was conducted by the Project ABETS staff in the department of psychology at the University of Vermont, and was funded by the National Highway Safety Bureau of the U.S. Department of Transportation.

Director of Project ABETS is Dr. M. W. Fennell, associate professor of psychology. He, Dr. Julian A. Waller, professor of community medicine, and Dr. Lawrence S. Harris, chief medical examiner, co-authored the final report and will conduct the briefing, being held at 2 p.m. in the faculty lounge on the top floor of Waterman Building at UVM.

These three scientists will report on the results of the project, their recommendations regarding use of this information, and programs that have followed the original ABETS study, such as Project CRASH, a four-year alcohol countermeasure program currently being conducted under auspices of the Vermont Department of Mental Health with funds again provided by the National Highway Safety Bureau. Dr. Fennell and Waller, are two of the four originators of Project CRASH, which started in July 1970.

The Project ABETS study used a variety of approaches to amass its wealth of information, and in this way went more deeply into many phases of drinking and driving than any previous study. Adults fatally injured in highway crashes were studied to determine the presence of alcohol; roadblocks were set up through cooperation of State Police, for voluntary interviews; a wide variety of drivers were extensively interviewed, including those who had been convicted of DWI violations and other serious moving violations; an instrumented car was used to test the influence of alcohol on driver reactions and abilities, and induced intoxication experiments were conducted in the laboratory to test the effects of alcohol on various types of driver-related behavior.

In other business, a motion made by Dave Carter providing that all student representatives to the Board of Trustees committees also serve on the corresponding Faculty Senate Committees was passed. Another motion by Dan Shaw was passed that strongly recommends to the Board of Trustees and the Administration that they withdraw their approval of granting University land for the proposed juke-hut at Main Street and East Avenue.

Chris Stanley asked that a presidential candidate preference ballot be placed on a student referendum. The preference ballot was suggested by a group of national student leaders and is to be called CHOICE '72. Similar ballots will be voted on across the nation. The referendum in addition asks question on the war in Vietnam, the women's movement, welfare, national minorities, and student rights. The motion was tabled for a vote at this week's meeting.

'Raisin In The Sun' Showing Monday

"Raisin in the Sun," starring Sidney Poitier, will conclude the Lane Black Man in Film series on Monday, April 10, at 9 p.m., in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium. There will be one showing.

Tickets, $1.00 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the Door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

In addition to Poitier, "Raisin in the Sun" stars Claudia McNeil, Ruby Dee, and Diana Sands, who also appeared in the Broadway play of the same title. The 1967 film runs for 128 minutes.

On Broadway, the play by Lorraine Hansberry ran for 530 performances and won, the coveted Drama Critics Circle Award.

Filmed in Chicago, the movie is directed by Daniel Petrie, with music by Laurence Rosenthal. Its many awards include the N.Y. Film Critics Award nomination for Best Motion Picture and Best Screenplay, and the N.Y. Times Ten Best Awards.

The story deals with the secret dreams of a South Side Chicago Black family who receive a life insurance check for $10,000. Commenting on his film, Poitier said: "Of all the films I've done, I like 'Raisin' the best. It is the most representative of Negro ghetto life—the hopes, fears, aspirations, frustrations of the people."

The title is taken from a poem by Langston Hughes: "What happens to a dream deferred? Does it dry up like a raisin in the sun? Or does it fester like a sore—and then run? ... Maybe it just sags like a heavy load. Or does it explode?"

The N.Y. Herald Tribune Critic wrote of the movie: "If you see no other picture this year, this is the one you ought to see... as tight as a wave of humor and pathos as you're likely to see anywhere." And the Saturday Review called it "an important and memorable movie."

The final Lane movie this spring, on the Hitchcock Classics series, is "Tom Curtain," Saturday, April 15, at 8:00 p.m., in Life Marsh Sciences Building Auditorium.

Constitution Referendum

There will be a student referendum on the new Student Association Constitution on Wednesday, April 12, 1972. The referendum will be held in Billings Center from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. and in the dining hall from 5:00 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.

The new Constitution was passed by a 19 to 2 vote of the S.A. Senate on March 22. According to S.A. policy, the referendum will be held no earlier than two weeks after approval by the Senate. In order for the Constitution to be ratified, it must be approved by a majority of the students voting.

The referendum, however, will be invalid if a quorum of the student body does not vote.

NOTICE

The SA Finance Committee will begin 1972-1973 Budget Hearings Wednesday April 12 in Billings. All recognized student groups who wish to apply must go to the SA Desk in Billings and sign up for a time and obtain the proper budget forms. For information call 2053 or 2054.

Com Bino Ensemble

The Com Bino Chamber Ensemble will perform on Sunday April 9th at the Unitarian Church. The string quartet will play No. 3 Giuseppe Cambini's waltz for trombone, viola and cello by Perichetti, Sonata in A major by Mozart and Sonata 2 by Charles Ives. Chamber Ensemble members include Robert Wiggins, faculty member on trombone and Marie Vogelmann, faculty wife, pianist. Admission fee is $1.50 for Adults, $.75 for students.

For information telephone 885-5852, Springfield. The Springfield series is subsidized by a Lane Series grant and by gifts from local individuals and organizations.

Items For Board Of Trustees

All items to be presented by individuals other than members of the Board of Trustees for consideration by the Board or by any of its Committees must be submitted to the President's Office at least two weeks prior to the date of the meeting. Any items received following such date shall be considered in the next subsequent regular meeting unless deemed an emergency by the Chairman of the Board and/or the President.

Any matters which individuals other than members of the Board of Trustees or the President wish to submit for consideration of the Board must be specifically connected with the established purpose, function, organization, or operation of the University. The Chairman of the Board and/or the President shall decide whether the matters submitted comply with this requirement.

Any matters approved for consideration as described above must first be submitted to the responsible committee to be determined by the Chairman of the Board and/or the President. The committee shall report to the Board if the subject matter is deemed to justify Board consideration.

University of Vermont Student Association Presidential elections will begin officially, Monday, April 10, 1972. On that day, petitions for the office of President will become available at the Student Association office in Billings Center.

In order for a candidate to have his name placed on the ballot, he must receive the signatures of at least 50 U.V.M. students and return the completed petitions to the office before 4:00 p.m. Monday, April 17, 1972.

Present plans call for the candidates to be involved in a question and answer session with various members of the University media on Friday, April 14 and speak to interested students at North Lounge in Billings on Monday, April 17.

Voting will take place on Monday and Tuesday, April 24 and 25. The new President will be installed on April 26. Prospective candidates should contact the Student Association Office for further information.

Editorial

On The SA Constitution Vote

The Student Association will be holding a referendum on its new constitution April 12 in Billings Center. The S.A. Executive Board, under the leadership of President Gene Beaudoin urges student support for it.

The proponents of the new constitution claim that it will facilitate better representation of student feelings and generally a better student government. They should be given credit for being so perceptive; for the past few years the student government at UVM has steadily grown more ineffective. It has commanded neither the interest nor the respect of most of the students on this campus. Instead of asserting itself as the student voice in vital areas, it has managed to give us little more than free films and mediocre concerts. Senate meetings are often marked by pitiful attendance and disinterest; many times business has been conducted in absence of a quorum.

Will the new constitution guarantee the students at the University of Vermont a better student government? We suggest that our readers look at the new constitution, printed on pages six and seven, and decide whether it merits their support.

You Can't Trust Anyone Under 20-20 Vision

by Rick Mitz

Some of my favorite browns have turned out to be green. Some of my favorite blues have turned out to be purple. And some of my favorite yellows have turned out to be red. Which just goes to show that you can't trust anyone under 20-20 vision.

I am color blind. My pants don't match my shirt, my sweaters don't match my ties, my scarves don't match my coats, my pajamas don't match my bed linen, and my socks are the product of a broken home. I am a member of a forgotten silent minority group, discriminated against because we pledge allegiance to a flag that is yellow, white and purple; because as children we followed the orange brick road; and because to us Red China is just another pretty shade of gold.

Recently, Irving, a color-blind friend of mine, and I, tried to drive down to the state capitol to lobby for legislative changes for our myopic minority group. Irving carried a beige placard (pink) that read "Black and White is Beautiful." We got in my little yellow car (red), and drove on until we approached a flashing light over a sign that read: "Proceed carefully on flashing amber, stop on flashing red."

"What's amber?" Irving asked as we drove toward the light. "Sort of a cross between green and blue—like you sweater," I said, pointing to his mauve sweater.

"My sweater's not amber," he said. "It's coral—like your jacket."

"My jacket just happens to be aqua-marine," I said. "Look," Irving said, "Are we gonna stop at this light or aren't we?"

"Let's go through it. It's a definite amber."

"No—a definite green. Let's go through it. And we won't bother proceeding with caution. We'll show 'em."

"The sign doesn't say anything about green—just red and amber."

"They're trying to mess us up," Irving said. "We've got to test whether or not we're color blind." He said with the slightest hint of paranoia. So we went dashing through the flashing light until a police car with a flashing orange light (red) stopped us. I turned acute (green) and Irving turned beet avocado (red) and the policeman turned us in for indecent exposure. It seems that we were stopping traffic because our clothes were flashing. We never made it down to the legislature.

But there are other handicaps. I've had to drop out of school three times now because I couldn't tell which part of the triplicate forms to turn in or keep. My apartment clashes with the others in the building and the tenants' union is trying to get me either evicted or married to an interior decorator. I thought the TV picked up at the Goodwill for $22—was color until I invited twenty people over to watch the Wizard of Oz. When we got to Oz it was just like Kansas and everybody walked out. According to a sign on the stadium gate, I am not welcome at football games because I always root for the Purples and Yellows (the Blues and the Greens) rather than our team, the Reds and the Browns (the Oranges and the Greens).

But, as they say, the grass is always greener...there are some advantages to being color blind. The army refused to accept me because, once in combat, they claimed I couldn't tell the enemy from our own men (although I'm told that hasn't stopped many of our boys over there with normal vision). And I am constantly being praised by friends (and family, for my acceptance of people with different skin color. But, as I always tell them, "You can thank my parents that I know no color barriers. I was always brought up to think that people with purple skin have as many rights as we chartreuse."

And then there's Mazie, the lovely girl who comes over to sort my socks once a week. "You know, Mitz," she said, sorting, "I've never met anyone with so many socks hundreds of them. You got bad feet or something?" "No, Mazie," I said looking into her big purple eyes. "It's just that I've got a real thing for orange-haired girls."

Power to the Purple.

Many Women Work At UVM But How Many Are Professors?

by Brooks McCabe

The University of Vermont is frequently denounced as being a top-heavy organization—too many administrators and too few workers. Be this as it may, the breakdown by sex of the administrators and workers reveals the opposite imbalance—too few female administrators and too many female workers. Of the full-time faculty employed at UVM, 42.4% of the instructors are women, whereas only 6.1% of the professors are women! This discrepancy increases as one goes higher in the hierarchy. The ratio of full-time faculty men to women is 5:1, however the ratio of male department chairmen to female is 47:7. At the top of the scale one finds that not a single College Dean is female!

This same discrimination is found at the student level. The ratio of undergraduate men to women is 2:1. In June 1971, the University awarded 24 doctoral degrees to men and none to women. In the last ten years, only six women have received doctorates at UVM.

The University's policy towards women is unquestionably discriminatory, be the women students, faculty, staff, or administrators. At the same time, the University must show administrators, under the 1964 Civil Rights Act, that it is an Equal Opportunity Employer. To help the University realign its policies to meet federal standards, the Equal Employment Opportunity Program Review Committee was formed in the late spring of 1971. This committee, comprised of 20 interested students, faculty, and staff and chaired by Caryl Stewart, provides the University with specific policy guidelines which will enable it to comply with federal regulations.

One such recent guideline concerns the University's housing policy. Previously, as a rule, the University denied housing in its faculty and staff complexes to female divorcees, even if they had children. Upon the rejection of her application for housing, one such woman, with a four-year-old child, brought her plight to the attention of the Review Committee. Upon being challenged, the University offered to amend its policy so that this woman could be admitted only after all the other families had been accommodated. The committee, however, was ultimately able to convince the University to give the woman equal priority.

This is only one instance of sex discrimination. As the above statistics indicate, such policies are rampant throughout the University. The Review Committee can help change only those policies of which it is aware. It becomes the responsibility of the individuals within the University community, therefore, to inform the Review Committee of such incidences of discrimination. Only then can the committee act to end the injustice.

Letter To The Editor

Student Association Is Your Organization

To the Editor: I think that it is about time that the Students of UVM find out what the Student Association does, and can do. A lot of students complain, "The SA does not do anything." Well, sit down, students, because here goes...

NO student organization can exist without recognition from the S.A. Senate. Recognition shows an organization to be legitimate, the organization of all, and also to use university facilities. It may also receive SA funds.

Every club on campus is an SA recognized organization.

Some of the more well-known SA organizations and their activities are—SA Speakers Bureau which brought Pierre Salinger, Ralph Nader, Lillian Gish, and Dick Gregory to campus this year.

SA Films which support the Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday night film series. Cynic WRUV-AM WRUV-FM SA Concert Bureau which brought J. Geils, "Yes," the Byrds, and BB King to UVM. (The upcoming Blues Festival is also from the SA Concert Bureau.)

The Student Association is the Students' Voice at UVM! We have direct communication with the Board of Trustees, the Faculty Senate, and the Administration. If students want change in the University, rather than feeling frustrated or trying to make new connections to these groups, the students can utilize the existing channels. You don't think they work? Then instead of complaining—TRY THEM!

Any students who want to work to change University policies, or are concerned with Student Activities must work through the SA to achieve their goals.

When No One's Around For A Substitute Dad, Turn To Archie Bunker

by Rick Mitz

My mother spent so much time at PTA meetings and other concerned parent organizations, that I grew up thinking Lucille Ball was my mother.

While Mom was taking courses in Doc Spock I and Joyce Brothers II, Lucy was there. After a tough day at public school I'd turn on with Lucy, my surrogate mother, who never let me down except once when a tube blew. It had its toll. I went straight to the couch when Dad and Dad got divorced. And I was a ward of CBS when they took her show off the air.

Dr. Freudenfeldt and I had long sessions about it.

"What comes to your mind when you think about your mother?"

"Channel 5."

"Did your mother spend much time with you?"

"Half an hour a day, five times a week. Including re-runs."

And it wasn't much different for the other kids on the block—Manny Weinland, whose mother spent her time selling door-to-door, chose a substitute mother whose show was taken off the air.

Manny had a nervous breakdown at age 7. Imagine the trauma of having your mother cancelled after 13 weeks.

The whole neighborhood lived vicariously through TV. Mary Jo Maddock had a dog named Lassie. Alex Tubline had a horse named Fury.

Pamela Gibson had an uncle named Ed who took her to the circus every Sunday night. She recently went into mourning when they cancelled him after 20 years.

We used to get lost in space and say Howdy to Doody. We had a father who knew best, had a maid named Hazel, and took all of our pediatric problems to the doctor of our choice—Ben Casey or James Kilgore. Where are they now?

We watched hundreds of mothers—not unlike our own, real or televised—pour out their breaking hearts to all of the Annette reached puberty, which is something none of us will ever forget. Including Annette.

Today's generation of children of the tube have it much worse. Imagine some kid who has Archie Bunker as his substitute father.

"Hi, daddy."

"Stifle yourself, meathead."

And then there's the prime-time identity crisis.

"I just can't get used to Mary Tyler Moore being single after all those years that she was married to Dick Van Dyke," a contemporary said recently.

"The chutzpah of Arizona with Hope Lange and then flaut it on Saturday nights—only sixty seconds after Mary signs off. I shall never forgive him."

But my heart still belongs to Lucy. I can't relate in any meaningful way to the new, single, independent Lucy with two grown kids—maybe it's sibling rivalry—but I wouldn't miss the reruns of the old Lucy show for a visit home.

Everyday at 3:15, I hop downtown to the department store of my choice and tell the salesman that I'm interested in buying a TV. And for thirty minutes it's back to the womb via a TV set.

But I've run into problems. Recently I encountered a kid, my own age, waiting in appliances for Donna Reed to begin.

"I want to watch Donna Reed," he said. "And I got here first."

"Hey, Hey," I said. "Let's handle this like mature adults. My Lucy is better than your Donna. Nahhh!"

"Oh, yeah? Well at least Donna never got divorced."

"No, just cancelled."

He pulled the plug out of the TV set and ran off. "I'm gonna tell the salesman on you," he jeered. And the salesman came over to mediate and plug the set back in.

Some people just can't seem to cut the cord.

When Using Ethnic Words, Be A Little Careful

(CPS)—Although Senator Muskie's alleged use of the word "Canuk" referring to French-Canadians received more media coverage, the words of a New York Democratic County chairman have stirred Albany's Italian-American community into a furor that Senator Muskie's alleged remark never could.

Mr. Daniel O'Connell last week in an interview on WQKO news said he felt that the fireman of Albany shouldn't get equal pay with that city's policemen. The firemen have been calling for parity with the police as is the case in other cities. However in Albany there is another complication—whereas the police are predominantly Irish, the firemen are predominantly Italian.

Professor Jack Flat of the Illinois University chemistry announced on April 1 developments world which are of great importance to N.

Dr. Flat, through months of research, has observed a severe chemical change in rubber objects. Specifically, Dr. Flat has observed that because of the warm, past winter, the air trapped within tire objects such as waterbeds will eat away at the lining. The danger is in the blowout will probably occur, unless steps are taken to correct it. Dr. Flat recommends that the etc. be let out, and an ounce of deodorant intertube before refilling the tire. 3-Year Pro Gain

(CPS)—Although many gifted and hardworking students have long been able to graduate from their undergraduate college careers in less than four years, efforts are now being made nationwide to shorten the average time a student spends in college.

Several hundred schools already offer students ways to finish in less than four years, usually by taking summer courses and by "testing out" of courses for credit.

ARTICLE VI

JUDICIARY

I. STUDENT BILL OF RIGHTS.

A. Students detained or arrested in the course of a serious violation of institutional regulations, or infractions of ordinary law, shall be informed of their rights. No form of harassment shall be used by institutional representatives to coerce admissions of guilt or information about the conduct of other suspected persons.

B. The student shall be brought within the jurisdiction of a disciplinary body competent by authority to hear the case. No member of any hearing committee who is other wise interested in the particular case may sit in judgment during the proceedings.

C. The student shall be informed, in writing, of the reasons for the proposed disciplinary action with sufficient particularity, and in sufficient time to insure an opportunity to prepare for the hearing.

D. The student appearing before the court shall have the right to be assisted in his defense by an advisor of his choice.

E. The burden of proof shall rest upon the prosecution.

F. The student shall be given an opportunity to testify and to present witnesses. He shall have an opportunity to hear and question adverse witnesses. In no case shall the court consider statements against him unless he has been advised of their content and of the names of those who made the statements and unless he has been given an opportunity to rebut unfavorable inferences which might otherwise be drawn from the statements.

G. All matters upon which the decision is to be based must be introduced into evidence at the proceedings before the court. The decision shall be solely based upon such evidence, and improperly acquired evidence shall not be admitted into evidence before the court.

H. A digest of the hearing shall be maintained. Upon the request of any of the principles or the court, a verbatim record, such as a tape recording, must be provided.

I. The decision of the disciplinary body shall be subject to appeal of a higher body or authority. Each student has the right to appeal to the next higher court.

J. Pending action of the charges, the status of a student shall not be altered, or his rights to be present on the campus to attend classes, except when the student is charged with causing personal injury or destruction of property. The Dean of Men or the Dean of Women determines whether the student's presence on campus endangers his own physical or emotional safety or well-being or the safety and well-being of students, faculty or University property. If such extraordinary action is required before a trial, a hearing must take place within one week following such action, unless the student is physically not able to be present. In the event of a failure to hold a hearing and reach a decision within one week, the student shall be restored and reinstated with the full rights and privileges he enjoyed prior to the suspension.

II. SUPREME COURT.

The Supreme judicial authority of the Student Association shall rest in a Committee of 5 members of the S.A. elected by the S.A. It is the court of final jurisdiction and also the court to which decisions of lower courts may be appealed within a reasonable period of time not to exceed two months.

A. DECISIONS.

All decisions shall be a majority vote of the Supreme Court.

B. PENALTIES.

The Court may recommend any or all of the following penalties:

- Athletic restriction, that is exclusion from participation in intercollegiate and/or intramural sports activity for a given period of time.
- Social restriction, or exclusion from participating in all student social events as defined in "University Regulation for Students."
- Probation.
- The Court may recommend the penalty of suspension or dismissal to the Dean of Women or the Dean of Men.

C. REPORTS.

The Chairman of the Court shall report the action taken on each case to the Dean of Men or the Dean of Women within 24 hours of the decision.

D. ENFORCEMENT.

The offices of the Dean of Men and the Dean of Women shall be responsible for administering penalties imposed by the Court. In general, students subject to disciplinary action should receive counseling from an appropriate faculty member, Dean, or student chosen by the Court.

E. DELEGATION OF POWER.

The Court may delegate some of its jurisdiction to local court systems with the understanding that all are subject to this Constitution and may in no way directly refute it.

III. LOCAL COURTS.

IRA, Panhel, and Fraternity Forum may set up within their respective living units local courts and may set up an appellate court for the lower courts under their jurisdiction in accordance with the S.A. Constitution. These courts shall abide by the rights guaranteed the defendant as applicable in the clauses below and elsewhere in the S.A. Constitution.

A. Local courts shall be set up by the unit directly within its jurisdiction in a fair and equitable manner to administer justice as defined by the Student Bill of Rights, Section I, Article VI, of this Constitution.

B. Students shall be tried in the court of the living unit where the proposed offense occurred.

C. Officers shall be elected as prescribed in the Local Court's own rules of operating procedure.

D. RIGHT OF COUNSEL.

- The accused shall have at all times the right to procure a counsel to aid him in his defense. If he does not know of any who are qualified to practice, names will be furnished him, and from these the accused shall choose a counsel.
- The only qualification to practice will be that the counsel have a working knowledge of the law in the case being tried.

3. The accused shall be furnished with a copy of paragraph of the Article, including the Student Bill of Rights, and the names of those who are qualified to practice. He may choose one of these persons, who if available, may take this case, or if the chosen counsel is not available, he may choose another counsel, or he may choose to defend himself. If the accused wishes counsel and none can be found available, the trial will be postponed until counsel can be procured.

IV. RIGHTS OF THE ACCUSED.

When a person is accused of a chargeable offense, he will be notified, in writing, at least one week before the start of the trial. The accused will be notified, in writing, of charge(s) against him, the prosecuting witnesses, or, if there were no witnesses, information on how his alleged offense was reported and brought to the attention of the courts.

C. All referendums or general elections which submit issues to the S.A. shall require the presence of a quorum which will consist of at least five percent of the membership of the S.A.

ARTICLE XII ADOPTION AND APPROVAL

I. RATIFICATION.

This Constitution shall be considered ratified when acted upon favorably by a majority of a S.A. quorum as detailed in Article VIII of this Constitution.

II. REVIEW.

This Constitution and legislation enacted in pursuance thereof shall be presented to the President of the University for review.

III. EFFECTIVE DATE.

A. This Constitution shall be considered in effect when ratified by the members of the S.A., and approved by the President of the University, and the Board of Trustees of the University of Vermont.

B. Amendments to this Constitution will be considered in effect when amended according to the procedures established in Article XI of this Constitution.

IV. TRANSITION.

The existing officers, councilmen, and committee men of the S.A. shall continue in office until their successors take office in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution.

Raft Race Rules, Location, And Entry Blank

Entries in the Fourth Annual River Raft Race must conform to the following regulations:

CREW:

1. Minimum crew is four
2. Maximum crew is unlimited
3. To qualify for the mixed trophy, at least one crew member must be female

FLOATATION:

1. Nothing that was commercially constructed to be a boat, raft, pontoon or any part thereof may be used.
2. For safety sake, all rafts must be designed so that if they capsize they will still float upside down.

DECKING:

a. At least one unbroken section of deck must measure 36 square feet or larger. There is no maximum size, but each person must be allotted at least 6 square feet.

b. The unbroken sections must be 6 feet wide, at least.

c. The area shall be determined by measurement of the outside dimensions of the raft as viewed from above.

2. The deck must be capable of supporting crew members without capsizing.

3. The raft may have any number of decks, platforms, outriggers, etc., as long as one section satisfies the requirement above.

4. Floatation devices such as barrels, etc., may be counted as parts of the area of deck where they are continuous with the rest of it.

5. The areas measured need not be on the same level.

PROPELLSION:

1. Rafts may be propelled by anything run by hand, foot, body, wind, or current. No electrical engines or motors may be used.

POLES, PADDLES, OARLOCKS, and SAILS

MUST BE HANDMADE or improvised from something that was not commercially contrived or marketed to be a canoe paddle, oar, oarlock, or sail.

It is suggested that all rafts have some propulsion other than poles which enables them to move sideways in deep water to reach the bank at the end of the race.

CLEAN UP:

All crews are responsible for the removal of the raft and materials from the site of the race.

SAFETY:

1. All crew members of all rafts must be competent swimmers.

2. Life jackets or other floatation devices must be worn by all crew members. Due to water temperature, thermal underwear or wetsuits are recommended.

JUDGING:

Judging will be on a time basis over the length of the course.

LITTERING:

Any raft returning with substantially less litter or whose crew is seen littering during the race will be disqualified from all trophies.

7:30 PM

Buddy Guy -- Junior Wells
Blues Band

On April 14, 1972, Burlington, Vermont will be host to some of the greatest bluesmen who have ever lived. Gathering together such great bands as the Buddy Guy-Junior Wells Blues Band and the subtle sounds of the south. Son House, Arthur 'Big Boy' Crudup, Mississippi Fred McDowell, Robert Pete Williams, Bonnie Raitt, and more, the festival promises to be an electrifying experience. The festival will begin with afternoon workshops, to be held on the University of Vermont campus from 4 P.M. to 6 P.M., giving local musicians a chance to play with and to learn about the blues firsthand from these legendary men. Then at 7:30 P.M. the magic of their music will fill Burlington's Memorial Auditorium.

The festival, jointly sponsored by the University of Vermont Student Association Concert Bureau and the Community Media Project is a first for the eastern U.S. since the demise of the Newport and Ann Arbor festivals last year. There have not been any blues congregations of this magnitude, and it is doubtful that there will be any others during the remainder of this year.

Buddy Guy and Junior Wells (an eight piece blues band), who are heading up the list of performers, are now recording on the Atlantic label and have just finished an album with such attending personnel as Eric Clapton, Derek and the Dominos, Dr. John, Mick Jagger, The Dixie Flyers, and the J. Geils Band. Buddy Guy and Junior Wells represent some of the best of the 'Chicago' style blues players around today. Buddy Guy, who is often compared to Jimi Hendrix, is well known for "singing" large audiences. Son House, now 70 years old, has been called the "Father of the Folk Blues." His deep involvement with the blues is best appreciated through his rare live performances. This is to be one of only 4 he will make this year.

Arthur 'Big Boy' Crudup is one of the major blues writers in the U.S. today. Some of his songs being: "ROCK ME" recorded by Steppenwolf; "THAT'S ALRIGHT MANNA" recorded by Rod Stewart, Ten Years After and, Elvis Presley, on whom the influence of Arthur Crudup was very great.

Mississippi Fred McDowell, who has been playing the blues since the Twenties, combines a passionate style with a uniquely personal style of playing the guitar. He is one of the busiest of the bluesmen having played at the Newport festivals, Ann Arbor, Harvard and Boston University.

Robert Pete Williams is a totally unique bluesman. Almost everything he plays is off the cuff, stream of consciousness.

Bonnie Raitt, coming from a musical family (her father is John Raitt) has been greatly influenced by these great bluesmen, especially Son House and Mississippi Fred McDowell. She has a best selling album on the Warner Brothers label and has appeared at the Philadelphia Folk Festival, the Gaslight Cafe in N.Y. City and the Club 47 in Boston. She is considered one of the best female country blues singers around today.

On April 14, 1972, at 7:30 P.M. these people will bring their legendary music to the North country. Tickets for the festival to be held at Burlington's Memorial Auditorium are on sale for $3.50 at the door, or in advance at Bailey's Music Rooms, Church St., Burlington; The Upstairs Record Store, Church St., Burlington and the UVM Book Store, at $3.00 for UVM students.

34 Returning Lettermen

A Potent Offense Seen For Next Year

This year's edition of the University of Vermont football team is expected to be the strongest since Joe Scannella took over the helm three years ago. With 34 lettermen returning, in addition to a host of talented junior college transfers, the Catamount football picture could be a bright one in '72.

"We'll have more experience and considerably more depth than we have had the last two years. Undoubtedly, the strongest club in three years," said Scannella. And if certain key areas (offensive line and up the middle defensively) are filled, Vermont could be chasing perennial leaders, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts for the Bean Pot.

Offensively, every starter returns, in addition to Bill Rudkin, a 260 lb. tackle who missed the last eight games of the year with a shoulder injury, and a healthy Earl Olson, a heady quarterback who appears physically stronger than he has been in three years. Defensively, Scannella must find replacements for All-Yankee Conference performers, Charlie Russo (defensive tackle) and Fran Prondecki (middle linebacker). "We have to plug up the middle on defense. If we do, we'll improve on last year's record (2-7) and make a serious run at the YanCon leaders," said Scannella.

Although last year's record was an unimpressive 2-7, it is very misleading. Vermont opened last year's season with a convincing 20-7 win over Connecticut (eventual YanCon co-champions) and ran roughshod over Bucknell, only to lose in the last seconds, 10-6. Following Bucknell, the Cats were caught by a strong Lehigh team (49-8), and then lost tough games to Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Hofstra and Massachusetts, before upending Maine, 17-13. Vermont played its worst game of the year against Northeastern (42-7), the final game of the campaign.

The offense should be considerably stronger, simply because of experience. The backfield (Olson at QB, Gary VanDecar and Steve Coon at running backs and Peter Hicks at flanker) returns, along with loads of help: speedster Billy Looker at flanker, Barry Veen and Karl Daukas at running back.

The critical area will be the offensive line. Although everyone returns, there must be improvement. All-Yankee Conference tackle, Peter Trono, leads the way. Gay Reed, last year's captain, returns for one more year, while Bill Rudkin (260 lb.) is back after missing the last eight games with shoulder injury.

Receivers could be best contingent in the Conference, with tight end (All-YanCon selection), Tim Sullivan, Dan Leber, Billy Comstock and JC transfer, Tony Jones leading the way.

The defense is bolstered by a strong linebacking corps and a much-improved defensive secondary, the Cat defense will be stingy. Except for the Lehigh and Northeastern games, Vermont's defense was respectable - and sometimes great (Connecticut, Bucknell and Maine games).

Rich Rostowsky, Doug Bull and Johnny Thompson (JC transfer) lead the linebackers, while veterans Tom Nieradka, Larry Only, Henry Forques and Mark Delorme provide Scannella with a formidable defensive secondary.

Help must come in the middle of the defense line and linebacking group, as Vermont will sorely miss Charlie Russo and Fran Prondecki (both All-YanCon choices). John Hemphill, Gary Holtz, Tom Milliken, Mike Johns and Pat Dwyer should help up front, while Thompson, Glenn Martel, Stu Jones and Greg D'Auria will bolster the linebacking corps.

Alumni Return To Take On Varsity

Interest continues to mount for the second annual University of Vermont varsity-alumni football game, scheduled for May 6 (2 p.m.) at Centennial Field, marking the official end of the two-week spring football season for the Catamounts.

The alumni roster continues to grow, and the two alumni squad coaches, "Rusty" Brink (All-New England linebacker in 1965) and Bob Mitchell (All-America halfback in 1966), expect the alumni roster to swell to over 60 players by the week of the game.

Over 70 candidates are expected to report to the University's spring football camp, led by co-captains Wayne Bulman and Rich Rostowsky. "This will be our biggest squad since I came here three years ago and it could turn out to be our best, by far," said head coach Joe Scannella, who is preparing to head to the University of Tennessee this weekend to study the famous Volunteer defense. Vols coach Bill Battle invited Scannella and three members of his staff, Mike Murphy, Charlie Parker and Carl Faltene to attend their spring sessions in Knoxville.

Spring practice for Vermont begins April 17 and concludes with the alumni-varsity game, May 6.

It was just announced that the St. Albans Rotary will sponsor a Vermont intersquad game, April 29, at the B.F.A. high school field beginning at 8 p.m. More details on this Green-White will be announced at a later date. Some of the top alumni stars expected to play in the May 6 game include Brink, Mitchell, Scott Fitz (star quarterback in the mid-60's), Joe Doldano (All-Yankee Conference defensive tackle in 1965 and 1966), Fran Peterson (All-Yankee Conference quarterback in 1969) and Fran Prondecki (last year's lone choice on the first-team All-YanCon squad). More top alumni names will be announced during the next four weeks.

The game is sponsored by the University's Centennial Club.

Catalina Club Presents Water Ballet

Do you know what a "reverse catalina" with a 360 degree spin is? How about an "eiffel tower" or a "torpedo" or a "thread the needle"? There are not new terms for a new sport but specific stunts in one of the more challenging of the creative arts, water ballet.

What is "water ballet"? Water ballet is exactly what you think it is, a little known facet of the U.V.M. campus that very few people know exists. Water ballet at the U.V.M. is the "Catalina Club". The Catalina Club has over 20 members and an over-patient coach in the person of Miss Holly Carroll. The Catalina Club is the present holder of the Eastern Intercollegiate Synchronized Swimming Championship which they captured last year in Albany, New York after defeating 14 other colleges and universities from the Eastern United States.

It is once again time for the Catalina Club to present their annual swim show at Forbush Pool April 6, 7, and 8 at 8:00 p.m., with a matinee at 2:00 p.m., April 8, 1972.

The show this year, entitled "Catalina Chronicle" is going to be the club's exhibition of the talents they have acquired during the past two semesters during their practices of from 5 to 10 hours a week. The "Catalina Chronicle" is a new paper come to life. Some of the various "syndicated" articles will be "Gilbert the Ladies" a comic strip. The ladies' section will be a performance by four young ladies in their new summer attire. One of Broadway's greatest sensations, "Fiddler on the Roof" will be performed before it returns to the New York area. A reenactment of the Roman chariot races will be performed by Lynn Williams, who was a Canadian National Champion runner up in synchronized swimming. Because of the demand for their performance it has been

by S. G. T. Callihan

The time of the year has come that all experienced UVM students have dreaded since the day of Ira Allen. That season of the year when all of us must either sink or swim. I speak not of scholastic endeavors, most know they're sinking, but rather the horrible monster known to most of us as THE SPRING THAW.

To veterans of UVM, this is a memorable time of the year. Famous landmarks reappear such as Lake Willis and rising majestically from the center of this veritable ocean is Willis Isle (at the present time towering over its surroundings). This spectacle may be viewed any warm day in the spring or after a mild monsoon in the fall. This sight may not be with us long. After some tests performed by the UVM Geology Department, it was learned Willis Isle is sinking slowly into the mud.

This year a new leviathan has emerged and raised its ugly head above the muck and mire. This monster has been rising slowly for the past two years but only this year was it ready to begin its dastardly work. This creature is normally found lurking about Cook Lake and has been affectionately given the name of THE COOK LAKE MONSTER. This beast is hated by all those taking Chemistry, Physics, and Computer Math, but most especially by Organic Chemistry students.

Aside from bringing out these points of interest, students have another great affection for the spring thaw. It is a well known fact the members of the UVM community just thrill to the prospect of wallowing in the mud, enjoying its goopy texture as it alithers about their ankles as they walk to and from classes. Each spring several students are lost when they trustingly step from their dorms and are swallowed up by the mud, never more to be seen.

At this time I would like to end this story and request that you spend a moment in silent reflection upon those poor lost souls, and pray (especially you freshmen) that you will not be the next to go.

WHY WOULD A WOMAN AT UVM WANT TO TAKE ROTC?

She probably wouldn't. But she might be interested in taking some courses with ROTC students. Military affairs are certainly important to all of us, so why shouldn't the UVM coed enroll in one or two of the following courses to be offered in 72/73 by the Department of Military Studies?

MS 1 Introduction to Military Studies. Fall Semester. Relationship of war to society; impact of technology on warfare; role of logistics and administration. Political, social, economic factors making up current military power. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 2 U.S. Defense Establishment. Spring Semester. Organization of Department of Defense. Process of formulating national security policy. Impact of economic factors on the decision making process. Case studies of current issues affecting national security. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 12 Contemporary World Military Scene. Spring Semester. Seminar on current international use of military forces, viewed against a background of long-range national concerns, especially of U.S., Western European countries, U.S.S.R., China. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

Don't expect to find drill, or marksmanship, or first aid in these courses. Don't expect to be reading Field Manuals. Do expect to find provocative questions raised by the faculty and by the commercial texts to be used, such as Military Power and Potential by Knorr; How to Control the Military by Galbraith; Defense Strategies for the Seventies by Halperin; and others.

If you are interested in more information or a complete listing of courses for next year, drop by the Department of Military Studies or call 862-2988. Currently there are four, non-ROTC men taking our course, Wars of Revolution. We hope many more men and women will consider Military Studies courses during pre-enrollment, March 17-April 14.

UVM To For Slavic

by Jeff Yacker

The University of Vermont will be host later this month to some of the nation's most prestigious scholars of Slavic studies. On April 27, 28 and 29, the Northeastern Slavic Conference of the American Association For The Advancement of Slavic Studies will hold its annual conference at UVM.

The Northeastern Slavic Conference includes academicians in the history, language, literature, politics, economics and culture of the Slavic peoples and nations of Eastern Europe: the Soviet Union, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia. The people attending the UVM conference will be coming from Harvard, Princeton, Yale and a host of other institutions of higher learning in the northeastern United States.

UVM Professor James Pacy of Political Science is Arrangements' Chairman for the three-day meeting. Other UVM faculty working on this are Professors L.A.D. Delin of Economics, Stanislaw Starow of Political Science and Robert V. Daniels of History. Professor Daniels is presently President of the Northeast Slavic Conference, and is recognized as one of the leading authorities in the United States on the Soviet Union.

Along with getting English phrases translated into Serbo-Croatian, the professors have arranged the following program of seminars, discussions for the conference Thursday, April 27. Registration beginning 2:00 PM, Billings Center. Keynote Address - Henry

Betty Furness Outlines Various Problems Facing Consumers

by Jeff Yacker

Betty Furness, former assistant for consumer affairs under President Johnson, spoke at UVM last Thursday on some of the problems of consumers today. The main problem for consumers is that we are "notably slow" in finding out about ourselves in relation to the sales industry. Once known as the United States' most famous sales lady, Miss Furness served as the official champion of the American consumer under the Johnson Administration from March, 1967 until January, 1969. In August of 1970 Miss Furness was appointed by Governor Nelson Rockefeller as Chairman and Executive Director of New York State's Consumer Protection Board; however, she resigned the post in July, 1971 when indications showed that her work was fruitless because the legislature was not acting on any of her suggestions and had drastically cut her budget. She continues her work for the consumer as a member of the Board of Directors of the Consumers Union. She is also a member of the Advisory Council to the Senate Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs. Vice-Chairman of National Committee on Tax Justice and Vice-Chairman of the Citizens Committee for Postal Reform. Up to recently, consumer affairs were looked at as an insignificant, "part of some college home-ec course." Generations ago, the friendly grocery store only carried a couple hundred items and could be counted on to give us the best buy, "we had grown up secure that somebody, somewhere was looking out for us." But today, it is a totally different baguette. The average grocery store has over 8,000 items to pick and choose from and even the most dutiful housewife doesn't know what is in everything that she feeds her family. In the "consumer game" we have such inconsistencies as the "king size" not being the largest size, and the largest size not being the best buy" as in the case of differing prices per quart of different size Coca-Cola bottles. In the aspect Miss Furness said "Congratulations" to the State of Vermont for just passing a unit pricing law the day before. This law will require large food stores to carry on their price labels the price per certain unit of the product, such as the price per quart of Coke for the differing size bottles.

Approaching the subject of consumer complaints, the point to start at is where the product came from, such as the stores. If that does not work, write to the President of the company or the Chairman of the Board of Directors, not to "the computer in charge of complaints." In the case of boycotts, it is necessary to "tell the person across the counter our complaints" in order to get a better product and not just a barrage of more advertising. Miss Furness emphasized that if "our money is good, then we have a right to expect the product to be good also." But it is necessary to complain because business will not police itself, "business is in business to stay in business." One of the greatest problems of consumer affairs is that it

Dr. Spock Forsakes Diaper Care And Runs For The Presidency

by Jim Judd

On Thursday April 6 Benjamin Spock, the noted child psychologist, spoke before students and faculty members of the university, in his Allen Chapel. Dr. Spock's speech was concerned mainly with his candidacy for president and the Peoples Party of the United States, and the Liberty Union Party in Vermont. He started his speech with a brief history of his political philosophy, and some of his past political actions. One of his first dealings with politics was when he cast his first vote in 1924 for Calvin Coolidge. Who, according to Spock, was the best man for the job at the time. He stated that he later became a New Deal Democrat, his first move towards liberalism. In 1960 Spock still considered himself a hawk and was in support of the war. However in 1962 he became U.S. has ever fought." He also said that the "Vietnam war is an obvious example of what our government has been up to for years." He feels that the U.S. is one of the most imperialistic countries in the world. He cited examples of this with the Mexican War which was fought so that we could gain land interests in Mexico; also under Eisenhower the CIA's overthrow of the Abenda government in Guatemala, to protect the land interests of the United Fruit Company, even though this company owned most of the land and this denied the people of Guatemala income from farming. Our imperialistic nature is shown in the fact that we have over 2,000 military bases in over 30 foreign countries, this Spock believes is part of our plan to dominate world power.

Dr. Spock said he also believed that even though the U.S. is one of the wealthiest and most advanced countries in the world, that it has some of the most serious medical, educational, and pollution problems of any country in the world. Spock said that with our advanced medical technology American people should be receiving the best medical care, but that we rank between 10th and 20th for the worst medical care per person in the world. He believes our educational system could be one of the best, but that people in America receive substandard education, because of our traditional teaching methods. He also stated that our pollution problem is correlated back to the large governmental parties in power. He gave the example of the Democratic party, it is now $9 million in debt from the last election, and the money to pay this debt will come from large industries. So naturally the party won't pass any legislation on pollution—that would inconvenience these industries. Spock said that the political power in this country is in the hands of people who are concerned with maximum profits, and that the war is paid for through cutbacks in welfare, education and medical care. When asked what he hoped to achieve through running for President on the Peoples Party ticket, he replied that he hopes to radicalize people. He wants to build a movement that would get people active in their local government, and in their neighborhood. He said that we don't expect to get a lot of votes, but we do want to make people aware of the fact that there is a better way to run the government. He was also asked why he wasn't supporting McGovern, his answer was that "Why should we kid ourselves, one man can't change the Democratic Party and the attitudes of the country," that's why he feels we need a new movement on all levels of

At this point Spock presented the planks to the Peoples Party Platform, he said the nature of this platform is such, because times are getting more and more desperate and something must be done soon. They are as follows:

1. Immediate withdrawal of our armed forces around the world.
2. A minimal income of $6,500 for a family of four.
3. Free good quality medical care.
4. Absolute end to sexism, abolish laws that discriminate against women, and homosexuals, also there should be no laws where there is no violation, as in the case of abortion, and marijuana using.
5. End to Racism.
6. Human beings must gain control of institutions that run their lives, examples of this would be that neighborhoods

UVM To Host Conference For Slavic Studies April 27-29

by Jeff Yacker

The University of Vermont will be host later this month to some of the nation's most prestigious scholars of Slavic studies. On April 27, 28 and 29, the Northeastern Slavic Conference of the American Association For The Advancement of Slavic Studies will hold its annual conference at UVM.

The Northeastern Slavic Conference includes academicians in the history, language, literature, politics, economics and culture of the Slavic peoples and nations of Eastern Europe: the Soviet Union, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia. The people attending the UVM conference will be coming from Harvard, Princeton, Yale and a host of other institutions of higher learning in the northeastern United States.

UVM Professor James Pacy of Political Science is Arrangements' Chairman for the three-day meeting. Other UVM faculty working on this are Professors L.A.D. Dellin of Economics, Stanislaw Staron of Political Science and Robert V. Daniels of History. Professor Daniels is presently President of the Northeast Slavic Conference, and is recognized as one of the leading authorities in the United States on the Soviet Union.

Along with getting English phrases translated into Serbo-Croatian, the professors have arranged the following program of seminars and discussions for the conference: Thursday, April 27 Registration beginning 2:00 PM, Billings Center. Keynote Address—Henry

Parenti Affair Lies Dormant At UVM, Receives National Magazine Coverage And Attention

by Jim Judd

As the Michael Parenti case receives national coverage in Time magazine and the Chronicle of Higher Education, his case appears to have quieted down at the University. But actually even though the name Michael Parenti isn't buzzing at UVM, things are being done to help him in the defense of his case. Extensive efforts to raise money to maintain Prof. Parenti's livelihood here are being taken; one of the first steps taken to aid his case was the formation of the Thomas Jefferson Chair fund. This chair is being funded by U.V.M. faculty pledges, and at this point various foundations have been contacted for assistance. Will Miller, Trustee of the Thomas Jefferson Chair, has stated that any and all student contributions would be greatly appreciated. There has been fund raising for the defense of Michael Parenti at over twenty colleges and Universities throughout the country. Among these are Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Wisconsin, Michigan, University of Washington in Seattle, and Washington University.

Other support for Prof. Parenti has come from the American Civil Liberties Union and its Vermont affiliate, when they stated that they would give their full support to Prof. Parenti, and that his case would be taken up at the Appellate level.

In a statement released by the Academic Freedom Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union and the Vermont affiliate, it is stated "that the decision of the Board of Trustees not to renew the contract of Professor Parenti for reasons stated in the Trustees' letter of December 21, 1971, is a clear violation of his constitutional rights, and the concept of academic freedom and responsibility to which the University has itself subscribed."

The statement goes on to say, "In principle, all persons are entitled to full freedom of political expression, without jeopardizing the right to practice a profession, skill or art, or to gain or hold employment. This right of free expression, however, must be particularly affirmed in the case of teachers, the essential nature of whose work involves them with consideration and expression of ideas...Because educational institutions are governed by political bodies more responsive, especially in times of crisis, to views and influences hostile to the expression of new or dissenting ideas, teachers are more likely than others to find their employment rights jeopardized by the form or substance of their political expression."

Citing Section 312 of the University Officers Handbook of the University of Vermont, "Academic freedom is not solely a right or privilege of the faculty but is the fulfillment of the obligation on the part of the University to provide an atmosphere in which intellectual growth may take place" and section 314 in which the "responsibility of the University to defend tenaciously the right of its members to think and express their thoughts freely, including the right of dissent, is clearly stated," the ACLU calls the nonrenewal of Parenti's contract a "serious charge."

In refuting the reasons that the board of Trustees gave for Parenti's nonrenewal, i.e., the carrying of a Viet Cong flag during a student anti-war demonstration in Burlington, the verbal exchange between Professor Parenti and a student who had destroyed a political poster, the qualification of his oath of office, the signing of a petition critical of activities of the government in many areas, and the striking of a police officer during a student demonstration at the University of Illinois, the statement says "not only have Professor Parenti's First Amendment rights of free speech and assembly been violated, but he has been denied equal protection of the law, in that limitations have been placed upon his academic freedom which have not been imposed upon other faculty."

The American Civil Liberties Union is also concerned with the "absence of procedural process in this matter. The American Civil Liberties Union has long taken the position that the principles embodied in the legal concept of confrontation of witnesses and examination of evidence should govern academic due

UVM Student English School

This spring, some 30 University of Vermont students will visit and study the English school system. The course, Education 292A—Seminar: Abroad: Education in England, is designed primarily to offer students something more than the usual "study abroad" program. In addition to the usual visits to places of local interest, this program offers an opportunity for each student to relate his professional needs, interests, goals and aspirations to a specific educational program. In this case, the students will have the opportunity to visit many areas of cultural and personal interest but, in addition, will live with a family in England and work as a paraprofessional in one or more of the host nation's schools.

This year the students will be affiliated with either Maria Grey College in Twickenham,

Educational Theme Of National Conference

Program To Aid In Foreign

Senior or graduate students who are considering attending a recognized medical school overseas for the Fall 1972 session, will be interested in the announcement by European Medical Students Placement Service, Inc. of Albertson, N.Y., of their comprehensive program to aid and assist a limited number of qualified students to secure admission and achieve successful adaptation to a recognized European medical school.

Their comprehensive program consists of the following:

- 1) Intensive 8 week orientation course, attended with other American Students to help the student adapt to the new country, culture and school environment.
- 2) Intensive 8 week practical and language course programmed for the American Student entering a European medical school. It has been found that regular domestic language courses do not meet the total need of the medical student.

UVM Students To Study English School System

This spring, some 30 University of Vermont students will visit and study the English school system. The course, Education 292A—Seminar Abroad—Education in England, is designed primarily to offer students something more than the usual "study abroad" program. In addition to the usual visits to places of local interest, this program offers an opportunity for each student to relate his professional needs, interests, goals and aspirations to a specific educational program. In this case, the students will have the opportunity to visit many areas of cultural and personal interest but, in addition, will live with a family in England and work as a paraprofessional in one of the schools of the host nation's schools.

This year the students will be affiliated with either Maria Grey College in Twickenham, Middlesex, on the outskirts of London, or with St. Paul's College in Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, about 100 miles west of London in Cotswolds.

The course offering carries 6 credits at the graduate or undergraduate level. About 21 students are presently enrolled with room for 10 more. The approximate cost is $570.00 and includes round trip airfare, room and board and tuition. Tentative departure date from Boston is May 30, 1972. We will be in England for some 5 weeks with about 10-12 days at the end for free time travel before our return on July 5, 1972.

Anyone interested in applying or seeking more information should contact Dr. Alan H. Wheeler or Deane Flood at the International Education Programs office, 2 Colchester Avenue, Burlington, Vermont or phone 656-2946.

OVP Summer Opportunities

Spring vacation time is when we all begin to think about our immediate future in terms of summer jobs. If you will be in the Burlington area this summer, keep OVP in mind. The schedule of a summer job will sometimes leave mornings, afternoons, evenings, or weekends free, and there are many agencies that need your help. Volunteering is as important during the summer as during the school year: the environment is just as polluted, delinquency is just as prevalent, and the elderly are just as lonely as during the winter.

OVP will be operating full-time this summer in an effort to conduct its projects on a continuous basis: human need is a constant. What a great chance to meet people, become aware, and become involved! It doesn't need to take much time.

If there are enough interested volunteers, one dorm will remain open for our use this summer. Volunteers will be able to live there at a very low cost. They must be spending some time with their project in order to be eligible, however. But we must know of your interest soon—we cannot use the dorm if we cannot fill it!

Along these same lines: there is the possibility of establishing an ACTION Dorm for next year. Volunteers will live in it, and it will contain special areas for project work, seminars, meetings, and recreation. Again, we have to show some interest now if this is to become a reality. We have to guarantee a full dorm in order to reserve it for OVP. Interested? Come up soon!

We are in special need of office staff who may be interested in remaining with us next fall; several of our present staff are graduating. Of immediate importance are the positions of treasurer and publicity coordinator. And summer recreation projects for area children are currently in the planning stages. Don't forget us when summer comes—we need you!

Educational Planning Is Theme Of National Conference

The National Conference of Professors of Educational Administration will conduct its 26th conference August 20-26 at the University of Vermont, bringing some 150 educators and administrators with their families, from colleges of education throughout the U.S. to the UVM campus to study educational planning, the conference theme.

The educators, who also will include some principals and superintendents, will meet in Vermont for the first time since the organization was formed in 1947.

Their host at the University will be Prof. Robert L. Larson of the UVM College of Education.

The August program will include seminars and workshops on educational planning, lectures by guest speakers, and "interest research groups" on such topics as organizational behavior, "futuristics," and simulation training.

ETV Highlights

Librarian Janice Byington and teacher Joan Simmons tell about the Dorothy Canfield Fisher Book Awards on "Vermont School Report" Monday (April 17) at 7:30 p.m., on Vermont ETV. They'll be joined by Amory Smith of Burlington High School, who'll tell about the statewide continuing education program.

Should the press be prohibited from publishing classified material? "The Advocates" focus on the question Tuesday (April 18) at 8:30 p.m.

"Action for Survival" looks at the question of world population Wednesday (April 19) at 7:30 p.m. How many humans can the world hold? How many children should a couple have? What are the new quality-of-life standards?

In 1954 the Supreme Court declared that separate but equal school facilities are unconstitutional under the Fourteenth Amendment. "With All Deliberate Speed," Thursday (April 20) at 7:30 p.m., examines the busing issue in Pontiac, Michigan, where buses were blown up last summer by members of groups opposing the decision to bus children to achieve racial balance in the schools.

David Littlejohn and his wife Sheila read the works of tormented poet Sylvia Plath on "Critic at Large" Friday (April 21) at 7:15 p.m. They interpret the meaning of "Lady Lazarus," from her final volume, "Ariel," published shortly before she took her own life at 30.

Program To Assist Americans In Foreign Medical Schools

Senior or graduate students who are considering attending a recognized medical school overseas for the Fall 1972 session, will be interested in the announcement by European Medical Students Placement Service, Inc., of their comprehensive program to aid and assist a limited number of qualified students to secure admission and achieve successful adaptation to a recognized European medical school.

Their comprehensive program consists of the following:

- 1) Intensive 8 week orientation course, attended with other American Students, to help the student adapt to the new country, culture and school environment.
- 2) Intensive 8 week special practical and language course, programmed for the American Student entering a European medical school. It has been found that regular domestic language courses do not serve the total need of the medical school student.

There are many other services available, outlined in a brochure available from European Medical Students Placement Service, Inc.

Students who will have received their degree on or before June 1972, can write for an application form and brochure to:

European Medical Students Placement Service, Inc., 3 McKinley Avenue, Albertson, N.Y. 11507

There is no charge for application form and subsequent interview.

Professor Robert Huber, Director Of UVM Forensics, Receives Distinguished Alumni Award

The University of Vermont's Director of Forensics for the past 22 years, Prof. Robert B. Huber, has been honored with a Distinguished Alumni Award by the national debate honorary society, Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha.

His selection for one of the most prestigious awards in forensics came as a complete surprise at the society's recent meeting in Albuquerque, N.M. Dr. Huber is a member of the selection committee for the award, and the four other committee members selected him in secret and presented the award without warning.

His citation, delivered by the incoming president of the society, Dr. Nicholas M. Cripe, noted that "Dr. Huber came to the University of Vermont in 1946 as chairman of its new and very small speech department; when he gave up the chairmanship in 1966 to become the first Lawrence Professor of Forensics at the University, the Department of Speech had become one of the largest and best-known departments of the University and one of the finest speech departments in the East."

Dr. Cripe, who is chairman of the department of speech at Butler University in Indianapolis, added that in addition to his contribution to UVM, Dr. Huber has given "many years of distinguished service to speech and Forensics."

"He has been president of the New England Speech Association, the Speech Association of Eastern States, the American Forensic Association, and was the first president of the Vermont Speech and Hearing Association."

"He has been a member of the Executive and Legislative Councils of the Speech Association of America. He is former governor of the Midwest and Northeastern Regions of Tau Kappa Alpha and was national vice president at the time of the merger with Delta Sigma Rho. He is presently Chairman of the Distinguished Alumni Committee and national treasurer of Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha."

The citation goes on to review Dr. Huber's career as a debate coach, and "for a lifetime of coaching dedicated to the ideal that debating should be intelligent, responsible, and effective speaking."

"It can be said truthfully," Dr. Cripe concluded, "that the University of Vermont is a better university because Dr. Huber has been there, that Delta Sigma Rho is a better fraternity because Bob Huber has served it so loyally so long, that inter-collegiate debate is a better activity because Dr. Huber has coached so many teams so well."

Professor Huber earned his bachelor's degree at Manchester (Ind.) College, his master's at the University of Michigan and in 1942, his Ph.D. in speech at the University of Wisconsin.

His Distinguished Alumni Award is presented annually to men and women who debated when students at member colleges.

Recipients during recent years have included Theodore C. Sorenson, Edmund Muskie, and U. Alex Johnson.

VPIRG Board Names Skinner As Director

After reviewing more than seventy resumes, the Board of Trustees of the Vermont Public Interest Research Group has hired Scott MacGregor Skinner of New York as the director of the public rights' advocate group. Formerly with the Connecticut Citizen Action Group, Skinner will officially begin work on May 1, 1972.

Born on May 31, 1942, Skinner was raised in Troy, Pennsylvania. He is married to Mary Just, an attorney with the South Bronx Legal Services.

His educational background includes a year at Clifton College in England, a B.A. degree in three years from Dartmouth College, and a J.D. degree from the Columbia University School of Law.

Skinner is a member of the New York State Bar, the New York Civil Liberties Union, Friends of the Earth, and the Natural Resources Defense Council (Cooperating Attorney).

The new director's work experience includes three years with the Peace Corps in Nepal and three years with the Institute of Public Administration in New York City.

While in the Peace Corps from 1964 to 1966, Skinner taught English to high school students and adults. In addition, he advised on public health projects.

During his years with the Institute of Public Administration, Skinner worked as an Assistant Counsel on the Institute's project as Group. He also worked as the Director of the Environmental Legal project, which is a part of CCAG but is funded separately by the citizens of Greenwich, Connecticut.

While with CCAG, Skinner drafted legislation, worked with the citizen's lobby, made hearing appearances, and delivered over thirty speeches to local organizations.

In Greenwich, the new director assisted the local environment groups through coordination and resources. He compiled data which resulted in a state order against a local incinerator. He also gave a testimony credited with defeating a request by the Peabody Central Railroad for exemption from the state low sulfur fuel regulations.

From August, 1971 until this month, Skinner worked as the southern Connecticut representative of the Connecticut Citizen Action

Editorial Gutterson Needs Money

It may be Spring at UVM, but as far as the Student Association could be concerned, it might as well be winter.

Before this semester ends, the SA, hopefully, will have voted upon a motion to help pay the costs for possible renovation of Gutterson Field House, home of UVM's hockey team.

The SA financial committee is presently reviewing a recommendation by the Senate executive board for funding of such renovation. The proposal, subject to possible amendments, calls for funding to be divided into three components:

-The SA, over a ten year period, will contribute $24,000.

-The University, over the same period, will be responsible for $24,000.

-Sigma Nu will be responsible for a fund raising drive for $24,000.

This amount will pay the costs of installing plexiglass around the rink, and creation of an oval seating arrangement, where all spectators will be able to see the game without any trouble.

We like the executive board's motion, and hope at least something similar to it will be recommended by the financial committee to the Senate. Then, we strongly urge our representatives to pass the proposal without delay.

"SOMETHING I PICKED UP FROM THE CHINESE—THEY CALL IT ACUPUNCTURE!"

For Life's Necessities, Dial "O"

Not since the mail-order trade business have we been able to buy so much without ever leaving our homes. We can get anything via the Bell phone. We can register for college, feed a feast to 17 hungry, have our rugs cleaned, have our cars sprayed, furnish our classrooms and even visit our mothers—all by letting our fingers do the talking and our mouths do the listening. And if you can't do that, you just call a number and they'll send out someone who can.

Last Saturday, I went downtown to a large department store and found that the place was more barren than Palm Springs in July. I told the manager I was sorry that business was so bad.

"Bull!" he bellowed. "Business has never been better. We've never sold more. It's just that everybody's ordering everything over the phone."

He led me to a room crowded with hundreds of ladies wearing telephone headsets over their hair and cauliflower ears. It looked like a joint convention of the League of Women Voters, Hadassah and the DAR. I walked around and listened.

"Yes, Mrs. Slotnick. We'll send out your artificial resuscitator this afternoon. Will someone be home to accept delivery?"

"I'm sorry, Ma'am, but we have a $5 minimum purchase on deliveries. Now if you add a loaf of bread and some cheese to your salmon..."

Then the manager took me to the fortress in the next room where the delivery boys were lined up against the wall waiting for their assignments.

"Jimmy Slocum!" the manager called. "Yes, Sir!" he said, clicking his heels together and stepping forward for his mission.

"Slocum, scoot up to lingerie and get two 36-Cross-Your-Hearts for Mrs. Scott on 1989 Lilac Lane, 44307."

"Yes, Sir!" he clicked and off he went to lingerie.

"What about the rest of the store," I asked the manager. "Nobody's here."

"We just keep the store open for tax purposes," he explains. "It looks good. I mean, we aren't in the mail order business."

"I'm looking for a pair of jockey shorts," I whispered. "Where can I find someone to help me?"

"I told me to wait and called out pretty Miss Smythe from the phone room."

"Oh," Miss Smythe said. "May I help you?"

"Yeah, I'd like a pair of, um, jockey shorts."

"Oh," she said, looking befuddled. "Well, let me see. Our jockey shorts are in on sixth floor..."

"No, no, no," I said. "Jockey shorts...underpants. Where's your men's underwear department?"

"Gee...I don't know," she said and then smiled. "Why don't you trot across the street to the pay phone and call me and I can have them delivered to you there. I'm not sure how to do it any other way. You can charge it."

"I don't have a charge account here. I wanted to pay cash."

"Cash? Oh, you mean like money," she beamed.

"Yes. Sort of like money."

"This is highly irregular. I don't think we deal in cash here." She paused. "Say, why don't you just shoplift the underwear? Our insurance will cover it."

"Listen, Miss Smythe. Where can I open a charge account?"

"At the phone booth across the street."

"Thanks, Miss Smythe," I said, and began to walk away. "Say, can you tell me where the restroom is?"

"Gee," she said. "You can have that delivered, too. And charge it, of course."

I thanked pretty young Miss Smythe again and walked across the street. There was a line 700 feet long waiting to get into the phone booth. I overheard a lady talking on the phone.

"Could you send over a ham on rye—lay low in the mayo—with garnish and a pickle? Just charge it to my account. I'm the lady in the chauffeur dress."

Finally, it was my turn. "Could you please send over two pairs of jockey shorts, size 32. I'm the one with the worn out underwear on. And—oh, yes—could you also send over Miss Smythe, about a size 6, I think."

I now do all my shopping by phone.

A Look At Another Food Service Program

Storrs, Conn. - (L.P.) - When it comes to student-operated food services, undergraduates at the University of Connecticut are writing the book for the whole nation. The Associated Student Commisaries (ASC) was organized about a year ago, and recently, President Michael Duane reports that the $2.5 million-a-year operation appears to be in for a bright future.

Mr. Duane, a junior, heads the non-profit corporation which provides about 2,000 meals annually for more than 4,000 students. The ASC operates this way:

Undergraduates in 58 dormitories delegate the management of their kitchens to the ASC which hires a chef, buys the food, provides dietary supervision, insures quality control, maintains records and trains food handlers.

Students pay from $220 to $310 each semester for food services. For these prices, students receive three meals a day, five days a week, plus between-meal snacks. The ASC's units usually pay the smaller amounts - the girls don't eat as much as the men," quipped Mr. Duane. Kent Banning, coordinator of the University dining halls, reports that the ASC units provide well-balanced meals, high in nutritional value. What's more, he says, students receive very generous portions - with seconds or thirds for most items.

Mr. Banning, who gives a helping hand to the ASC, noted that nutritional experts on the faculty of the School of Home Economics serve as consultants to the ASC to plan wholesome menus.

Mr. Banning also noted that the ASC buys quantities of steak, lobster, roast beef, turkey and other dietary mainstays. At the same time, however, a liberal amount of hamburger and hot dogs also are on the ASC menu because "that's what the students want."

This bulk buying - of both food and supplies - actually saves money for each of the dining units, says Mr. Duane. He also notes savings result from centralized accounting day, five days a week, and the investment between-meal snacks. The ASC's units usually pay the smaller amounts - the girls

Under terms of the ASC constitution, the organization consists of individual housing units which select one representative for the ASC governing council. The Council is served by a Board of Directors - which actually handles the ASC operations. The president receives a $1,000 stipend, the treasurer $500, and board members, $50 per semester.

Virtually all of Mr. Duane's spare time is spent in the ASC office, or on the circuit communicating with stewards, assistant stewards, chefs, and others in the various dormitory kitchens.

The ASC hires its own professional personnel, including purchasing officer, E.W. Graffam. It employs a total of 140 full-time and 700 part-time workers. Though on paper, the ASC might appear to be a cold "big business" kind of operation not responsive to the individual student, nothing could be further from the truth.

Each residential unit has control over its own menus and if the students don't like the fare - they change it.

Letters Minority Students Needed At UVM

To the Editor: In the past few years the University of Vermont has been accepting members of minority groups into its student population. At the present moment the percentage of minority students is less than one percent. The number is increasing, but at a slow pace.

I feel that having a large number of minority students is beneficial for the White students who never met Blacks or Latins until they came to UVM. I'm sure there are many such students. Sure, they've seen Blacks or Latins on T.V., or in pictures.

But have they talked to them? Do they know them from within? Have they ever dated a Black, or Latin American?

I feel college life is supposed to educate a person not only by classroom teaching, but also through social communication. Here at UVM, the social scene is bad, especially with the relationship between the minority students and whites.

The fault does not lie in any of these two groups. I think it's because of the small number of minority students. For example, at the present moment there are only three Puerto Ricans. Now, how is it possible for about 7,500 students that are mainly white, to get to know how Puerto Ricans really are if there are only three on campus?

I think it's time for the University to cut the jive and start accepting larger numbers of minority students. I am a member of the minority group.

I'm Puerto Rican!

Wants Environmental Study Conducted On Jug-handle

To The Editor: Doctor Andrew, President of the University of Vermont, 345 Waterman Hall, Burlington, Vermont 05401

Dear Doctor Andrew: As a student of the University of Vermont, I strongly urge you to ask the Board of Trustees to further discuss the donation of University of Vermont land to the City of Burlington.

I believe that by donating the land, the University is facilitating the construction of Project UO28-24. I do understand that the Spear Street area is plagued with traffic congestion but I do not believe the present plan is the solution.

Before any final decision is made, I believe that the State Environmental Board should be brought in to determine the environmental impact of the construction. The construction with Act 250 and 251.

The Board of Trustees is constantly forced to consider the financial aspect of their agreements. I therefore urge them to look at the situation from the following point of view. Perhaps it would be more beneficial for the University to hold onto the land in case of financial trouble in the future.

Thank you.
Sincerely,
Patti O'Brien

Twenty-one Years Ago

What was happening here... 21 YEARS AGO

During this week, in 1951, student Clark Hinsdale was elected president for the University's Student Association. In his statement to the Vermont Cynic, the new president said: "I will continue the effort to bring the student and faculty closer together and make UVM and the UVM community a better place to live..." (Do these words sound familiar?)

Ide LaMotte was selected as the site of the fifth annual amphibious landing of the Army ROTC, after a daytime reconnaissance conducted in that area...

When The Faculty Goes To Court..

Dear Editor: Once upon a time there was a small middle class university whose faculty was greatly oppressed by a fascist board of trustees. One day one of the less middle of the middle class faculty was fired for being not so middle by the fascist board of trustees. There arose among the faculty an outcry of protest and the board of trustees was taken to court.

There an old very middle class judge told the board never to do it again, and to kindly retire the plaintiff by this time had become a little more middle - not too middle, he wanted to be simply - oh - just so. When the news of this great victory spread to the lowly pews of the university who are controlled by the faculty they decided to see if they could apply the rule of due process to their own situation, and went to their superiors, the faculty, and asked to be treated more fairly.

To their surprise they were told that, since they did not have their Ph.D. in secretarial or custodial work, they had no rights other than to work and obey. And so it came to pass that the faculty of that university was finally taken to court by the lowly secretaries and custodians and another very old and middle class judge decided that degrees had nothing whatever to do with justice and that the faculty had decided that the judge was no right to mistreat their pews. But the faculty, being senile and continued their abuse of their pews.

Age Of The Comic The Avengers Change

by Comic Master

This week, you will meet the second team of Avengers.

When the Hulk angrily left the Avengers at the end of the second issue, the remaining Avengers decided to march for him. After a long battle, the four Avengers began to go home to New York City. On the way, they recovered a body which had been frozen in ice for over twenty years. The body thawed out and revived, and Captain America lived again. He took over the vacancy left by the Hulk.

In the Avengers' sixteenth issue, the Avengers underwent a drastic change. Thor, Iron Man, Giant-Man (Ant-Man), and the Wasp left for personal reasons. Before leaving, they chose replacements. Of the many who wished to become Avengers, three were chosen: Hawkeye, Quicksilver, and the Scarlet Witch. Thus, a whole new team was formed.

THE SECOND TEAM OF AVENGERS

Captain America began his career in April 1941. A scientist had developed a serum to change men into perfect physical specimens, and Steve Rogers was chosen as a test. The serum worked, but the scientist was killed before he could produce any more of the serum. Steve Rogers became Captain America and fought the Nazis in Europe and America. He then disappeared while on a mission late in World War II. His next appearance was when the Avengers found him in 1964.

The remaining new Avengers were originally super-villains. Hawkeye was a carnival archer until he met a Russian spy called the Black Widow. She used him in an attempt to steal secrets from Tony Stark (Iron Man). Quicksilver and his sister, the Scarlet Witch, were originally members of Magneto's Brotherhood of Evil Mutants. Magneto had saved their lives, so they had to repay him somehow. When Magneto was taken away from Earth by an alien, Wanda and Pietro (their real names) applied for membership in the Avengers and were accepted. Quicksilver has the power of super-speed, while Wanda has a partially controllable heat power.

The student movement must take the lead in exposing Nixon's lies. Nixon, the man responsible for the invasion of Cambodia and Laos, would like

Nixon has incredible resources at his disposal - free TV time, crack public relations teams, and millions of dollars. All we have are the meetings we can organize, the leaflets we can pass out, and the mass demonstrations we can build. But then, Nixon has to maintain the most ambitious network of lies the world has ever seen. All we have to do is to tell the truth about Vietnam.

There are massive, peaceful demonstrations for the immediate, total, unconditional withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia and an end to the bombing NOW! scheduled for Saturday, April 22 in New York and Los Angeles. The decisive majority now oppose the war. By united massive actions by the antiwar majority we will end the war.

March Against The War Announced

March On New York, April 22

To The Editor: An open letter to the American students:

The student movement has been a major force responsible for creating majority antiwar sentiment in this country. In 1965 when they told us this was the "first consensus war in American history," it was students who organized teach-ins to question that consensus in 1966 and 1967 it was students who helped shatter that consensus. It was students who organized the first mass marches which have involved other sections of society in active opposition to the war. Today, 65% of the American people believe that the war is immoral - in large measure because of the work of the student antiwar movement.

The only thing that stands between majority antiwar sentiment and majority antiwar action is a lie - a lie that the war is winding down. The facts are that the bombing is heavier than ever before and Nixon plans to leave a residual force of American G.I.'s in Vietnam indefinitely. In the first three months of 1972, Nixon has sent more bombing raids against North Vietnam than in all of 1971.

The student movement must take the lead in exposing Nixon's lies. Nixon, the man responsible for the invasion of Cambodia and Laos, would like

Nixon has incredible resources at his disposal - free TV time, crack public relations teams, and millions of dollars. All we have are the meetings we can organize, the leaflets we can pass out, and the mass demonstrations we can build. But then, Nixon has to maintain the most ambitious network of lies the world has ever seen. All we have to do is to tell the truth about Vietnam.

There are massive, peaceful demonstrations for the immediate, total, unconditional withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia and an end to the bombing NOW! scheduled for Saturday, April 22 in New York and Los Angeles. The decisive majority now oppose the war. By united massive actions by the antiwar majority we will end the war.

Questions Democracy

Dear Sirs: It was indeed humorous to see that our democratic Student Senate has shown their egotistical personality in their new constitution. Their proposal to allow only student senators to run for S.A. President is totalitarian in thought, action, and principle. It is not similar to Russian elections, where only party members may run? Some democracy!

Public Relations

by Lisa Charles

While most members of the university community are concerned with the reform of antiquated departments and institutions, few people acknowledge or appreciate those existing departments vital to UVM's stability.

The university's Public Relations Department is one which has provided dependable services throughout most of UVM's history, yet has received little public acknowledgement itself.

Directed by Mr. Lawrence Van Benthuyssen, this department provides communication with university constituents throughout the state, distributes weekly information to the university community and conducts various forums concerning UVM's scholastic and cultural activities.

Mrs. Cindy Kent, writer and editor for "This Week," described a specific responsibility of the Public Relations Department. The most extensive publication from this department is the "Alumni Magazine" which is distributed four times a year. Aside from the usual class news and social announcements, the magazine provides extensive information concerning such issues as the possibility of the educational state merger. The staff has also conducted alumni commentary surveys concerning the importance of the publication itself, along with the promotion of a revised program for the fine arts.

Another publication distributed ten times yearly is the university bulletin "Commentary." Although minimal in length, it is informative and reaches many readers in Vermont. Finally, the staff publishes the family distributed to campus residence halls, libraries and the book store.

Perhaps the most tedious and publically devalued job is the production of the commencement publication each year. While appearing at

Necessities, Dial "O"

He told me to wait and called out pretty Miss Smythe from the phone room.

"So," Miss Smythe said. "May I help you?"

"Yeah, I'd like a pair of, um, jockey shorts."

"Oh," she said, looking befuddled. "Well, let me see. Our jockey shorts are in on each floor."

"No, no, no," I said. "Jockey shorts, underpants. Where's your men's underwear department?"

"Gee, I don't know," she said and then smiled. "Why don't you trot across the street to the pay phone and call me and I can have them delivered to you there. I'm not sure how to do it any other way. You can charge it."

"I don't have a charge account here. I wanted to pay cash."

"Cash? Oh, you mean like money," she beamed.

"Yes, sort of like money."

"This is highly irregular. I don't think we deal in cash here," she paused. "Say, why don't you just shoplift the underwear? Our insurance will cover it."

"Listen, Miss Smythe. Where can I open a charge account?"

"At the phone booth across the street."

"Thanks, Miss Smythe," I said, and began to walk away. "Say, can you tell me where the restroom is?"

"Gee," she said. "You can have that restroom, too. And charge it, or course."

I thanked pretty young Miss Smythe again and walked across the street. There was a line 100 feet long waiting to get into the phone booth. I overheard a lady talking on the phone.

"Could you send over a ham on rye—lay low in the mayo—with garnish and a pickle? Just charge it to my account. I'm the lady in the chaste dress."

Finally, it was my turn. "Could you please send over two pairs of jockey shorts, size 32. I'm the one with the worn out underwear on. And—oh, you—could you also send over Miss Smythe, about a size 6, I think."

I now do all my shopping by phone.

simple list of names and announcements, the publication is started in early February. The compilation is processed through a number of corrective stages with the last of the changes made before 5:00 P.M. on the Friday before commencement day.

Other literary responsibilities include communication with local and state newspapers, and with state and national medical or educational journals. In addition, the Public Relations Department arranges and conducts state forums with other educational institutions. Discussions range from current social, scholastic and cultural activities at UVM to relevant political and controversial issues. Occasionally, a faculty member will speak outside the state as Dean Weiger did recently in California.

"We feel these forums are quite effective," Mrs. Kent stated. "Students are able to evaluate the information received from the publications along with direct representation from university students and faculty."

Mrs. Kent is currently working with a group's committee in preparation for a "She-Week" planned for the fall of '73. She is assisting the women in financial and publicity arrangements.

St. Anselms Presents Dramatic Play About Trial of the Berrigan Brothers

This Saturday evening, April 15, at 8:00 pm, St. Anselm's Chapel will present The Trial of the Catonsville Nine, a dramatic reading performed by the Middlebury Theatre Workshop and Friends Meeting. This is a dramatic play, written by Fr. Daniel Berrigan, based upon the actual transcript of the trial in which Daniel and Philip Berrigan and seven others were convicted and imprisoned for burning draft files in Catonsville, Maryland. This group of nine people, members of the non-violent, Catholic left, entered a draft board office in Catonsville and burned all the 1-A classification files. They did this, they said, in order that the American people might be forced to take another look at what was being done in Southeast Asia. In the midst of the trial, Fr. Berrigan ironically apologized for the fact that he burned paper rather than children.

Whatever your personal feelings about these people and this war, you will find this play, The Trial of the Catonsville Nine, an extremely moving experience. For once, we get inside the heads of these courageous men and find out what it is that makes them compelled to fight for peace in this way. The inner peace with which they are sustained is a tribute to their faith in the Prince of Peace.

Join us this Saturday evening, April 15, at 8:00 pm, at St. Anselm's Chapel for this moving drama. Tickets will be sold this Wednesday, April 12, in Billings Center. Adults, $1, students, $.50. Tickets may also be reserved by calling St. Anselm's Chapel, 656-3882, and picked up by Friday. After the production, coffee and conversation with the cast will follow. Join us for this moving production.

Coalition Organizes To Demonstrate At Conventions

(CPS) - Coalitions have been formed recently in Tampa, Fla., and San Diego, Calif., to organize demonstrations for the Democratic and Republican national conventions to be held in those states this summer.

The Florida People's Coalition held its founding conference in February. The 35-50 delegates, composed primarily of young white students and former students, were drawn from several of the state's youth-oriented newspapers, community organizations, and Vietnam Veterans Against the War (VVAW) and the Shirley Chisholm campaign committee.

The San Diego group, called the Convention Coalition, has 125 representatives mostly from local groups and includes political views ranging from Marxists to liberals and anarchists.

Both coalitions seek to coordinate activities with a number of other organizations to build a representative unified front which will focus on the war, the economy, and civil rights. Each also seeks support from such national groups as the National Peace Action Coalition, the National Welfare Rights Organization, VVAW, and other anti-imperialist groups. The Florida group is drawing up a "People's Platform" which will be based on the Citizens' Action Plan, created by members of the San Diego coalition.

Both coalitions plan to organize medical care, legal aid and information services for large crowds of demonstrators which may attend.

In San Diego, a Mayday-style provocative demonstration policy is anticipated by local attorneys, even though emphasis has been placed on non-violence by the local

by Barbara Frankel

On April 12, Middle Earth, a folk-rock nightclub patterned after The Bitter End in Greenwich Village will open in Burlington. According to John Kaldor, one of the owners, Middle Earth will present same folk entertainment for six nights a week. Folk-rock type music will be featured Wed.-Sat., with other types music, such as country-western, on the other two nights.

According to John, who, along with his partner, Bill Kelly, is not partial to loud rock music. "We would like to try to bring the people of Burlington and the surrounding communities the kind of music that they want. We are open to suggestions. Everything can be adjusted to how people want it. That's the way to run a successful business."

Besides having their own sound system and a new grand piano, Middle Earth will feature a restaurant modeled after New York's east-side restaurants, which will be open from 11:30 A.M. until the entertainment starts at 8 p.m. There will be two shows nightly one at 8 and one at 10. Alcohol will be served, in addition to yogurt and other natural foods.

The opening show will feature Michael Nesmith. Future performances will highlight such entertainers as George Hamilton IV, Dan Hicks, John Hartford, Al Kooper and Pentangle. If they are successful, they hope to feature entertainers like Tom Paxton, Tim Hardin, Tom Rush and Jonathan Edwards next fall.

If Middle Earth is a success, they will continue to offer quality entertainment through the summer and next year. They are located at 127 College St. and welcome all visitors.

Campus Cops Fight Fires

by Barbara Frankel

There has been a rash of damaging fires in Burlington this semester. How, exactly, has this affected UVM's security force, who claim to have as their prime function, "the protection of persons and property" connected with the University of Vermont?

"It just scares me," commented Chief Frederick Barrett, head of UVM security. "If you have a fire in a church, and that gets out of control, what do you do about one in an academic building?" The Security Force has been trying to do several things to prevent this from ever occurring.

Campus police and members of the Office of Housing have been searching buildings, especially those closed during vacations, to look for fire hazards, such as overloaded circuits, appliances left plugged in, etc. "We're looking for the small things which people normally overlook. People miss matters that they should take a further look at and this causes serious fires," Chief Barrett claimed.

In addition to this, each building in the campus has personnel who are trained in evacuation policy in case of a fire, a bomb scare or anything which would cause the need for instant, orderly evacuation. There are also two fire drills per semester scheduled for dormitories, in order to gain experience in evacuation of residence halls.

During the fires in Burlington, UVM's Security Force aided local police. Campus police and members of the housing office have been meeting with people from the State Fire Marshall's Office to explore ways and means of preventing fires. According to Chief Barrett, "Because of the fires in Burlington, we here at UVM are more interested in fire prevention than we used to be." They have a "disaster program" in conjunction with a nearby medical hospital which enables security police to help the hospital with their traffic during the times of stress, such as during a plane crash or a fire. In case of such an emergency, they would use a building such as the Given Medical Center for the accident victims. Additionally, campus police try to cover academic buildings during the hours when they aren't in use to prevent fires and other property damage. As Chief Barrett summed it up, "We're just more aware now."

The Draft Comes Back!

By Dave McFadden

Men in the extended priority groups (those who have been 1-A since late 1970 or 1971 and still not drafted although they had drawn low lottery numbers) are generally escaping the draft. The legal period of draft eligibility for these men expired on March 31st.

Nationwide, present projections are for 10-15,000 men to be drafted in each "quarter" or three month period remaining in 1972. This would project a "reached" lottery number for 1972 of no higher than forty-five or fifty. All those whose number has been or will be reached are subject to the draft for the calendar year in which their number is reached plus the first three months of the following year.

The projected ceiling for reached numbers for this year, however, may change as recruitment for the New Volunteer Army is not doing as well as expected and more drafted manpower may be needed.

There is also talk of a draft for the National Guard or Reserves, as statements in these branches of the military are significantly down, reflecting the generally reduced draft threat.

In addition, there is speculation that the Administration may ask that the draft be extended when it comes up for renewal in July of 1973.

The 2-B, or regular undergraduate deferment, is only available to men who have qualified as full-time students prior to the summer session of 1971. Formerly a secure sanctuary for college students, a 2-B is no longer obtainable by students entering school after the cited cutoff date.

One of these options which is little understood is the 1-D deferment for college ROTC. The 1-D deferment is now available to any undergraduate enrolled in ROTC who signs the "ROTC Deferment Agreement." With the elimination of all new student (2-B) deferments the 1-D is one of the few ways an incoming freshman can get a deferment.

By signing the Deferment Agreement a man agrees to complete the basic ROTC course and to enroll in the advanced course, if accepted. He also agrees to accept a commission, if offered, and, if ordered, to serve on active duty for at least two years.

This Deferment Agreement, however, is not a binding contract, and no military obligation is incurred by signing it. Military obligation is only incurred when the student signs a "Reserve Contract" at the beginning of the junior year. The Deferment Agreement does not specify any sanction except loss of the deferment if a man drops the ROTC program at any time prior to signing the Reserve Contract.

Album Review: "Sunfighter" And "Garcia" Enjoyable Rock & Roll

by Doug Collette

SUNFIGHTER/Paul Kantner & Grace Slick (Grant FTR 1002)
GARCIA/Jerry Garcia (Warner Brothers BS 2582)

As different from each other as are these two albums, from people who have grown and changed throughout the myriad phases of the San Francisco rock and roll scene, they show how much that particular area, and rock and roll in general, can accommodate within its nebulous boundaries.

Sunfighter features Paul and Grace as co-captains of an assorted bunch of freaks and crazies, famous (Garcia, Nash) and otherwise (Phil Sawyer and Jack Traylor, each of whom contributes a piece to the LP. Sawyer's an electronic bit entitled "Titanic" and Traylor's a catchy song of reassurance to our planet called "Earth Mother").

Kantner's politics are the subject of the title song, "Million" and "Holding Together" (which is, incidentally, the only science fiction track on the album in contrast to Blow Against the Empire), and while such topics, as dubious as they may seem, are not irrelevant to rock and roll, it's the end product that counts and the music carries them through. "Diane" is an acoustic number in two parts, one on each side of the record, and while it's in a realm similar to the three cuts mentioned above, it's instead of belligerent; it's also one of the prettiest tunes Kantner has written since early Airplane. Grace has written a song about the offspring of her and Paul and "China," which serves as a sequel to "A Child Is Coming" from the Empire album, is very much gospel-soul oriented. The horn section which also appears on a few other cuts in the right place at the right time and the song comes off surprisingly well.

The first couple of the Jefferson Airplane are also getting into some rather bizarre areas with songs about cannibalism and running with wolves. On Bark Grace sounded somewhat strained, but for "Silver Spoon" and almost everywhere else, she sings with the same full-throated lust we know and love, proving her voice to be in life shape again. Thank goodness! "When I Was A Boy I Watched The Wolves" is, like many of Kantner's songs, hard to follow at first because as with most of Jimi Hendrix' compositions, the structures are irregular, if not very complex. The sound mix here, as through out the LP, is characteristically muddled, like most Airplane product: the bass booms and the drums thunder when you're able to hear them. However, they're mostly inaudible and the overall sound is quite thin.

There are a lot of different things contained here and while inconsistency of mood usually puts me off, on Sunfighter it's a rule which makes for a pleasant collection of rock and roll songs and other goodies.

In his recent interview in ROLLING STONE, Jerry Garcia termed his solo LP an experiment in which he alone would play all the instruments and which he would consider successful if it sounded like the whole group. When I first listened to Garcia, I was sure this was another superlatively good rock and roll record, but this isn't the case. Dead drummer Bill Kreutzmann is the only musician on the album besides Jerry, who has to my ears (and most likely his own, since he allowed it to be released) completed a most successful experiment in all respects.

Side one consists of four solid rock and roll songs, acoustic guitar at the foundation and Garcia's voice, one of the friendliest in rock and roll, on the top. If you never knew Jerry played slide guitar, "Deal" is a swell way to find out and it, like "Bird Song," "Sugarcane," and "Loser" are all top-quality songs, each one rocking gently but firmly.

Flipping the album over, you're greeted by a chilling electronic track that would've been suitable for "Phantom of the Opera." "Late For Super," which sounds not unlike John Lennon's "Revolution 9" seizes into "Spidegawd" and "EEP Hour," becoming increasingly instrumental with the addition of bass and drums, simple piano figures, acoustic guitar chording and pedal steel guitar. At first I was afraid the whole side was going to be like this, but as it's just an interlude, it provides a pleasant contrast with the rest of the music as well as being inventive and tasteful in itself.

"To Lay Me Down" is a gospelish number with "Let It Be"-type piano, which neatly sidesteps repetitive boredom as it builds, well, adding organ and pedal steel. "An Odd Little Place" is certainly in that because it's a reminder of what came at the beginning of this side, but it's just as well done.

The concluding cut, "The Wheel," is a second cousin to "Uncle John's Band; it has the same type of lilting rhythm, conjuring up images of wagon trains and wide-open spaces, as steel guitar lopes through the arrangement. When someone gets around to making a rock and roll western based on "You Got The Silver," they shouldn't have any trouble finding a place for "The Wheel;" it would be perfect for a final shot of the hero riding off into the sunset (or whatever the hero of a rock and roll western would ride off into).

I suppose it would be too much to ask, but it would still be nice if, when musicians decide to indulge themselves, they could be as enjoyable to listen to as Jerry Garcia.

Talented Mezzo-Soprano Featured By Lane Chamber Arts

One of the newest stars in the Metropolitan Opera Company, mezzo-soprano Frederica Von Stade, will sing in the Lane Chamber Arts Series on Wednesday, April 12, at 8:30 p.m., in the Allen Chapel. This is the last CAS concert of the season.

Tickets, $2.50 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the Door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

Miss Von Stade joined the Metropolitan during the 1969-1970 season, and this year she is starred in two trouser roles—Hansel in "Hansel and Gretel" and Cherubino in "The Marriage of Figaro."

She made her debut at the Metropolitan in "Die Zauberflöte," later singing in "La Fanciulla del West" with Renata Tebaldi, in "La Traviata," and, at short notice, stepped in to sing the role of Stephano in Gounod's "Roméo and Juliet," appearing opposite Jeannette Pilon and Franco Corelli.

American born, Miss Von Stade has won many awards and competitions—she is a graduate of the Mannes School of Music in New York City, where she studied with Sebastian Engelberg, Paul Bel and Otto Guth.

In the spring of 1969, she entered the Metropolitan Opera Auditions, which she won, advancing to the National semi-finals. She was named one of seven finalists, won the Frank Chapman Memorial Award, and was scheduled to compete in the finals, when she was offered a soloist's contract with the Metropolitan Opera, the only finalist so honored.

Her San Francisco Opera debut in March, 1971, as Sextus in Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito," was the night of the season. She is a graduate of the Mannes School of Music in New York City, where she studied with Sebastian Engelberg, Paul Bel and Otto Guth.

The summer of 1972 sees Miss Von Stade again at Sante Fe, where she will add Zerkina in "Don Giovanni" to her repertoire. In addition, she will be one of the first mezzo-sopranos in history ever to sing the role of Melisande in Sante Fe's new production of Debussy's "Pelléas and Melisande."

She is also scheduled to do Cherubino in the San Francisco Opera production of "The Marriage of Figaro," and will make her European debut in this same role in March, 1973, at the Opera in Paris in a new production directed by Giorgio Strehler and conducted by Georg Solti.

She will also debut at the Hamburg Staatsoper and at the Glyndebourne Festival Opera, again in a new production of "Figaro."

This triple European debut should be an indication of the arrival of a major new star on the international scene.

A superb recital and orchestral singer, Miss Von Stade has appeared with such conductors as Karl Böhm, Serge Baudo, Alain Lombard, Thomas Schippers and others.

With the irrefragable combination of personal charm, vocal ability, and interpretive mastery, Frederica Von Stade is sure to become one of the most distinguished artists of her generation.

Arena Theatre Offers 'Flea In Her Ear'

The U.V.M. Department of Communications and Theatre will end its season of major productions with George Feydeau's farce, "A Flea in Her Ear," to be presented April 18 through the 23rd at Arena Theatre.

Set in turn-of-the-century France, this play is a funny, fast-paced reflection of the Extravagances of the era, replete with jealous spouses, revolving beds, and mistaken identities. Convinced (more or less) of her husband's infidelity, Raymond Chaudel sets out to prove her suspicions correct with an elaborate ruse involving a fake love letter and an assignation at the Coq d'Or, a luxurious, if not entirely respectable hotel much frequented by Parisian society. Naturally, her plan becomes hopelessly entangled, and in the course of the action Feydeau presents, not only an intricate and raucous plot, but hilarious and often astute caricatures of the various strata of French society. Combining both the formalities of nineteenth century theatre, and the idiosyncrasies of human nature, "Flea in Her Ear," is perhaps the best of its genre. Directed by Michael Casella, "Flea" includes in its cast Jenny Allen as Raymond, Victor Emmanuel, (and as Poche, his look-alike), Crocker Bennett as Tournel, Lesley Ayvarian as Lucienne, Terry Demas as Homénides, Chip Towers as Camille, John Falconi as Etienne, and Mary Jane Leach as Antoinette. Dr. Finache is played by Jeff Matteson, Eugene by Sara Brooke, Feraillon by Dave Sherman, Olympe by D.H. Lawrence, Baptiste by Eric Raymond, and Schwarz by James Wimsatt. Guests at the Coq d'Or are Ellen Sullivan, Adam Zahler, Jim Libbey, Debbie Stromme, and Joan Kemsley.

Admission is $2.00 for the general public and $1.00 with UVM I.D. Tickets can be purchased at Arena Theatre Box Office, between 10 a.m. and 5:30 p.m., Mon.-Fri. between 3 and 5:30 p.m. Sat. and Sunday, starting Tuesday, April 11. For reservations, call 656-2094. All reserved tickets must be picked up by 5:30 p.m., the day before the performance.

Final Hitchcock Classic

Alfred Hitchcock's movie "Torn Curtain," in full color, will be the final film on the Hitchcock Classics series sponsored this spring by the Lane Series. It will be presented on Saturday, April 15, at 8:00 p.m. in Life Sciences Building Auditorium.

Tickets, $1.00 each, are available in Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the Door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418. There will be only one showing.

Directed in 1966 by Alfred Hitchcock, "Torn Curtain" has a screenplay by Brian Moore. Running time is 128 minutes.

Starting in the thriller as Paul Newman, Julie Andrews, and Lila Kedrova—three Academy Award winners.

The plot deals with the adventures of Michael Andrews (Paul Newman) and Sarah Sherman (Julie Andrews) in an unfriendly European country and their efforts to extricate themselves. The resulting movie provides an entertaining excitement with the Hitchcock touch at its best.

Study Shows Between

University of Vermont scientists (Friday, April 7) revealed frightening statistics on the close tie between drinking and highway deaths. In a final report on a two and one-half year study, the scientific team explained findings that warn motorists both of the number of drunken drivers on the highways and the frequency with which those drivers are involved in crashes.

Making the report, based on findings on Vermont highways, were Dr. M.W. Perrine, executive professor of psychology and director of Project ABETS; Dr. Julian A. Waller, professor of community medicine; and Dr. Lawrence S. Martin, Vermont chief medical examiner and project assistant professor of pathology. Project ABETS in originally started with this drinking and driving study, and was financed by grants from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration of the U.S. Department of Transportation.

The speakers emphasized the close way in which other programs have emerged from the original Project ABETS investigations.

One of these is Project CRASH, a demonstration and Pay action program regarding University Year Concentrates

by John W. Engroff, Jr.

On July 1, 1971, a new federal called "ACTION" was formed to coordinate the volunteer efforts programs as VISTA, Peace Corps, ACE and Foster Grandparents. The program to emerge from the agency was "University Year for known as UYA. UYA shares not attributes of her sister program projects like those of VISTA, focus on the poverty community students like VISTAS, receive a stipend from the federal government. Unlike their VISTA counterparts, UYA volunteers fully-matriculated students during ACTION. They integrate the programs and projects so that enhance each other. In this manner university resources such as facilities, as well as the skills participating students—can be the war on poverty.

This past January, the University of Vermont became one of 25 higher learning across the country to participate in the University Year. In 32 UVM students began work on projects relating to communities in and around Burlington. Included among the 32 are 4 sophomores, 12 juniors, 5 senior graduate students. The students' broad-range of academic background technical skills to their tasks majoring in departments in the Agriculture and Home Economics, third-year medical student, volunteers are registered for 7 given by 53 different faculty members in 13 departments. UYA projects similar diversity numbering 13 in the diversity fall either into the area of "health" or into the area of advocacy.

RURAL HEALTH NEEDS

The first of two UYA projects with rural health needs centered mobile-medical van. In a pilot project the summer of 1971, 161 children rural families were discovered to health, and health-related projects which services were needed. Unfortunately, physicians and health any description in these rural areas practically non-existent. Even county has increased in population over the last decade, it has yet single, resident physician. To avoid, the Vermont Department the Visiting Nurses Association, the University Year for a cooperating to operate and maintain medical van—which is now operating. The four UYA volunteers for the van's arrival in each during the week prior to the identifying and contacting families with pre-school age children administer an extensive health check to each family, arrange appointments to be seen by the team and medical students at the van transportation to and from the necessary.

After the van's departure, community, the UYA volunteers act as liaison between the identified needs and the relevant medical agencies until the problem either solved or deemed inappropriate, volunteers encourage action to correct community

A dark, high-contrast, black and white photograph of a person's face, heavily shadowed and framed by a thick black border. The image is very dark, with the subject's features mostly obscured by deep shadows. The visible parts of the face, such as the forehead, nose, and chin, are highlighted against the black background. The overall effect is mysterious and dramatic.

What's So Unusual About Serendipity (Everything)

takes a good deal of time to get things done in Washington. Citing the example of standards for flammability for children's sleepwear, it took four years for the law to be passed and it will be another two years before it will go totally in effect. Most federal laws are passed from examples of state laws, such as the no-fault insurance started in Massachusetts. But, the problem with state laws is that most state legislators are primarily producers themselves, "concerned more with producing than legislating against themselves."

In the realm of the environment, Miss Furness said that up to four years ago, we "did not realize that environment problems were consumer problems." She explained that industries and consumers were both to blame for this problem of a deteriorating environment. Industry does not believe that it contributes that much to pollution. It needs a new definition of profits to take into account the depletion of our natural resources. On the other hand, people must give up small pleasures in order for the country to survive, "we may convenience ourselves right out of business. We must reconsider our idea that bigger, faster, and fancier are necessarily better." It is also necessary that we recognize that tied to every product is the price to dispose of it. The solution is not only to recycle, but we must change our American ideal of "buying trash and throw-away everything." Recycling projects can even prove to be more economically profitable. In Madison, Wisconsin, a recycling program is making four dollars on every ton of paper recycled instead of paying ten dollars to dispose of the paper. This

In answer to question as to where an average person can get information on products before buying, Miss Furness recommended reading Consumer Reports. She also recommended some government pamphlets, notably "Performance Data on 1972 Automobiles."

Nominations are now being accepted for membership in the University of Vermont's Senior Men's Honor Society, Boulder Society. This organization recognizes responsible student leadership within the academic community, thus this year's members will be selected from the class of 1973. Nominations should include the individual's name, campus address and qualifications and should be returned to the S.A. Office by April 18, Tuesday.

Dear Dr. Warner:

We were much interested in your discussion on cockroaches. We will have to disagree with you on one point. We have living proof that cockroaches get larger than 3 inches. We have a pet cockroach named George who is 3 1/2 inches long. His scientific name is Blattella germanica and his common name is the Giant West Indian Leaf cockroach. By the way, George is an ideal pet. He requires minimum care and is well-behaved and quiet. We also have three kittens and for their protection, we have found it advisable to keep George in a cage when not being supervised.

Thank you for telling me about George. About his qualifications as a pet: How does he show affection?

QUESTION: I know that you have said that masturbation can be an asset to a sexual relationship in marriage. I agree that this is true, especially when one partner is unwilling or unable to engage in sex. In my case, my husband is home alone part of the day while I am at work and I know that he masturbates. Then, in the evening when I feel sexually aroused, his sexual desire is nil. I seem to be good only for a weekend fling. This was not the case a little while ago when we were both away from home during the day and I am very frustrated by his behavior. I wouldn't mind so much if he had a low-key sexual desire or a lack of interest in sex, but I know that this isn't true.

ANSWER: The situation you describe is not going to be an especially easy one to deal with. However, it is manageable. As I have indicated, masturbation occurring during marriage usually does not interfere with heterosexual relations as it tends to occur when heterosexual relations are either not possible, do not occur frequently enough for one or the other partners or are not sexually satisfying. Masturbation tends to occur more frequently when a person is under pressure and, for some people, when they are anxious. Many single men, for instance, report more frequent masturbation during examination periods or other times of stress.

There has obviously been a change in your domestic situation. In addition to what you describe as going on sexually, you also indicate that your husband is home more. Is it possible that he is under more stress than he was before? How are things going in your relationship outside of the sexual area? Answers to these questions might guide you in dealing with this problem.

It may be that your husband has a relatively low tolerance for delaying gratification and yields to small urges for sexual release. Since he is home alone, there is little restraint. If the situation is one in which you cannot identify what to do to direct his sexual attentions more toward you, you may have to take the matter up with him directly.

I was curious about your statement that you know that he masturbates when he is home. Is he giving you a poorly disguised message that he is under pressure of some sort? Perhaps he wants to talk about what is going on and is waiting for you to bring the issue up. If you take the matter up directly, your task will be to act in a supportive manner, rather than in an accusative way. ("Lately we have been having sex less frequently, I am wondering if there is anything wrong?" as opposed to: "Why are you ignoring me?")

As I indicated before, these are not the world's easiest things to talk about; the odds remain however that the masturbation is a symptom of some difficulty rather than a difficulty in and of itself.

QUESTION: I have a dry scalp! I have tried all the commercial shampoos and wonder if there is some helpful homespun remedy or some brand that I have not heard of.

ANSWER: In dry weather, many people suffer from dry scalp and think they have dandruff. This is especially true if they shampoo their hair with strong detergent type shampoos too frequently. A homespun remedy that combats this is to rub olive oil into your scalp and then wrap your head in wet hot towels. Let the olive oil soak in for a good hour or so and then shampoo your hair with one of the milder products. Breck is one that was recommended to me. Please understand that you shampoo the olive oil out of your hair before you appear in public (or appear in public at your own risk). Between olive oil treatments, wash your hair only as often as absolutely necessary.

In cool weather, the general advice is to shampoo your hair less frequently than you do during warm weather. Try this for a few weeks. If there is no improvement, you might need to see a dermatologist.

Dry weather also results in dry skin for a lot of people. Frequent bathing makes the situation worse as protective skin oils are removed. Less frequent bathing and the use of a body lotion helps the skin problem.

QUESTION: My wife and I have noticed that certain foods, particularly the legumes, cabbage, and eggs, lend themselves to the production of flatulence. What is it about these foods that cause this condition? Also, can the effect be counteracted with another type of food? We live in a small apartment and the odor is sometimes unbearable.

ANSWER: There is a noticeable seasonal variation in the type of letters I receive. Within a few days I received several letters similar to this one, which I can only assume was due to rainy weather driving people indoors. As you can imagine, some of the questions were more difficult to answer than others. I really do not know if men are noisier than women or what the difference is between a silent fart and an explosive one. Fortunately, the present letter is answerable. The vast bulk of gas that is passed by rectum is produced in the small intestine and large intestine by bacterial action on various foods. The volume of gas and the composition of the gas is determined by the nature of the food material worked upon, as well as by the type of bacteria involved. In fact, the bacterial population changes somewhat in response to different foods ingested.

The legumes (including navy beans, soy beans and lima beans) are pretty wicked gas producers. This seems to occur because they are broken down into low molecular weight carbohydrates and are acted on by a certain type of anaerobic bacteria (they work in the absence of oxygen) that live in the small intestine and colon. Careful experiments have been done to demonstrate the particular part of the bean and the specific bacteria involved.

Gas production from these foods can begin in about six to eight hours after they are ingested and last for as long as 24 hours. Diets high in meat protein produce heavy gases in larger volumes and eggs seem to do the same thing for some people. Cabbage and other foods are equally infamous in regard to gas production. However, there does not appear to be a food which cancels out the effects of other foods. As I have indicated in this column before, some of the gases produced are inflammable.

Among the situations other than dietary ones which influence gas production, anxiety ranks high. There is some dispute over whether air swallowing, often associated with anxiety, increases gas production or whether it just produces more belching. But, when a person is anxious his gut works in strange ways. Viral gastrointestinal illnesses and any use of antibiotics can influence the bacterial population of the gut and change gas production.

QUESTION: My question concerns the growth of hair on the penis. I am not worried about this, but I have about a dozen hairs gathered along the left side and underside of the penis but none on the glans. Is this unusual?

ANSWER: Hair on the shaft of the penis is not at all unusual. Usually the situation is just as you describe it, and I have not seen any furry penises; nor have I seen any with hairs on the glans. A lot of people spend a lot of time worrying about the size, shape and appearance of their penises. As with other simple functional devices, the best attitude to take is: If it works, don't worry about it.

QUESTION: What exactly is "non specific urethritis"? Is it a form of gonorrhea?

ANSWER: Something non specific is exactly inexact. Non specific urethritis refers to an inflammation of the urethra (the tube carrying urine from the bladder in the woman and the common exit for urine and semen in the man). Such a urethritis can be caused by a variety of organisms, but excludes the type or urethritis caused by gonorrhea. These inflammations are treated by antibiotics after a physician determines for sure that syphilis or gonorrhea is not present. Inflammations generally cause annoying itching, but are not dangerous. They should be treated, however.

Baseball Of Yesterday

UVM has stopped its baseball program. It is interesting to find out what was the world of baseball about (this time twenty years ago) for Friday April 23, 1952: the story of Vermont baseball nine starts some with Upsilon in a twin bill this Saturday.

Upsilon were scheduled to meet Upsilon in the game of the Southern Trip this spring. The game's cancellation and instead the game in two seven inning games, beginning at 7:00 p.m.

Upsilon have been working out steadily since their successful southern tour, and a number of new additions have been added. Added to the mound staff is Frank "Lefty" who pitched for the last year and two freshmen, Dick "Lefty" and Mike Semans, an outfielder, have been added. Coach Ralph Lapointe has this lineup since the Southern trip because of right fielder Andy Goot. Frank Reid has been added to centerfield. Upsilon will have an infield of Deacon at first; second, Dias at third, Montgomery at short; behind the plate, Mann in center and Read

Faculty Senate Experiences Difficulty Voting On Pass-Fail

by Steve Rice

Last Friday, a proposal to eliminate pass-fail by fall semester, 1973, was supposed to be voted on by UVM's Faculty Senate. However, it wasn't. Instead, a substitute motion, and a number of amendments were offered to the Wertheimer-Stout-Flannery-Warner resolution that stymied any hope of quick passage, or rejection.

However, the subject motion and amendments were soon to be ruled invalid when one faculty member asked for a quorum call. According to the Senate's constitution, approximately 170 senators must be present to conduct any business. One-hundred thirteen were in attendance, and according to one reliable source, this was the largest attendance in "quite some time."

When the number of senators was announced by the chairman, Dr. William White, most of the body left angrily. One faculty member cried, "It just goes to prove that we tend to shirk our responsibility to the issues that affect the university community."

These were the events that eventually led to the quorum call.

The meeting began at 4:18 p.m., and proceeded along at a lively pace. The Senate's Fringe Benefit Committee's report was accepted with some changes (see related story on page four).

Then, the pass-fail motion came under consideration. Political science professor, Dr. Alan Wertheimer, reiterated that the authors of the resolution were concerned primarily with the operation of the University's evaluative system, which includes pass-fail.

"We have very grave doubts," the professor said. He reminded the representatives that the Student Evaluation Committee first proposed the measure, though the committee itself had reached no agreement.

Dr. Wertheimer reported that he had met with the Student Association, March 15. He then read the SA's condemnation of the proposal. In the condemnation, the SA demanded that any issue, which concerned the livelihood of UVM's students, be first brought to the attention of the Student Association, instead of the Faculty Senate. On this point, a number of faculty laughed.

"What the Student Association fails to understand is that the responsibility is ours," Wertheimer argued.

"Do we have any discussion?" chairman White asked.

Gladys M. Jameson, assistant professor of home economics, addressed the assembly:

"Why concentrate our energies to the question of pass-fail, when our entire system is working against us? The words we sometimes use make us look like two armed camps at war...the faculty, against the students. Pass-Fail at least tells the students that we have faith in them."

"If we favor the proposal to drop pass-fail, it will be, essentially, a vote of confidence. Extentate the positive."

Mrs. Jameson then proposed a substitute motion to the political scientists' resolution. After some confusion on whether the pass-fail motion would have to be tabled first before Mrs. Jameson's motion could be discussed, it was decided no tabling was necessary.

Mrs. Jameson's motion read in part:

"That the Senate establish a committee of faculty, students, and administrators to conduct a thorough, objective study of evaluation of students at the University of Vermont. The committee would be charged to survey, review, digest, and report to the University."

"The purposes served by examinations, grades, and student evaluation."

now in use or proposed at UVM and other universities."

"The advantages and disadvantages of each evaluation technique."

"The published or otherwise available data pertinent to the comparison of or evaluation of various techniques."

Dr. Richard F. Flannery took issue with the new motion:

"This misconstrues our argument. We're not saying that the students are abusing the system by any means; we're saying that students act quite rationally under the system. The question that we should address ourselves to, is whether this system is desirable."

Colleague Wertheimer added: "This isn't a piece-meal proposal. The system is incoherent; it forces irrational behavior. Why should this new motion replace our own?"

Professor Neil R. Stout of the history department then offered an amendment to Mrs. Jameson's motion. He called for the proposed evaluation study to be completed by the end of the 1972-73 academic year, with the understanding that pass-fail would then be abolished.

Wertheimer said he would favor Stout's offer if it was attached to his motion.

Professor Coulter, of the English department, took issue with Stout's amendment, claiming, "The ultimate abolishment of pass-fail won't solve anything."

He then urged the Senate, in an amendment to Stout's, that the proposed evaluative study be completed by the Faculty Senate at its January, 1973 meeting, with the understanding that pass-fail wouldn't necessarily be abolished.

(Earlier the Senate had agreed that the evaluative committee, if passed, would study also course loads.)

Coulter's amendment was passed. This quickly led to the passage of Stout's amendment, now revised to have the study completed by the January, 1973 meeting, with no pre-determined rules on the question of pass-fail.

Chairman White then asked if there was any discussion on the now-amended motion of Mrs. Jameson's. For a moment no one spoke.

Then, one faculty member arose and, in an apparent attempt to block a vote on the substitute motion, called for a quorum. Immediately, most of the body left.

The faculty members were counted. Since one-hundred and seventy weren't present, Chairman White adjourned the meeting.

Asked by this reporter whether this meant that all business conducted "was for naught", he answered carefully:

"No. This means apparently there weren't enough people here at the time the whole issue of pass-fail was first brought on the floor. Nobody can say for sure how many people were here prior to the pass-fail consideration, since no one called for quorum. In short, you could say no definite action was taken on the question of pass-fail, today."

One observer commented later: "What would happen if they called quorum on every meeting at the meetings beginning...I'll wager a million-to-one there wouldn't be a Faculty Senate, then."

Selection For Resident Advisors Enters Final Stage

by Mary Jo Dahlbloom

The selection of Resident Advisors and Resident Assistants for the 1972-73 academic year is in the final stages, according to Dr. Keith Miser, Director of Residence Halls.

Dr. Miser indicated that the Resident Advisors next year will be predominantly graduate students representing a "mixture of different types and academic majors." Over 100 candidates from all over the United States are currently vying for fourteen available positions. Dr. Miser stated that the qualities sought in Resident Advisors are "the ability to work with students, as well as the experience and ability necessary to help facilitate personal development in both academic and non-academic ways." Next year, there will be a total of 24 resident advisors on the UVM campus.

There will be an undergraduate resident assistant living on almost every dormitory floor on campus. "We look for basically the same qualities in resident assistants as we do in resident advisors. We seek those people who have the ability to work with their peer group," explained Dr. Miser.

Applicants for the position of resident assistant must have a 2.2 grade point average. Recommendations from a faculty member, the applicant's own resident advisor and resident assistant, and evaluations from two or three students on the candidate's floor selected by the student applicant must be presented. In addition, the applicant's own resident assistant distributes recommendation forms to two or three of the applicant's fellow students. Potential resident assistants are interviewed three times. The selection committee is made up of two resident advisors, two resident assistants, Dr. Miser, and Assistant Director of Residence Halls, Gloria Thompson. This year, 180 students applied for nine male resident assistant openings and eleven female openings. There will be 64 resident assistants

Freshman Program
A freshman program involving both academically and socially-oriented activities is being planned by IRA and the housing officials for fall '72. Dr. Miser feels that the program is "exciting and dynamic." Activities will probably begin on Sunday, September 3, and will hopefully continue under student leadership throughout the semester. Deborah Orr, a resident advisor for Harris Hall, has been working with a committee of IRA students involved in organizing the freshman program. Proposed activities include dances, parties, seminars, and programs planned with the aid of some of the faculty members.

The Christie, Wright, and Patterson complex will be co-ed next year and will predominantly freshman halls, will participate in the freshman program. Other dorms taking

by Jeri Cowey

Concluding several months of work, the new Student Association Constitution was passed in a referendum last April 12. The vote was only a little over a hundred above the needed quorum of 323. The constitution was passed 387 to 46, a nine to one ratio.

One of the major changes of the new constitution is the setting up of an appointed cabinet system under the SA President. The Presidential Cabinet, to be appointed with the advice and consent of the Senate, consists of the Treasurer, Secretary of Student Activities, Secretary of Elections, and Secretary of Communications. The purpose of this change as explained by some members of the Senate is to make the officers responsible to the President, who in turn can be held accountable to the Senate (another new article of the constitution provides for a means of impeaching the President).

The second major alteration of the constitution involves the formation of caucuses that may be used to discuss and handle the various problems of the different constituencies on campus, fraternities, and sororities have the option of using these caucuses to carry on their individual affairs. Under the constitution, all fraternity and sorority funding will remain separate from SA funds under the regulations of the fraternities and Panhel. The Residence Hall Funding will "be delineated within the Inter-Residence Affairs Constitution."

Another change is the organization of a Co-ordinating Committee to replace the former Executive Board. This committee will be composed of the President of SA, Chairman of the Senate, President of IRA, President of Panhel, and President of the Fraternity Forum. The function of this committee is to coordinate and review all legislation, committee reports, information and other matters pertaining to the SA for presentation to the Senate on the agenda.

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Homosexuality Meeting

The Meetings to Free Homosexuality at UVM are continuing Thursday nights, in Marsh Lounge, Billings Student Center. One of the topics currently being discussed is the immense problem of expressing the homosexual aspect of one's own sexuality in a straight, racist society. For many, this problem may not seem relevant to a student at UVM. However, the group feels that the university, when viewed as an institution to preserve certain oppressive dogmatic norms of society (witness the continued existence of the military science dept. and the board of trustees decision concerning Dr. Parvati), creates also a bias against homosexuality. The fear of homosexuality generated by society is contrary to the ideals of human rights. The group is also discussing ways to work with other groups, e.g. women's liberation and anti-war groups, who are fighting injustices in society. The group is planning to join with others in participating in anti-war actions, the second week in May.

Engineering Grant Given By Alcoa

A scholarship grant of $1500 for undergraduate studies in the field of engineering at the University of Vermont has been received from Alcoa Foundation.

Presentation of the grant to Pres. Edward C. Andrews, Jr. was made by Jon C. Holtzman of Mamen, N.Y. Operations of Aluminum Company of America.

The grant, applicable to the 1972-73 school year, continues a scholarship program established at the University by Alcoa Foundation in 1967. Current holder of last year's scholarship award is Stephen J. Hall, a senior in Mechanical Engineering.

Alcoa Foundation was created as a nonprofit, private foundation by a grant from Alcoa Company of America in 1952. As a fully funded foundation, it avoids reflecting ups and downs of the current business climate. Investment of the original company contribution by Alcoa Foundation provides the income for education, civic, charitable, scientific, medical and literary contributions, which have totaled over $25 million since 1952.

"Educational Marathon Day"

On April 26, 1972 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. the College of Education will sponsor an "Educational Marathon Day". The Marathon Day will feature presentations on new and unique ideas in the realm of education. Students and faculty from the UVM College, as well as professional educators from around the state will make presentations on topics ranging from primary to higher education. Such topics include: "Planning for Educational Change" by Joseph Oakley and Dr. Herbert Tilley of the Vermont Education Department, "Futurism and Education" by Dr. Charles Case and Robert Larson of UVM, and "Responding—The Art of Learning" by the Special Education program of the UVM College of Education.

In addition to these presentations there will be a series of films depicting innovative programs throughout Vermont and seminars led by persons from two of Vermont's independent schools: Pine Ridge School and Vermont Academy.

Programs describing all the presentations will be available at Memorial Lounge, Waterman Building on the day of the Marathon. All members of the University community and the public are cordially invited to attend.

Student Art Show Organized And Presented By Students

This year the University of Vermont Student Art Show is being coordinated and hung by a representative group of art students. The show, which in previous years has been organized by faculty members of the Art Department, will open at the Fleming Museum Thursday, April 20, at 8 p.m. It will continue through the first two weeks of May.

The opening will feature an informal talk by the well known sculptor, Hans Haacke. Mr. Haacke presently teaches Sculpture at the Cooper Union in New York City. He has studied printmaking under Hayter in Paris, and has exhibited widely in Europe and the United States. He has had numerous one-man shows at the Howard Wise Gallery in New York.

Earlier, Mr. Haacke directed his work toward natural and technological systems. In an Earth Works show at Cornell University he exhibited a pile of earth from which grass grew during the duration of the show. In New York City Mr.

Haacke has exhibited anti-farms, a steam and refrigeration system, and air-blown material.

Recently his work has shifted to an interest in political systems. He is a founding member of the Art Worker's Coalition, a politically oriented artists' group that has been instrumental in changing the relationship of Art Museums and Galleries to artists and the public.

Last year Mr. Haacke was involved in a controversy with the Guggenheim Museum that resulted in several staff resignations. Mr. Haacke is invited to have a major retrospective at the museum, but the politically controversial nature of his recent work resulted in the museum finally withdrawing its invitation.

Mr. Haacke's talk will begin at 8:30 p.m. and interested members of the public are invited.

Eco-Fair

Sunday, April 23, from 1-4 p.m., on the Redstone Campus green, there will be an eco-fair. Ecology games, prizes and events with unlimited learning and exciting offerings. OVP volunteers are asked to accompany their brothers and sisters. Everyone is welcome! For more information call Patti O'Brien, Robinson Hall.

UVM's Annual H

Vermont high school juniors will again have the opportunity to study the various programs available at the University of Vermont on UVM's 20th annual High School Day April 22.

According to UVM Admissions Coordinator Dr. Richard Steele, it is expected that close to 1,000 Vermont juniors will sample classes, demonstrations and exhibits aimed at helping them plan their college careers.

"This visit to the University gives the high school student a perfect opportunity to check out the University and perhaps, for some, aid them in selecting which college to apply to, whether the University of Vermont or some other institution," he said.

The day will open with registration at 9 a.m. in UVM's Roy L. Patrick Gymnasium.

Scientists To At Cook Dec

Five nationally recognized scientists will speak during programs at the University of Vermont April 21 to dedicate the $6.5 million Cook Physical Sciences Building.

Highlight of the daylong program will be the dedication ceremony at 8 p.m. in Room B-106 of that building. The principal address on "Science, Technology and the Human Condition" will be given by Dr. Donald P. Horng, president of Brown University. Opening remarks will be made by Dr. Edward C. Andrews Jr., president of the University of Vermont.

This and other sessions are open to the public. Co-chairmen of the event are Dr. Albert D. Crowell, chairman of the physics department, and Dr. John L. Kice, chairman of the chemistry department.

A chemistry colloquium will be held in Room B-106 of Cook at 2 p.m., with address by Dr. Paul D. Bartlett, Ervin professor of chemistry, Harvard, and by Dr. Robert Quispel, a 1969 graduate.

Unlimited Performance and Convenience at a Moderate Cost

Motor and Turntable Platter: The virtually hum-free motor and the low-rumble, damped mounting of the 502 have been retained in the Fisher 402. The turntable is of the same non-resonant, non-magnetic design and construction as that of the 502, differing only in its weight of four pounds. In addition, the top plate of the 402 is slightly smaller, to facilitate more compact installations.

Tone Arm: The Fisher 402 incorporates, in all major respects, the same low-mass tone arm and low-friction bearings as the 502. The stylus force and anti-skating adjustment knobs are linked, with vernier adjustment possible for various stylus. In addition, stylus angle has been pre-adjusted to optimum, based upon statistical determinations of average record loads.

Operation: The 402 offers the convenience of automatic record scanning and stylus protection, with automatic repeat in both manual and automatic modes, single-play or sequential. All functions are controlled by a single master control-command lever. Universal cusing is operative during manual operation.

Variable Pitch Control: The Fisher 402 incorporates a variable pitch control to vary any of the three record speeds (33 1/3, 45, and 78 rpm) up to plus or minus 3%, permitting critical adjustment of the pitch of the recorded music.

Spindles: Manual play and automatic play spindles are included with the Fisher 402.

Universal compulsory education, inasmuch as ignorance and lack of education are barriers of separation among mankind, all must receive training and instruction.

Spiritual Solution of the Economic Problem. The human world will adapt itself to a new social form, the justice of God will become manifest throughout human affairs. There will be no abnormally rich or poor.

A Universal Auxiliary Language. Each person will learn two languages, his native tongue and the universal speech. This will facilitate intercommunication and dispel the barriers of language.

Universal Peace Upheld by a World Government. Until it is established, mankind will not attain composure and tranquility.

"The Revelation proclaimed by Baha'u'llah, His followers believe, is divine in origin, embracing in scope, broad in its outlook, scientific in its method, humanitarian in its principles and dynamic in its influence. It exerts on the hearts and minds of men. The mission of the Founder of their Faith, they conceive it to be to proclaim that religious truth is not absolute but relative, that Divine Revelation is continuous and progressive... His Cause, they have already demonstrated, stands identified with, and revolves around, the principle of the organic unity of mankind as representing the consummation of the whole process of human evolution. This final stage in this stupendous evolution, they assert, is not only necessary, but inevitable, that it is gradually approaching, and that nothing short of the celestial potency with which a divinely ordained Message can claim to be endowed can succeed in establishing it."

Foreign Study In Netherlands Begins Next September

The first foreign study program in the Netherlands, especially for American students, will open at the American College of Amsterdam in September 1972. All instruction, by American and European faculty, will be given in English.

A full 15 credit hour curriculum is scheduled. In addition to interdisciplinary humanities and social science offerings, special courses in Dutch art, music and literature will provide an introduction to the culture of the Netherlands. A course in Environmental and Urban Studies will focus on contemporary ecological problems, in the "living laboratory" of Holland, the most densely populated country in the world. The open classroom approach will be used through field trips, museum and gallery visits, and independent study.

Tuition per semester is $850; students may spend a semester or a year abroad. Living accommodations in student hotels and with Dutch families are available. For application forms and further information write to: U.S. Office, The American College of Amsterdam, 62 Montague Street, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11201.

TOPIC: Contrasts and interrelationships between cultural and biological evolution

TIME: Monday, 24 April 1972 at 4 p.m.

PLACE: Auditorium of the Life Science Building

Coffee outside the Auditorium at 3:45. Dr. Blum has long been known for his penetrating thoughts on the subject of evolution. He has been the author of many publications, including the widely read book "Time's Arrow and Evolution." He recently has become much interested in the early evolution of art. His talk to us will develop a concept for cultural evolution, as contrasted to biological evolution, taking a semi-quantitative approach. He then will go on to discuss the interplay between biological and cultural evolution, and will point out some of the weaknesses of analogies drawn between these two types of evolution driven by two such different mechanisms.

UVM's Annual High School Day

Vermont high school juniors will again have the opportunity to study the various programs available at the University of Vermont on UVM's 20th annual High School Day April 22.

According to UVM Admissions Coordinator Dr. Richard Steele, it is expected that close to 1,000 Vermont juniors will sample classes, demonstrations and exhibits aimed at helping them plan their college careers.

"This visit to the University gives the high school student a perfect opportunity to check out the University and perhaps, for some, aid them in selecting which college to apply to, whether the University of Vermont or some other institution," he said.

The day will open with registration at 9 a.m. in UVM's Roy L. Patrick Gymnasium.

Model UN Assembly

On Tuesday, April 25, the members of the UVM Chapter of the United Nations Club will be leaving for New York City to participate in the most important segment of the club's activities. They will be attending the Model-UN Assembly along with delegates representing colleges and universities across the country. The University of Vermont has been chosen to represent Canada at this year's session. Delegates have spent the last two months studying Canadian foreign policy and particularly, Canada's role in the UN, in preparation for the assembly. Each member of the UN Club is assigned to a particular United Nations committee and is expected to acquaint himself fully with the topics to be discussed by that committee at the assembly. Emphasis is placed on a knowledge of the historical trends in Canadian policy as well as current positions and future perspectives.

The delegates were fortunate enough to be able to meet with a member of the Canadian Delegation to the UN, Ambassador Bruce Rankin, to discuss issues of concern to Canada. On arriving in New York, student delegates will confer further with the Canadian specialists on each of the topics to be discussed at the Model UN. The group has also been receiving preparatory advice and materials from Ambassador William Jones, UVM's diplomat in residence, and Professor James Pacy.

Following their return from New York, the members of the club hope to be able to share their experience with the rest of the University by presenting a panel discussion dealing with various aspects of the United Nations. Preparations are also being made to engage a member of the UN Speaker's Bureau to give a lecture on campus early in the fall.

ROTC Credits Not Recognized By College Of Arts And Sciences

by Jeri Covey

The College of Arts and Sciences' faculty curriculum committee voted last Wednesday to continue its policy of not recognizing ROTC credits towards graduation requirements. The College of Arts and Sciences is the only one of the University's colleges that does not accept full or partial credit in Military Studies. Also, according to Lt. Col. William Haponki, Chairman of the Military Studies Department, it is the "only one that has philosophical questions on the issue."

Lt. Col. Haponki expressed disappointment that the "curriculum committee would not give us a one year trial." However, he did say that "I feel I've been well-received." Haponki characterized the committee as courteous and willing to listen, and he hoped that they would keep an open mind on the issue.

In a statement read to the faculty of the college, Haponki stated that "ROTC programs across the country benefited from criticism in the late 60's that 'Military Science' courses were not educational enough, the faculty was deficient in academic degrees, and the host institution had too little control over the curriculum." Haponki then went on to outline how the Army had revised its program and "its entire approach to ROTC" to meet these criticisms.

The first change is that the Army offered broad curriculum guidance to Military Science professors instead of detailing for them specified courses. Second, the Army instituted a graduate degree program "in which an officer would enroll in a University's graduate college and, upon completion of his master's degree, enter that institution's Department of Military Science as a faculty member... All officers currently on our faculty are engaged in graduate studies at UVM." Haponki said that in two years all Military Studies professors at UVM will have at least a master's degree, while this goal is set for 1976 for all ROTC instructors across the country.

In regard to the third area of criticism, Haponki stated, "When I first came to UVM last summer, I found several ways in which I believed the program could be improved. Among them, I wanted our department to be as much as possible a department of the University with close relationship to the administration, faculty and students. I have tried to promote this relationship in a number of ways... I felt that to be a truly a university department, we should offer courses in military affairs to the entire university community; male and female, ROTC and non-ROTC. Accordingly, those courses normally taken only by the ROTC cadet during his first two years have been stripped Elections for President of the Student Association are next Monday and Tuesday. We feel that of the four candidates, one of them presents the most promising overall picture for a better student government at UVM. That person is Sharon Reed.

Editorial For SA President, Sharon Reed

Sharon Reed seems to be the most cognizant of the candidates of the major problem facing the SA: how to eliminate the cliquish atmosphere which prevails, and the resulting alienation of a majority of the students. The pitiful attendance at so many Senate meetings this year attests to the fact that even representatives do not view it worth their time to take an interest in Student Association, not to speak of their constituents. Of all the candidates, we feel Sharon Reed will be best prepared to effect the total shakeup and house cleaning which the Student Association needs, starting in the executive suite in Billings and proceeding downward from there. Then and only then will the Student Association be rid of the favoritism and undue influence which has not only existed but predominated. Then and only then will the students at this university begin to feel that their Activities Fee is supporting something more than an impotent bureaucracy. Although some of the other candidates have recognized the existence of power cliques, they have at times this year been part of them. It is for this reason that we feel Sharon Reed is better qualified for the job that awaits her. Her attendance record at Senate meetings is near-perfect; her proposal to go personally to freshmen dorms in the fall in order to drum up interest is an enlightening proposal that is her prerogative and needs no Senate approval.

It is for these reasons that we feel that her election would be in the best interests of all students at this university. It is for these reasons that we endorse her for President of Student Association.

Letters To The Editor Senator Gravel Warns Us To Be Wary Of Nixon's War Contradictions

Dear Editor:

On March 23, 1972, I introduced in the Senate legislation to halt immediately further U.S. bombing in Indochina and to require the total withdrawal of all U.S. military and paramilitary (e.g. CIA) personnel from Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos within 30 days after enactment.

The U.S. air war over Indochina has escalated steadily during the past several months, in direct contradiction of President Nixon's public assertions that the war continues to wind down. Due to public pressure American ground troops are slowly coming home, but they are leaving an automated war behind. Computer technology and a small number of troops manning aircraft and artillery are creating a U.S. destructive presence that may literally hover over Southeast Asia for years to come. The President's troop cuts in South Vietnam do not affect U.S. firepower in Southeast Asia at all because the planes are based in Thailand and on aircraft carriers in the Gulf of Tonkin.

At the same time that the President is stepping up the bombing, he is imposing ever more serious strictures on the release of information about the air war. Newsmen have never been allowed to go out on bombing raids outside of Vietnam, and all information about the air war except gross tonnages and sorties has been kept from the public by classifying it secret. Official statistics released on the air war are now more bare-bones than ever, and press briefings are designed to accentuate the positive rather than provide hard facts on the continuing U.S. role in the war. Most recently, for the first time since bombing North Vietnam began eight years ago, the U.S. Command in Saigon refused to give out figures on the number of planes flying missions in the North.

In the face of this new blackout on the air war I want to encourage you, as the editor of your school's newspaper, to provide your readers with candid information on this issue, and thus to join me in this election year to force an end to the war. Students have been leaders in pointing out the tragedy and mistake of Vietnam, and their help will now be vital in turning out of office those politicians who will not join us in ending the war.

I hope that those Americans throughout the country who are concerned about the immorality of the war will attend political meetings wherever there is a candidate, and ask him this very simple question: "How do you stand on ending the war?" If the candidate does not stand for ending the war as provided in my simple and clear proposal, then I hope the American people will not vote for him, for he does not deserve to occupy a high position in the government of this country.

S. 3409 now has fifteen cosponsors in the Senate, and identical legislation introduced in the House of Representatives is supported by 44 members of that body. I am enclosing a list of the names of those individuals so that students may use of their own mentors and representatives are included.

If you need further information on the legislation, please contact my office or the National Student Lobby, which is coordinating efforts on behalf of this bill within the student community.

Sincerely,
Mike Gravel
Senator of Alaska

When The Faculty Goes To Court (Again)

Dear Editor:

In last week's issue of the Cynic you interchanged the last 4 or 5 lines of this letter, and when we brought this to your attention, you told us to re-submit the letter, typed as it should correctly appear. Enclosed, please find said letter, and print it in full, correcting last week's mistake.

Thank you,
P. H. Braun

Dear Editor:

Once upon a time there was a small middle class university whose faculty was greatly oppressed by a fascist board of trustees. One day one of the less middle of the middle class faculty was fired for being not so middle by the fascist board of trustees. There arose among the faculty an outcry of protest and the board of trustees was taken to court. There an old very middle class judge told the board never to do it again, and to kindly rehire the plaintiff by this time had become a little more middle—not because he wanted to but simply—oh—just so. When the news of this great victory spread to the lowly pawns of the university who are controlled by the faculty they decided to see if they could apply the rule of due process in their own situation, and went to their superiors, the faculty, and asked to be treated more fairly.

To their surprise they were told that, since they did not have their Ph.D. in secretarial or custodial work, they had no rights other than to work and obey. And so it came to pass that the faculty of that university was finally taken to court by the lowly secretaries and custodians and another very old and middle class judge decided that degrees had nothing whatever to do with justice and that the faculty had no right to mistreat their pawns. But the faculty, being wise and learned simply decided that the judge was senile and continued their abuse of their pawns.

'Mr. Van Benthuyzen... Has Distorted View'

Dear Editor:

It was amusing to read the article, "The Public Relations Department Deserves Some Publicity" in last week's Cynic.

UVM is now in a state of Financial Crisis because of the drop in student enrollment (of more than 600) last semester, and the refusal of the state legislature to sanction the University's 1972 budget request in its entirety.

The latter has resulted in the termination of contracts of a number of valuable Faculty members for the coming academic year.

One would expect, at this point, that any FR man worth his salt would concentrate on reviewing and changing his public relations strategy to improve the image of UVM in the eyes of the State Legislature, and the people of Vermont.

But not Mr. Van Benthuyzen! He is busy writing flatterer, irrelevant commentary and worrying about the FR man not being among the top twenty professions in an obscure poll. While the students suffer because of the loss of faculty and funds, Mr. Van Benthuyzen concerns himself (and his spokesman) with publicizing his activities, his course in journalism (?) and his department at every possible opportunity. Let the students eat cake!

Perhaps 21 years in the same job has distorted Mr. Van Benthuyzen's sense of perspective.

Sincerely,
Raghu G. Kumble

When A Handbook Is A Fringe Benefit

by Steven Rice

What appeared to be a routine passage of the Faculty Senate's fringe benefits report last Friday at Life Science may've not been.

One important appendix, concerning a handbook that affects all the university's faculty, was tabled. Appendix III called for the University Officers Handbook, "as revised, be considered a binding part of the contract between the University of Vermont and its various faculty members."

Before tabling it, several serious questions were raised on how the handbook is revised now, and whether it should be a binding part of the contract.

A number of representatives wanted to know if there are any faculty members on the handbook committee, which is chaired by Dr. Alfred B. Rollins, vice-president for academic affairs.

"There use to be...there was at least one over a year ago," Chairman William White responded.

Political science professor, Dr. Richard Plannery, informed the body that he had read the latest handbook, and that, it did indeed need revision. He felt that the faculty should have control over the revision.

Enough confusion eventually led to the tabling

An Observation

Dear Faculty, Do Something

by Steven Rice

If you were looking for a quick lesson in faculty last Friday, you should've attended UVM's Faculty Senate meeting.

Since January, this esteemed body of scholars has been thinking about eliminating, or retaining, the pass-no pass option. Finally, after several weeks of arguments among the educators, the proposal was supposed to be voted on...but, it wasn't.

After a substitute motion was proposed, and a series of amendments offered, one faculty member asked for a quorum. After counting the representatives present, it was soon established that there weren't enough to officially conduct business (see story on p. 1).

Parliamentarian William Lewis was in for a long afternoon when Mrs. Gladys Jameson was recognized by chairman William White. The home economics professor introduced a substitute motion to the Wertheimer-Starron-Warner-Plannery proposal. The substitute motion called for a sweeping study of all UVM's evaluative systems.

Mrs. Jameson was eloquent in her address to the Senate. She expressed hope that the pass-no pass option would be retained, if only for a vote of confidence for the students. She lamented the division between faculty and students as "two armed camps, preparing for war." And, then, the professor asked her colleagues: "Why should we rid ourselves of just one part of a system that is working against all of us?" Dr. Alan Wertheimer then reminded the body that it wasn't a question of offering the students a vote of confidence.

"What our motion says, in effect, is that the students, because of the system, are asked to do that which is not in their best interest," he argued.

After this, a series of amendments were being offered to the Jameson resolution, calling for a deadline date on the sweeping study. Professor Neil Stout felt that a study should be completed with the understanding that pass-no pass would then be automatically dropped.

Dr. Wertheimer applauded this amendment, and said he would favor it, if it only were attached to his motion, not Mrs. Jameson's.

Dr. Coulter took issue with this. He offered an amendment of Stout's calling for the study to be completed by January, 1973, with no pre-determined ruling on pass-no pass.

The amendment passed. Then, Mrs. Jameson's now-amended motion came for a vote. Quorum was called, and since there weren't enough people to officially conduct business, the amendments were ruled invalid, and all the discussion on it didn't amount to anything.

Faculty Senate meetings, like the Student Association meetings, have a most difficult time reaching a quorum. It shouldn't be that way. But, it is, and it will continue to be. When quorums are called, consideration on vital issues, that affect the university community, cannot take place. So it was for consideration on pass-no pass.

It seemed that Mrs. Jameson's substitute motion, if nothing else, finally opened up discussion about the system of education here at the University of Vermont. The motion promised constructive action, instead of the opposite that would have occurred if the political scientists' proposal passed.

By placing a deadline on the study, it was guaranteed it would be completed. By placing no pre-determined barriers on the question of pass-no pass, an open study was guaranteed.

But, Mrs. Jameson will have to try again at the next Faculty Senate meeting.

Perhaps it would serve the university justice, if our esteemed educators attend the meeting, and address themselves to the area that, one would hope, interests them: education.

A May Day Celebration

It's a May Day celebration of pyrras, and it's open to anyone. Sponsored by the CBWM dorm complex, the event will take place on Saturday, April 29th and will run from morning (about 10-4th) till night. In case of rain it will be held the following Saturday, May 6th.

A wide variety of activities is planned; everything from a tricycle race to a rummage sale to a demonstration of various arts and crafts. Craftsmen from Fire and Metal, The Pipe Rack, Sundance, and hopefully other establishments downtown will be demonstrating their crafts. Many students will be demonstrating also, as well as selling their wares, and there's still room for more. Other areas of interest include candlemaking, bottlecapping, weaving, organized games (co-ed, of course), leather patching for pants, and a bake sale. Bands will be playing throughout the afternoon, and refreshments or dinner will be served. The sky is the limit!

If you would like to sell something or to demonstrate a craft or to participate in an activity, call Jim Pietreviso (x2084) or Gwynn Schuman (x2284). They need to know in advance so that they can make arrangements for tables and equipment and stuff like that.

When the Oyster Creek plant, a unit of the New Jersey Power and Light Co., shut down operations for routine maintenance, the creek water dropped from 60 degrees to 37 degrees within 48 hours. Thousands of dead fish in the area were the apparent victims of thermal shock. Most of the fish killed were Atlantic Menhaden, which by this time of year would have ordinarily migrated to warmer waters.

New York Anti-war March Plans Revealed

To The Editor:

The escalation of the air war, and the resumption of the bombing of North Vietnam by the United States government shatter the myth that the "war is winding down". The emergency antiwar demonstrations in New York and Los Angeles will be a powerful response to Nixon's escalation of the war in Southeast Asia. Never before has an explosion of antiwar protest by the American people been so crucial.

We can end this war if we redouble our efforts to mobilize the American people. A massive outpouring on April 22 will make clear the message of the antiwar majority: U.S.

out of Indochina now!

Logistical: New York. Assemble at 10 a.m. at Central Park West and 72nd Street. March begins at noon, south on Central Park West to 7th Avenue to Broadway to 39th Street. Rally will be conducted from 1 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. at 6th Avenue (Avenue of the Americas) between 39th and 42nd Streets.

A partial list of speakers include: Congresswoman Bella Abzug; Jim Bouton, sportscaster; Lanny Davis, National Youth Coordinator for Muskie Campaign.

Bicycle

by Dan Heaton

For many Americans the "in" thing in sports this year is the bicycle. The motivations for the rise in popularity are obvious, since riding bicycles is both good exercise and free. The initial cost of the vehicle is the only outlay the consumer has, but one would be surprised at the recent increase in the rise of prices. One reason, besides inflation, (for a change) is that of demand. Earl Foley, owner of Earl's Schwinn Cycles, stated that the limited production that the Europeans can manufacture is not meeting the American demand. Schwinn alone had netted sales of 1,400,000 bicycles last year.

When and where did the bike boom originate? Foley suggests that it started four years ago in California and gradually spread East, starting its climax here about two years ago. The clientele of the bicycle market is one big reason for the boom. They are ecologically concerned, economically minded, and just plain fun-loving is nothing else.

The boom is not without its consequences, though. The Burlington Free Press stated that there were two deaths resulting from bicycles last year. Earl Foley claims that with the rise in sales and use there will undoubtedly be more accidents and deaths this year. This he attributes to "no on Saturday, May 6th.

A variety of activities is planned; everything from a to a rummage sale to a demonstration of various crafts. Craftsman from Fire and Metal, The Pipe Rack, and hopefully other establishments downtown will be exhibiting their crafts. Many students will be selling also, as well as selling their wares, and there's a lot for more. Other areas of interest include leather patching for pants, and a bake sale. Bands will be playing throughout the afternoon, and refreshments or be served. The sky is the limit!!

Bicycle Fad Takes Route

by Dan Hadwin
For many Americans the "in" thing is sports this year is the bicycle. The motivations for the rise in popularity are obvious, since riding bicycles is both good exercise and free.
The initial cost of the vehicle is the only outlay the consumer has, but one would be surprised at the recent increase in the rise of prices. One reason, besides inflation, (for a change) is that of demand. Earl Foley, owner of Earl's Schwinn Cyclery, stated that the limited production that the Europeans can manufacture is not meeting the American demand.
Schwinn alone had tentatively sales of 1,400,000 bicycles last year.

The beginning of another bicycle season.

When and where did the bike boom originate? Foley suggests that it started four years ago in California and gradually spread East, starting its climax here about two years ago. The clientele of the bicycle market is one big reason for the boom. They are ecologically minded, and just plain fun-loving is nothing else.
The boom is not without its consequences, though. The Schwinn-Sears-Boss stated that there were two deaths resulting from bicycles last year. Earl Foley claims that with the rise in sales and use, there will undoubtedly be more accidents and deaths this year. This he attributes to "no uniform traffic" and the lack of enforcement of existing ordinances concerning the pedalists. Bike paths are one alternative to the problem, but they would be expensive, and again there is the problem of enforcement and safety to the users. Currently there is a bill in Washington, D.C. which would provide federal funds to individual states to build bike paths. This is a long-term project though, and Foley has a suggestion to increase safety

now. He feels an ordinance should be effected to allow four feet of each one-way or parking-on-one-side-of-the-street-only roads to be marked for use by bicycles, and those streets without potential space, like Church Street, should be forbidden to cyclists.

Another major problem for today's enthusiast is parts. For each part needed for repair of a foreign cycle there must be the reserve supply. As it now stands, there are no supplies readily enough available since the foreign production cannot keep the pace. Everyone loves especially the consumer.

Whatever your losses or problems, it's Spring, and this means many more people with wheels. So, enjoy it, watch it—and take in a little of Nature's best!

Look at the impressive improvements within the Experimental Program. A great deal of this J.J. made real along with other interested people, too many to name in fact.

Chemistry Department's Dr. Gregg Performs Unique Job For UVM

by Barbara Frankel
Dr. Donald Gregg, self-confessed "old man of the chemistry department," works under two hats—the first as chemistry professor and "public relations officer of the department" and the second as a "roving ambassador" who tours the state giving chemistry shows to various schools and organizations.
He began his career as a lecturer when his older son was in the sixth grade and Dr.
Gregg was asked to give a talk and show some basic chemical experiments. That was fourteen years ago and he has been doing it ever since. His "chemical magic show," which, according to Dr. Gregg, is not really magic, but merely a performance of the "magic of chemistry," has traveled all over the state and was recently one of the subjects of an "Insight UVM" television program. His show, which is performed not less than fifteen times a year, has been given to a variety of groups ranging from the Ophiomologists Association to the Cub Scouts.
As Dr. Gregg says, "It gets me out in the community in the context of something I do well."

It is with the children's groups that he enjoys himself the most. He tries to get to the children, through the means of chemistry, who may not test well, but who are actually brighter than some of the others. The one thing that bothers Dr. Gregg, however, is the fact that too many children
"don't realize what they're doing with chemistry. Here is a branch of science that can be very dangerous if you aren't knowledgeable." In order to teach children to be careful, he does some very basic problems.
For example, he will tell them that there's something very dangerous in their own houses.
This "harmful" substance is water. To illustrate this, Dr.
Gregg shows them a harmless powder. When he adds water to it, however, he creates an explosion. "So," he adds,
"water, or any substance, can be extremely dangerous if you go too far without the proper training."

As to his other side, that of UVM's oldest chemistry professor and that of general science, Dr. Gregg claims to have more time to spend with his students because he does not do any research; he spends all his free time advising student activities and helping students. He has been advisor to the Student Association for twenty-two years, besides being advisor to Sig Alpha Epsilon, the Boulder Society and the Pre-Med Club.
Always having been interested in athletics, he has been a member of the Centennial Club since its formation, and has been a member of the Athletic Council for the last five years.
Additionally, he is on the executive committee of St.
Anselm's and has been since 1946. As Dr. Gregg says,
"Chemistry is not my only role. I have more time because younger people can do the research. More students know me because I spend more time as a friend advising them."

To keep himself busy, Dr.
Gregg started the Society of UVM Chemists in 1963. This association deals with anybody who has ever been formally connected with the university's chemistry department. Dr.
Gregg sends out at least one newsletter a year, so that members can "keep in touch".
Dr. Gregg claims the remarkable record of not having known less than 7,000 students personally since he came to UVM in 1946. He says that if given the choice of three things in this world, he would take health and friends as the first two. "The older you get, the more pleasure you get out of life as you add friends. You get to the stage when you are able to do the things you couldn't when you were younger," stated the admirable Dr. Gregg. As for his students, he concluded, "The beauty of being a teacher is the fact that your horizon is limitless.
Students are a steady-made family to augment to my own, and, there's a new crop every year."

Dr. Gregg's now-amended motion came for a vote was called, and since there weren't enough officially conduct business, the amendments were A, and all the discussion on it didn't amount to anything.

Women Bring Suit For Unfair Hiring Policy

MISSOULA, Montana (CPS) — An ad hoc committee of faculty women is bringing suit against the University of Montana for discriminatory salary, hiring and promotion practices.
In a March 16 letter to President Robert Pantzer, the committee requested that the University administration "as of April 1, 1972, in addition to whatever back pay is deserved, eliminate differences in salaries by making the appropriate alignments for women faculty members and insure that no further discrepancies occur."

The letter also stated that unless the deadline was met,
"legal action can be taken against the University to bring about compliance with the law." The law comes from a national executive order prohibiting discrimination of any kind in projects using federal funds.

Late in March Pantzer said it was not possible to meet the April 1 deadline given by the committee. He said that he would charge various committees with the responsibility of reviewing the situation and that he would begin to prepare an appeal to the State legislature calling for special allocations.

A spokeswoman for the committee claimed that the money does not have to come from the legislature. She said that it is in the budget and needs only to be re-budgeted.

The committee is now consulting with local attorneys on the most effective way to take legal action and the suit is expected to be filed in the next two weeks.

First S. A. Presidential Candidate Forum Attempts To Clarify Issues, But Draws Few Students

by Jeri Covey

The first of four open forums of the Student Association presidential candidates was held on Monday night in North Lounge, Billings. Only a handful of students were present of the four candidates, Terry Demas, John Franco, Sharon Reed and Bill Sisco.

The first question asked concerned their views of the primary problem of the Student Association. Terry Demas took the stand that the major problem was that SA had for too many years been concerned with non-University issues and had not handled the things that they should of handled. He said that the SA, meaning the president and his cabinet, should be non-partisan, and should let other special-interest groups, such as VTAC handle the specific issues.

John Franco, Coalition for a Democratic University candidate, took the opposite point of view saying that the SA has to take some definite stands because the University is a political organization. Sharon Reed said that the main problem is that most students feel that "SA is not a part of them." She feels that the president's job is to find out what the students want, what their gripes are, and get students outside of the SA governing body to work on the problems. Bill Sisco said that SA has to do something about the affairs of the University, such as tuition, grades, concerts. The SA "can't sit in the middle of the road", it must face the issues.

The next question concerned the SA financial policy and where should the SA money go. John Franco answered that money should go to any group that is a constituent part of the student body and has a particular complaint of problem, such as women, blacks, and Chicano-Americans. Terry Demas, pointing out that SA was hardest hit in the area of money by the Sylvester suit, said that money should go to any group that is not political, not religious, not selective, and not using the money exclusively for dinners and booze.

Bill Sisco suggested that a large amount of money be reserved for use by the general student body. Much of the money is going to small clubs, and very little of the student body is receiving all the benefit of their money. According to Sharon Reed, students need to know where the money is going. The Chairman of the Finance Committee should be available to help the students because "few people know how to make the (financial) system work."

Chris Stapley, of the Coalition for a Democratic University, asked the other candidates, especially Terry Demas, how they proposed to keep SA non-partisan and from becoming elitist. Demas answered that SA "must have a (non-partisan) administration". Past presidents have been special interest minded, but the president should not be biased in order to be able to recognize all the varied interest groups. The Senate as a legislative body, however, should take a stand on the issues. Bill Sisco commented that the president can speak as an individual, but should not imply that his personal views are those of the entire student body.

Another question dealt with, what should the SA policy be toward the Parental suit. Terry Demas answered that the suit is something that Parents must handle, however the SA should use its influence to try to change the Board's mind. But, he added, that we are all part of the same organization, and so we mustn't use divisive tactics. Bill Sisco said that the Board has the legal right to do this because they have been chartered by the legislature, and until the legislature changes this we must abide by the Board. The legislature has to answer for the Board's actions because we are a state institution.

Along this same line, a question was asked as to what the composition of the governing board should be and what power it should have. Terry Demas said that there shouldn't be a Board of Trustees whose members only come three times a year. The board should have several points of view, represented. He also added that right now, most of the power rests in the faculty senate, and this must be changed.

Bill Sisco said that the faculty is in a precarious situation, going on, and that the faculty is in a precarious situation, therefore, we shouldn't be critical of letting them have their say. He also added that we must remember that the University is owned by the state and that the people are paying for the University. John Franco suggested a council be made up of students, faculty, and non-administration employees. The students being the most numerous should have the plurality on the council, but "...I oppose the administration having any power." Sharon Reed said that the present Board has to be renovated, but we shouldn't tear down the structure. A certain percentage of the student body, faculty, non-administrative, administrative members should be represented on the Board in addition to the political appointees. Sharon also reiterated that being a state university, we can't get away from the legislature.

Other open forums to be held are on Thursday, April 20 in North Lounge, Billings at 12:00 pm, Sunday on April 23 in WDW Lounge at 6:30 pm and on Monday, April 24 at Kappa Alpha Theta at 6:45 pm. Voting will be on Monday and Tuesday, April 24 and 25, in the dining hall, Billings Center, and possibly in the fraternities. See page six for further articles on the election.

Green-Up Week Bicycle Ride

A fifteen year old girl will bicycle from Burlington's City Hall Park with a message from the Mayor of Burlington to the Governor in Montpelier on April 29 as part of Green-up week activities.

Miss Kerry Dunlop, a member of the Green Mountain Bicycle Club, will receive a message from the Mayor of Burlington at noon in City Hall Park and cycle down Route 2 to Montpelier where she will deliver the message to Governor Davis in front of the State Capitol at 3:30 p.m.

"The purpose of the ride"

according to Keith Gardner, Chairman of the Green Mountain Bicycle Club, "is to focus attention on the bicycle as a practical, economical, pollution-free and healthy form of transportation. The ride also demonstrates that you don't have to be a superman (or woman) to ride a bike for 36 miles."

Several members of the club plan to accompany Miss Dunlop on her ride. In addition to the cycling cavalcade, outsiders will carry Green-up bags to collect any remaining roadside trash along Route 2.

On Sunday, April 23 there will be the Big Brother/Sister Annual Picnic-Fair. It will be held in conjunction with Robinson Hall (the environmental dorm). There will be refreshments, games, movies, a treasure hunt, relay races, short flicks, impromptu skits and a pinata contest. So bring your little kids to this fun event from 1-4 PM, this Sunday in the area of Robinson Hall. For any questions, call OVP at extension 2062.

Campus Fast For Peace

A campus wide fast in the dining halls has been scheduled for April 29 and May 3. This fast is a positive expression of participants non-violent opposition to the continuing war in Southeast Asia. It is a constructive action since it will raise participants sensitivity to the suffering of the Indo-Chinese people. It will also provide funds for food and medicine for the innocent victims of this cruel war.

Saga has required that there be at least 1,000 participants for each day of fasting. All those who have signed the petitions now in circulation have committed themselves for the two days: Fast For Peace.

Fraternity Forum Elections

Fraternity Forum elections are scheduled to be held on Monday, April 24 from 9 AM to 4 PM in Lower Billings Center.

Jack Arute, retiring President of the Forum, announced at last week's meeting that three candidates are running for the post of President: Jim Morse of Sigma Phi, Steve Wood of Sigma Phi Epsilon, and Marc Goldstein of Sigma Nu. The person receiving the highest number of votes, naturally, will be the next president; the person receiving the next highest number will be vice-president. The positions of Secretary and Treasurer of Fraternity Forum are appointed positions.

The three candidates have been speaking at the individual fraternity houses, and hope to cover all 16 by the time of Monday's election.

Residence Halls And Room Choosing

The single "Heart of Gold" part in the freshmen program are Chittenden, Buckham, Wills, and Jeanne Mance.

Additional changes in residence halls involve Harris-Mills going out by suites and Hamilton Hall becoming part of the Experimental Program.

Dates for room-choosing for 1972-73 are as follows: 1972-73 seniors may sign up for their rooms on April 19, while 1972-73 juniors may select rooms on April 20-21. 1972-73 sophomores indicate their room-choice on April 24-25. Sign-up will take place during the hours of 8:00 A.M. and 4:30 P.M. in March Lounge in Billings. Students signing up during the designated hours must have submitted their room-and-meals contracts last Friday, April 14.

These three young men just made the discovery of a lifetime. The oldest is 34.

Remember when a young man could get ahead in business simply by growing old? It was a good system for those with a little talent and a lot of patience, but today's technology moves too fast to wait for seniority.

At Kodak, our extensive involvement in basic research has made the need for fresh, young thinking more pressing than ever. So we hire the best new talent we possibly can. Then we do both of us a favor by turning them loose on real problems, and giving them the freedom and responsibility they need to solve them.

That's how three Kodak scientists in their early thirties just made a breakthrough in liquid lasers, developing an organic dye laser with a continuous beam. Their discovery means more than just a new kind of laser. It means a whole range of new laser applications, in fields from medicine to communications.

It was the kind of discovery most men work a lifetime for. Yet these young men still have most of their lifetime ahead of them.

Why do we give young men so much freedom and responsibility? Because it's good business, and we're in business to make a profit. But in furthering our own business interests, we also further society's interests. And that's good.

After all, our business depends on society. So we care what happens to it.

More than a business.

Three Solid Rock Albums

by Doug Collette
HARVEST/Neil Young
(Reprise MS 2012)
CROUSE/Crazy Horse (Reprise MS 2039)
1-1/1 Neil Lofgren/Gris
(Spendary Z31038)

In a variety of combinations, Neil Young, Crazy Horse and Neil Lofgren have made much excellent rock and roll in the past three years. A turnover of personnel has changed slightly the Crazy Horse that toured with Neil and helped him make one classic album (Everybody Knows This Is Nowhere) and one nearly as good (After the Gold Rush) and Lofgren, whose self-introduction to Neil and Crazy Horse in a Washington, D.C. nightclub resulted in his playing on Gold Rush and the first Crazy Horse LP, formed his own band, Gris, on whose initial album Young and Crazy Horse played and sang.

All of Neil Young's music, from his early days with the Buffalo Springfield, through his work with Crosby, Stills and Nash and his solo career, has been some of the most deeply-felt rock and roll I've had the opportunity to hear. Harvest is Neil's most personal statement and the directness and force of these ten songs very nearly equal, if they don't surpass, the intensity of Van Morrison's music.

Neil's solo albums don't exhibit a direct progression in style; instead each one represents a particular facet of Young's musical consciousness which is reflected in the accompaniment the songs are given. On Harvest Neil has kept instruments to a minimum, although not to the degree John Lennon did on his first LP. On seven of the tunes, Neil is accompanied by Jack Nitzsche, who began working with Neil in the last days of the Springfield, and three Nashville musicians, Ken Buttrey, Ben Keith and Tim Drummond who were dubbed the Stray Gators; the fact that the performances don't sound slickly country is a tribute both to the power and identity of the compositions and to the talent of these musicians. The backing isn't monotonous either, because the tunes have immediately memorable melodies like those of "Out On The Weekend" and "Old Man" that mark Neil's later, more mature songs. In addition, the musicians often insert inflections to their part in the arrangement that let you know that what they're doing is important. For instance, Ken Buttrey puts an extra bass drum kick on the work "Alabama" in that successor to "Southern Man", an attention-focusing device similar to the one he used in "George Jackson". Keith's pedal steel is also especially notable, for throughout he plays sprightly, bending mournful notes that sound very much like Neil's voice played on that instrument.

And that distinctive plaintive voice is as usual the perfect tool with which to convey the meaning of what Neil wants to say. The lyrics to the songs are for the most part kept simple, perhaps as a conscious effort not to overdo it, since the voice and words communicate so forcefully in a complementary effort. For another artist, such an attempted combination might be unnecessary or even futile, but "The Needle and The Damage Done," sung with just an acoustic guitar, says more and reaches deeper than the grotesque "Sister Morphine." (It may only my imagination, but the applause left in at the end of this live cut seems like nothing less than an affirmation of the point of view just expressed. Neil Young may be getting as inscrutable as Bob Dylan.)

The single "Heart of Gold" succinctly captures one of the album's major themes, the search for a lasting love relationship, but how Neil betrays, conceals in singing the song, as I've heard it changed, beyond me. I've been in my mind for such a fine line demonstrates a self-awareness that takes courage to reveal.

Several members of the club plan to accompany him on his ride. In addition to the cycling cavalcade, members will carry Green-up bags to collect any remaining roadside trash along Route 2.

April 23 there will be the Big Brother/Sister Day. It will be held in conjunction with (the environmental) day. There will be games, movies, a treasure hunt, relay races, computer skills and a picnic contest. So bring to this fun event from 1-4 PM, this Sunday in Union Hall. 10 An prospective May 19/22 Degree - unknown - College of Arts and Sciences

If you expect to complete all requirements this semester for either the Bachelor of Arts or the Bachelor of Science in Business Administration degree please inspect the prospective degree candidate lists posted on the Registrar's Bulletin Board, 360 Waterman, for your name and permanent address.

You should report any correction, addition or deletion to the Dean's Office, College of Arts and Sciences, 300 Waterman Building, as soon as possible. Diplomas and the Commencement Program will be prepared from these lists as amended.

Like this song, most of Harvest describes the situation of a man alone, a situation that most of us, I suspect, but accept as fact, knowing as he does his own nature and realizing the sacrifice one must make to share life with another: "To give a love you got to live a love/To live a love you got to be part of." It's this realization that prompts the feeling expressed in "A Man Needs A Maid." Like "There's A World," it uses a gigantic arrangement of the London Symphony Orchestra to reinforce the image of the solitary man and in juxtaposing two meanings of the word "maid" that are light years apart, the song gains an enormous strength and meaning that makes it difficult not to get some sense of the dilemma Neil Young faces.

Like John Lennon's first album and what I've heard of Paul Simon's new LP, Harvest is a painfully honest statement that deals with some not-so-pleasant truths. But the fact that Neil has chosen to express himself on subjects which may not be so enjoyable to hear about is no measure whatsoever of his skill as an artist. It's the purity with which he has translated these emotions into his music and at the same time, made them accessible to us that make him one of the most important songwriters and musicians we have.

With the turnover of personnel, the Crazy Horse sound of dirty, dirty rock and roll has given way to a more diverse package: The "wall of sound" as Neil Young described it is now more closely interrelated to gentle acoustic music, and the two types of music reinforce each other so that the band doesn't straddle two areas on unsure footing. The new Crazy Horse are in full command of themselves whether playing a carefree tune like "All Alone Now," building a tough rocker, "One Sided Love," on a simple chord pattern driven by a chunky bass and drums or doing songs that are just plain pretty—"Fairweather Friend" and "Kind of Woman."

The group does suffer somewhat by the loss of guitarist Danny Whitten's lyrics. The songs that comprise Loose were all written by the new members, guitarists Greg Leroy and George Whittell and keyboard man John Blanton and though they're not nearly so poetic as Whitten could be, they make up for their seeming lack of sophistication and redeem themselves in sequences like this one from "I Don't Believe It":

I believe that it's true you're makin' me blue
And I can't live without you
And it feels so good to be strong
And it feels so good when I'm gone.

But the innocence and lack of pretension in songs like these and the way Crazy Horse sings and plays is positively refreshing. It's reassuring to know there are bands like this one around to give us good rock and roll when the big stars fall short.

Gris in another one of those bands and their second album is neatly divided into a "Rockin' Side" and a "Dreamy Side." But even in the hard stomp rock and roll of the former, there's an open straight-talk in the lyrics and a lyricism of melody.

Lofgren's main axe is the guitar and he's superb whether bashing out high-energy riffs or sweeping away acoustically. He plays keyboards much less than on the first LP but when he does play piano, organ or harpsichord here, he's just as proficient. The rhythm section of Bob Gordon and Bob Berberich are tight and mellow in whatever context they play and to top it all off, Niki, with occasional help from Gordon, sings with an unself-conscious abandon long lost in older artists.

The end result of all this, as with Crazy Horse, is completely infectious and even a little humorous.

Final Lane Concert

Preservation Hall Jazz Band Presents New Orleans-Style Jazz

Billie Pierce, piano in Preservation Hall Jazz Band.

Preservation Hall Jazz Band, direct from the room of the same name in New Orleans, will offer the last Lane concert of the season on Wednesday, April 26, in Memorial Auditorium at 8:30 p.m. The concert is almost sold out. Only a limited number of tickets, $6 and $5.25, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. Telephone reservations may be made by calling 656-3418.

The six-man group will present a program of spirituals, ragtime, blues and marches through the medium of jazz-New Orleans style. Comprising the band are Billie Pierce, piano; De De Pierce, cornet; Cleo Frazier, drums; Willie Humphrey, clarinet; Jim Robinson, trombone; and Allan Jaffe, tuba. Nearly all are well over 60.

"Billie" (Wilhelmina) Pierce, piano, was born in 1907 in Marianna, Florida. She was living in Pensacola when she was 15 and the great blues singer Bessie Smith came to town. But Clarence Williams, the accompanist, was ill and Billie filled in with great success for a week. That influence can still be heard in her vocal style. Billie came to New Orleans in 1929 after touring in the south. In 1935 she was playing with George Lewis on Decatur Street when DeDe joined the band. They were married one week later and have been playing together ever since, including twelve years at Luthjen's where all the greats played with them.

"De De" (Joseph La Croix) Pierce, cornet, is the leader. He learned the trumpet from Kid Rena and Professor Chaligny and first played professionally with Arnette De Bar. He was born in New Orleans in 1904; his family was French-speaking. He added Creole folk songs to his repertoire, and the great pop hit "Eh La Bas" was one he introduced. His sight failed in the 1950's.

UVM Professor's Book On Film-making Cited

The English Speaking Union has selected a book by Prof. Frank Manchel of the University of Vermont as an "ambassador book" to be exhibited with a permanent collection throughout the English-speaking world.

"Cinema West," the fifth in a series of books by Dr. Manchel detailing the history and techniques of film-making, and written for high-school readers, was published last year by Prentice Hall. It has also been listed by the Junior Literary Guild, a national book club for young readers.

The English Speaking Union each year selects 100 American books which contribute to a better understanding of the U.S., and which are "unique in terms of content and style."

"Cinema West" was cited for Dr. Manchel's emphasis on "the differences between fact and fiction in America's frontier mythology," and on the new trends taking place in film-making as a result of a better-informed audience. The author teaches film history in the University department of communication

Cle (Joseph H.) Frazier, drums, comes from a family that was very important in early New Orleans music. Born in 1904, he bought his first drums in 1921 and three years later was the drummer for the Bush Hall Golden Rule Band. In 1927 he recorded with Papa Celestin's Tuxedo Orchestra and has since recorded with Wooden Joe Nicolas and on many other labels in recent years. In 1942 he enlisted in the Army (La.) Navy Band. When he was discharged in 1945, he joined the Celestin Band. He has been the regular drummer with the Eureka Brass Band. He recorded both of the Preservation Hall records and has made many tours including the Billie and DeDe tour of Europe and the earlier tour with Alvin Alcorn and Papa Foster.

Willie J. Humphrey, clarinet, was born in 1907 with his father's band at a Poydras Market butcher party. In 1919, when he was 19, he left his native New Orleans and went first to St. Louis and later to Chicago, where he played with King Oliver and Freddie Keppard. He has played with most of the great names and recorded with Dewey Jackson, Red Allen and, of course, at Preservation Hall. He has been a teacher in New Orleans since the mid-thirties. In World War II he played with a Navy band; in the fifties he was with the great Paul Barbarin band.

Jim (Nathan) Robinson, trombone, started first on guitar at his home in Deer Range, Louisiana where he was born in 1892. In World War I in the Army in France he began playing trombone. When he returned to New Orleans he played at home until one night he subbed with Kid Rena's band, after that he was a regular. He worked on the docks between musical jobs. He was with Sam Morgan from '22 until 1933 and on the 1927 Columbia Recordings. He is also on the Kid Rena recordings of 1940 and made the famous revival recordings with Bunk Johnson in the middle-forties and played the New York engagement. He has been at Preservation Hall since his very early days and has his own very loyal following. He has his own group on several labels.

Allan Jaffe, tuba, has been proprietor of Preservation Hall since 1961. Jaffe is an accomplished musician. He does not come from New Orleans; in fact, he was born in Pottsville, Pa., from which school he made the All-State Band and won a scholarship to Valley Forge Military Academy. After graduation from the Wharton School of Finance, he joined the Army and was stationed at Fort Polk, Louisiana. After he was married in 1960, he moved to New Orleans and began a series of events which have led to the concert here in Burlington on April 26.

Hundreds of thousands of words have been written to describe New Orleans music.

but no one has succeeded, it started with tribal dances from Africa and sophisticated Creole Quodrilles, with funeral marches and Mardi Gras parades, with the blues and many picnics and all of those things are in jazz. It was originally polyphonic because everyone of these people was so talented that he could play the parts for ensemble sound. The emphasis is still on the ensemble, but each soloist must be heard as each one was at the beginning. The cornet or trumpet has the melody, the clarinet has the counterpoint, the trombone has the harmony, and then all of a sudden it is changed. This happy music is improvised, it is simple and effective; it doesn't try for erratic effects, it sings and it laughs and it cries, and so do its listeners.

Preservation Hall was built in 1750. It has been a home, a tavern, an artists haven (there, many painters have worked there) an art gallery and now it is a home again. Today it is the home of Allan and Sandra Jaffe, who run Preservation Hall, and it is the home of New Orleans jazz and the pioneers who created it.

In 1961 the Jaffes took over from the club that had held rehearsals there and hung out the two music cases that are the sign today. Benches line the walls, pictures abound, and entrance is by donation in the wicker basket that has been the "kitty" since 1961. Inside are the men and women who pioneered the jazz music of New Orleans. The address is 726 St. Peter Street in the heart of the French Quarter. The purpose is to preserve the music of New Orleans that gave birth to jazz. The curators are the originators who play there nightly so the art is preserved alive. A school of young people has developed at the Hall, and a legion of friends and fans are around the world singing its praises. From it come the bands that tour the authentic music of the Preservation Hall Jazz Band of New Orleans, Louisiana.

The old man was lying face down on the ground.
—Ja haffa bitten so hard?
—Christ, I think he's dead.
—Shit, now we're gonna it.
—Who are you trying to kid?
—Yeah, nobody bothers us about it.
—But I didn't mean to hit him that hard.
—Oh out it out.
—He ain't moving at all.
—Ya think he's dead?
—I dunno.
—Scarfo, see if he's dead.
—Why me?
—Why not?

I pondered over this for a moment, slowly moved to where the old man of gray hair on his head peeked out from into his head. I touched his chest. He had been glued to the ground.

—I think he's dead.
—Oh shit.
—You sure?
—Almost pretty sure.
—Check his head Scarfo. See if it's there.
—Oh come on.
—Do it Scarfo.

I turned back to the old man. He had sneaked away on me. The head of the hat. It was wooly, scratchy stained red when I pulled it away.

—There's some blood.
—See how much Scarfo.
—Iugged at the hat, but it was jammed without the hat holding it together, but not before a piece, a large gray piece—
—SCARFO! WAKE UP, IT'S PAST 10.
—Ok, mom.

I opened my eyes and saw Marton morning that is my room. My head curtains. Sympathizing, I got out of room like the Vandals into Rome, the bathroom to wash off what was breakfast was waiting for me.

—Scarfo?
—Mmm?
—Are you ready for your party?
—Party?
—Your birthday party.
—What birthday party?
—The one for your birthday. Do you forget?

—I forgot.
—How could you forget this Scarfo? I dunno. Maybe out I don't want. What do you mean you don't want? I'm not everybody. Besides, you're only ten Scarfo.
—You're the one who said I was not that advanced.

—Well another thing, I don't have. Why of course you have friends. Then who's coming to this party? All of your friends, Louis, Nick, Terrific.

—What does that mean?
—It means that they're all assholes. Scarfo! Where did you pick that up? I dunno.
—Well, don't ever let me hear you say that.
—Ok, May I be excused?

—You may. Oh yes, that pretty Alice too?
—Yes. Oh, and Scarfo?
—Hmmm?
—Don't go out. The party starts at 10.
—Ok, I'll be upstairs.

The time dragged on. The sun of light seeped into the room. I tried sleep. The necessary silence frightens dreams kept me awake. So I set the alarm.

Friends, I thought to myself you...cannot...quite...ummm...

That's just an example of some. Unfortunately, my heavy thinking bringing my attention to the good gotten it a year ago when having found the ear I wanted. The old man found after had hit him over and when I took out my knife and knife——Scarfo! I looked down, it had been down?

—Ok mom. Although I don't believe Louis was there. Louis was always on the also to respect Father Time. Even earlier with mysterious bloodied had been on Louis's bat when he came. Louis was my best friend.

—I used to thank him for this, thanking him. He did say thanks also let me use his bat at night when I was a kid.
—...don't you think so Scarfo?

—Mmm?
—Doesn't Louis look nice?
—Surely does. You look nice Louis.
—Yeah. Thanks.

—Well, I must get back to the bathroom. The words trailing behind me.
—Scarfo?
—Hmmm?
—What is all this shit?
—Shit, mentioning to the door.

Creative Writing Contest Winner-Short Story

Scarfo's Birthday Party

By Michael Breiner

The old man was lying face down next to the bench.

-Is he hurt so bad?
-Christ, I think he's dead.
-Shit, now we're gonna fix it.
-Who are you trying to kid?
-Yeah, nobody bothers us about this stuff.
-But I didn't mean to hit him that hard. He must've been sick.
-Oh out it out.
-He ain't moving at all.
-Ya think he's dead?
-I dunno.
-Scarfo, see if he's dead.
-Why me?
-Why not?

I pondered over this for a moment, and realizing that I had no other choice when I faced this sort of logic, I slowly moved to where the old man was lying. His salt and peppery suit lay spilled over him. The last few tufts of gray hair on his head peeked out from under a brown hat. The hat had a crease in it where Nicky's bat had laid into his head. I touched his chest. The body seemed awfully hard. I tried to lift one of the arms but it must have been glued to the ground.

-I think he's dead.
-Oh shit.
-You sure?
-Almost pretty sure.
-Check his head Scarfo. See if it's hurt very bad.
-Oh come on.
-Do it Scarfo.

I turned back to the old man. He hadn't moved even though I was wishing that he might have sort of upped and snaked away on me. The hat was brown now with my attention focused on it. I reached under the brim of the hat. It was sticky, scratchy soft against my fingers. I felt sticky underneath under the brim. My hand claimed red when I pulled it away.

-There's some blood.
-See how much Scarfo.
I tugged at the hat, but it was jammed on his head too tight. I pulled harder. The top of his head fell apart without the hat holding it together, and blood poured over my hands. I screamed and pulled my hands away, but not before a piece, a large gray spongy piece had fallen against my fingers. I screamed...

-SCARFO! WAKE UP, IT'S PAST TEN.

-Ok, man.
I opened my eyes and saw Marion Brando, his bike and trophy grayer than usual in the darkness of the early morning that is my room. My head moved slightly and I could see the sun trying to force its way past the curtains. Sympathizing, I got out of bed and pulled open the city doors, and watched the sun pour into the room like the Vandale into Rome. I threw a shirt over my shoulders and tugged on a pair of pants. I went into the bathroom to wash off what was left of the blood that had gotten on my hands. When I got downstairs, breakfast was waiting for me.

-Scarfo?
-Mmm?
-Are you ready for your party?
-Party?
-Your birthday party.
-What birthday party?
-The one for your birthday. Don't tell me you've forgotten about it?
-I forgot.
-How could you forget this Scarfo?
-I dunno. Maybe our I don't want a party.
-What do you mean you don't want a party. Everybody likes parties.
-I'm not everybody. Besides, parties are for kids.
-You're only ten Scarfo.
-You're the one who said I was advanced for my age.
-Not that advanced.
-Well another thing, I don't have any friends. Who'll come to a party?
-Why of course you have friends Scarfo. What a ridiculous thing to say.
-Then who's coming to this party?
-All of your friends. Louis, Nicky, Sandy, Oskar, Sissy, Carl, Lyle, Timbo, and Fred.
-Terrific.
-What does that mean?
-It means that they're all assholes.
-Scarfo! Where did you pick that horrid expression?
-I dunno.
-Well, don't ever let me hear you using it again.
-Ok. May I be excused?
-You may. Oh yes, that pretty Alice girl is coming too.
-Alice too?
-Yes. Oh, and Scarfo?
-Mmm?
-Don't go out. The party starts at one.
-Ok. I'll be upstairs.

The time dragged on. The sun crept across the floor, more and more dust floating whitely as more and more light seeped into the room. I tried reading but couldn't concentrate, and my records only seemed to put me to sleep. The necessary silence frightened me and yet the safety of sound only put me to sleep where the fear of dreams kept me awake. So I sat there and thought.

"Friends, I thought to myself for who else can a person think to? Anyway, Friends are people who you cannot...quite...ummm...describe. Yes, that's it. That's it precisely.

That's just an example of some of the thoughts I was thinking watching the dust float in my room. Unfortunately, my heavy thinking was lost as the door bell to the front door rang, scattering my thoughts and bringing my attention to the good luck ear that hung at the end of a silver chain on one of my shelves. I had gotten it a year ago when having an ear charm was the thing. It had taken several weeks of searching before I found the ear I wanted. The old man had been feeding pigeons when me and Sissy and Carl had jumped him. Even after we had hit him over and over on the head with our lunch bowls he had still whimpered. He screamed when I took out my knife and knived by his head, and when I began cutting, the blood...

-Scarfo! (I looked down, it had happened again.) Your friends are here. Don't you think it's time you came down?

-Ok mom. Although I don't believe in it, I cracked the ear for luck, and went downstairs.
Louis was there. Louis was always punctual and always on time. He was also probably my best friend, if I had one. Louis was always on time because his mother had taught him to respect the feelings of others, and also to respect Father Time. Even after Louis's father had found Louis's mother hanging from a pipe in the cellar with mysterious bloodied bruises across her head which, coincidentally, matched the reddish stains that had been on Louis's bat when he got home, Louis was always on time. Maternal instruction stick with you I guess. Louis was my best friend because except for Alice, he was the only one in the bunch who didn't pick on me. I used to thank him for this whenever I beat him up, but since he never said you're welcome I stopped thanking him. He did say thanks though, sometimes when I stuck pine in his arms or something like that. He also let me use his bat at night whenever I needed it.

-...don't you think so Scarfo?
-Huh?
-Doesn't Louis look nice?
-Surely does. You look like Louis.
-Yeah. Thanks.
-Well, I must get back to the kitchen. It's a lot of work to prepare a party. I'd have never imagined...
She left, the words trailing behind her like tiny balloons. I began wishing I had a bag and a stream in the back yard.
-Scarfo?
-Huh?
-What is all this BUNY?
-She's expecting to the door where you're intended attentively for class.

-What did?
-This party did.
-It's her idea.
-Yeah. My mom was always wanting to give me parties. Before she died.
-What for?
-I guess she thought I liked them.
-Yeah.

There was a long silence. We (all of us) never talked much even when we got together to walk in the park or something. Indoors we almost never talked. Louis took out his knife and started flicking the blade in and out. It was rusty and stained and took a long time to catch.

-You should have taken better care of your knife.
-Ah, what difference does it make? It still cuts.
-But if you kept it honed and polished, it would cut even better.
-Bullshit.
Another silence. Longer.
-Scarfo, (from the kitchen.) Could you get the door?
-But no one knocked.
-Someone just came through the back yard. Could you please get the door?
-Oh all right.

She'd been right. Sissy and Carl were down near the street, huddled together by the bushes.

-Hi guys.
They waved back, but didn't turn around. I watched in silence as they finished their task. Then with a laugh they turned and started walking towards me.

-Hey, the foot.
A foot was sticking out from under the bushes like a tiny puppy. They went back and when they stood up the second time, the dog was gone.

-Hi Scarfo.
-Hi Scarfo.
-Glad you guys came, I guess.
-Your mom said she and dad and all the kids to do was bring a present. (This with a look over their shoulders to the bushes.) So here we are.
-Yeah.

Micheal Breiner,

—Well, come in in. Louis's already here.
—Shouldn't know.
—He must have a shock for a brain.
—Yeah well, let's go in and talk or something.
Pretty soon almost everyone had shown up. Mom had invited just about everybody I could call a friend. Louis, Carl, Sissy, Sandy, Oskar, Lyle, Timbo, Fred, Nicky, and even Nino, who we hadn't seen in years. Nino lived down the street from me and used to go everywhere with us until one night when his father never came home. The cops had found him the next day in the park with all of his fingers and his left foot gone. The hole in his neck had gushed and squirted like a fountain for a long time. But anyway, here was Nino laughing and talking with us, holding the finger that Louis had given him because he was as glad to see Nino again.
—My father used to have a ring just like this one.
—Really?
—Ain't that something?
—Son of a gun.
—How about that?
—Strange.
—Pretty lucky.
—Hmhm.
—Just like this one. It was his favorite.
Another silence fell into the room. Then mom coughed, and everyone turned. Alice was standing with her. Alice was thirteen, and she was the only older kid that we talked to. She was very pretty, almost beautiful if you can be beautiful when you're thirteen. But the thing we liked best about Alice was her smile and the way it got there. She always smiled a satisfied smile like a cow or a dog or something. Once she invited us all to her house, and when we were all sitting together she had smiled that smile at each one of us, and pretty soon we were all sitting there, beaming at each other. Alice's mother had gotten awfully upset when she came into the room and found us all smiling like that.

—Hi Alice.
—Hello boys, this is a voice much older than her years.
Another silence as Alice smiled, and one by one we began to smile. Mom panicked.
—Well, now that we're all here, what do you say we all go into the dining room?
As she talked, her arms spread like a net trying to engulf us all as she moved us into the room.

We stopped short as we went in, and even Alice's smile was lost as she looked into the room. Her smile slid off her face to gutter on the floor, its delicate flicking hitting the new silence. The room was decorated with blue and pink crepe streamers that spread from the center of the ceiling, and balloons hung from these. On one of the walls, a donkey without a tail grinned at us as if it understood everything. The table was in the center of the room, and was set with pretty pink and blue paper plates that matched the streamers. I really thought she had gone too far when I saw the pretty pastel pink and blue forks and spoons.

—Come on mother.
—Nowt now. Come on. The net again. —Let's all play pin the tail on the donkey.
—Mother, for Christ's sake.
—Now Scarfo, I think pin the tail on the donkey would be nice.
—Mother, we don't want to play.
—Oh. Well then, why don't we...
—Mother, why don't we just eat and get this thing over with?
The net collapsed, and she deflated like one of her balloons. She looked from face to face for some kind of rebuttal, but finding only stares and silence and Alice's resurrected satisfied smile, she gave in.
—Is that what the rest of you children want?
Their silence was answer enough. She looked up at the ceiling.
—All right. Why don't you just sit down then?

After that, mother didn't bother to smile. Everybody went to their seats which were marked by tiny pink cards with precise blue lettering, and on every pink and blue plate was a pink and blue dixie cup filled with party favors. The favors were wrapped in pink and blue paper, but they were chocolate brown and red and yellow inside. I would have killed her right then if they had been pink and blue inside. But that came later.

Everybody starts, eating the candy, breaking the silence with the sounds of crunching sourballs, and mouths sucking the life from chocolate. Mother's voice was flat as Kansas when she talked. She mentioned presents and began handing things to me. I felt like an assembly worker at a plant I had seen on TV. The plant had been blown up.

Nino gave me one of those plastic assembly models of some car or another. I thanked him for it and put it on the floor where I accidentally stepped on it later. Louis gave me a brand new knife. We almost laughed about the conversation we had had earlier. I gave him my old knife and we both almost laughed again. Sandy gave me money, and so did Lyle, Oskar, Timbo and Fred. It didn't surprise me. They never said much and they did even less. I thanked them and put the money in my pocket, memorizing how much each of them had given me. Alice's present was in an envelope. I opened it, expecting to find more money, but instead I found a piece of paper. I opened it and read the note. Alice was smiling her smile when I looked over to her.

—Thanks Alice.
—That's quite all right Scarfo.
Carl and Sissy each gave me an ear. I told them they didn't have to, but they said they had had a lot of fun getting them. Everybody had laughed, even mom although I doubt she got the full humor of the statement. Then Nicky handed me his present. It was a long and skinny box.
—Here Scarfo. This is the best present that you're gonna get. I think I heard Alice laugh softly under breath. I took the box.

—Thanks Nicky.
I took off the wrapping. Underneath was a plain brown cardboard box. I looked at Nicky and he smiled a funny smile. I opened the box. Inside was something that looked like a rifle, but it had all sorts of dials and things on it.

—Christ Nicky, what is it?
—It's a nuclear diatomic negative proton nebulizer.
—I've seen those things on TV. They're really something.
—Thanks Nicky. I took the nebulizer from the box. It wasn't very heavy, but it had a real nice feel in my hands. I sighted imaginary protons and nebulized them out of existence.
—Now that all the presents have been handed out, why don't we eat?
—All right mother. This said while I sighted her in. She left the room quickly.
A silence. A long silence only occasionally broken by the soft phhhfff of the nebulizer as one by one Louis, Sissy, Carl, Oskar, Lyle, Sandy, Timbo, Fred, Nino, and finally Nicky were nebulized into soft piles of grayish ash. Then only Alice was left. She smiled her satisfied smile, playing with the collar of her pretty pastel pink and blue party dress.

—Hello Scarfo.
—Hi Alice.
—Did you like the present?
—Uh huh.
—How about her, motioning to the kitchen.
—Uh huh.
—Good. Her legs drifted apart, draping over the sides of the chair. Her underwear was all tiny roses like a little garden. She saw my stare and her satisfied smile grew even more satisfied.
—Happy birthday Scarfo.
—Thanks.

She was reaching behind her dress for the pink and blue buttons when I nebulized her. Her eyes bugged and the smile cracked into a million pieces as a tiny whimper squeezed through her teeth. It was a surprised whimper that would have clashed with her smile if it had still been there. The roses in the garden withered into another pile of soft gray ash. I sat quietly in the silence until Mother came back. She was carrying a cake that was decorated with pink and blue frosting.

—Where are all your friends?
—They're gone.
—Didn't they like the party?
—I dunno. They didn't say.

—Oh.
She was putting the cake on the table when I nebulized her. She didn't make a sound as she became a little pile of grayish ash. This surprised me. I had rather expected blue and pink ash.
—Silence.
I looked at the piles of ash and felt the funniness between my legs. I stuck my hand in the cake. Underneath the frosting the cake was chocolate. I would have screamed if it had been pretty pastel pink or blue. With the nebulizer under my arm, I went outside to find some new friends. After all, I was eleven now.

Doesn't General Electric realize the days of enormous corporate profits are over?

There was a time, fifty or sixty years ago, when a major corporation in America might expect profits of twenty or even twenty-five cents on the sales dollar.

Those days are over. But not everybody realizes it.

What would you call enormous?

In 1970, Fortune's Top 500 industrial corporations realized an average profit of about 4 cents on the sales dollar.

General Electric fared slightly better than average. Last year, our profits amounted to about 5 cents on the sales dollar.

We are occasionally attacked, along with business in general, as being "too profit-oriented."

People argue that if social progress is to be made, business must make it. And that profits stand in the way of social progress.

We would argue quite the opposite. The business of business is not just business.

The purpose of a business, as we see it, is to produce and distribute necessary goods and services to the profit of society... and the business itself.

A business must reflect society's needs. Economic, political, legal and moral, as well as social. It must change as society changes and, to some extent, influence those changes.

But if society profits and the business does not, the business will fold in the short run. It will have no operating funds.

How much profit is enough to keep a business operating? How much is too much? It's hard to say.

However, the companies making only marginal profit are not the companies providing new employment, creating new products or adding to man's scientific and technical knowledge.

Marginal companies are not the ones making the important social contributions today. For a simple reason. They can't afford to.

No responsible company wants a return to the days of the robber barons. No responsible company wants "enormous" profits. But no company can survive without the profit system.

Why are we running this ad?

General Electric is a big, technological company, with the capabilities to do a great deal of problem solving in this country.

We think profits have a direct effect on our ability to solve problems. But we realize the issue of profits is one with two sides. By telling you our side, we hope we've moved you to think about your side. Perhaps even write us about it.

We'd like to hear what you have to say. Please write to: General Electric, Dept. 901, 570 Lexington Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10021.

Sports Of Yesterday

The following story was reprinted from the May 8, 1952 issue and was written by Al Mufson. The headline read: Track Team Swamps Champlain, 96-30.

The much improved UVM track squad completely swamped their Champlain College opponents in a meet, held at Centennial Field, Saturday. This was the Green and Gold's second victory out of three starts and the boys were very impressive in their latest performance. Out of the fourteen events that took place, Vermont took first places in all but two of them as they dominated the scoring by racking up a total of 96 points to Champlain's 30.

Besides taking most of the number one positions in the events, Coach Archie Post's boys completely swept three races, the 100 yard dash, the 120 yard high hurdles, and the 220 yard low hurdles.

Several of the boys posted two victories in their events. Captain Carwell scored victories in both the 440 and the 880 yard dashes as did Manson in the 100 and the 220 yard sprints. Clint Thomson swept the 220 yard hurdles and the 220 low hurdles and Dornbosch placed first in the discus and the shotput. Both of these boys are freshmen and should go far in the future. Clark Hinesdale, having tough luck all day, had to settle for three second places in the broad jump, the high jump, and the javelin.

From the moment the meet began, it was evident that Vermont had the stronger team. The Catamounts quickly jumped into a 23-4 lead in the first three events, and from there on, continued to increase it.

NEW YORK — Steve Kuberski, Earl Monroe and Bob Dandridge rose to the occasion. Jerry West and Gail Goodrich simply outperformed their usual starry roles.

These players, and numerous others, were the contributors in the National Basketball Association's 1972 Playoff Conference Semifinals.

Kuberski averaged 14.5 points a game against Atlanta after a 6.3 regular season average. The 6-8 Boston forward, appearing in his first playoff series, helped the Celtics down the Hawks in six games and earn the right to face New York in the Eastern Conference Finals.

Monroe replaced Dick Barnett in New York's back court and averaged 15.8 points a game in the six-game triumph over Baltimore after averaging 11.8 a game during the season. The Knicks were the only NBA club to hold their opponent under 100 points a game in the Conference Semifinals, with a 96-88 average.

Dandridge, Milwaukee's veteran 6-7 forward, helped the Bucks down the Warriors in five games after losing the opener. He had averaged 18.4 points a game during the season then averaged 24.2 in the playoffs. In game 4, when All-Star teammate Kareem Jabbar and Oscar Robertson had just 15 and 11 points, respectively, Dandridge contributed 31 in a 106-99 victory.

Meanwhile, Los Angeles was eliminating Chicago in a four-game sweep with All-Star guards West and Goodrich outperforming their regular season scoring averages.

In the Conference Semifinals, Boston averaged 121.2 points a game after a 115.6 regular season average. The Celtics were the only club to shoot over .500 from the floor, averaging .510. Celtics' guard Jo-Jo White, whose regular season field goal percentage was .431, shot .584 against the regular season .734, shot .828 against Chicago Milwaukee the regular season .734, shot .828 against Chicago Milwaukee guard Lucius Allen averaged 19.0 points a game after a 13.5 regular season average. New York center Jerry Lucas played a key role against Baltimore. Bulls' Coach Gene Shue said after the deciding game, "He shot from outside and made his shots. That meant that Wes (Unseld) had to chase him all around the court instead of staying inside, where we want him and where he is most effective."

Eddie Gottlieb will be one of six men inducted into the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame at Springfield, Mass., on April 28.

Wright, a junior and Dean's List student majoring in civil engineering, centered the high-powered first line of Fred Hunt and Ted Castle, which accounted for 139 points this season, and Wright missed the last six games because of a knee injury sustained in the 16-0 win over Connecticut, Feb. 12.

The shifty center is one of the few collegiate hockey players that has scored a penalty shot in each of his first two varsity seasons. Last year, in the 5-2 win over Bowdoin, Wright broke open a scoreless tie with a penalty shot, and this year, against Colby, his penalty shot aroused his club to come-from-behind to beat Colby, 8-6.

Ironically, it was in the Connecticut game that Wright broke the season scoring record at Vermont, as he picked up his 43rd point (12 goals and 31 assists) in the first period of that game. Hunt and Castle both went on to break Wright's short-lived mark, as Hunt registered 49 points and Castle 47. Wright's 31 assists this year is also a new Catamount record.

In addition to the captaincy announcement, coach Jim Crow presented the M.V.P. award to Yeates, while senior left wing, Ned Grant (Dedham,

Varsity-Alumni Game Attracts 40 Alumni

With almost two weeks left before the second annual University of Vermont varsity-alumni football game (May 6), alumni co-coaches Rusty Brink and Bob Mitchell, have over 40 confirmations from past alumni for participation in the game.

The varsity-alumni game, scheduled for Centennial Field at 2 p.m., culminates two weeks of practice for the University's varsity football team, which began workouts today (April 18).

Interest towards the game has been high and tickets for the spring clash have been going fast. The tickets are now on sale at the University's Book Store (adjacent to library), the Roy L. Patrick Gymnasium and any Centennial Club member.

Such former Catamount stars as Brink, All-New England linebacker in 1965; Mitchell, All-American halfback in 1966; Jeff Kuhman, All-Yankee Conference tight end; Fran Peterson, All-Yankee Conference quarterback in 1969; Bob Rodger, All-New England halfback in 1969; Dan Martin, All-Yankee Conference offensive guard in 1966; Peter Wynn, former star receiver in the early 60's; Dave Sequini, one of the strongest linemen ever to wear the Green and Gold; Charlie Russo, All-Yankee Conference defensive tackle; Fran Prondicki, All-Yankee Conference linebacker and Bill Wolff, one of the best linebackers ever at Vermont, are expected to suit up for the clash, May 6.

Last year, the varsity won a squeaker, 13-6.

It was recently announced that plans for a post-game dinner have been made at the Ramada Inn, beginning at 6:30 p.m. with a social hour. The social hour and dinner ($4 per ticket) is open to the public.

The varsity-alumni game, sponsored by the University's Centennial Club, will be complete game conditions, including the opening kickoff.

Ray Pecor and Bob Cooper are the co-chairmen of the game, with Alan Agney acting as the honorary chairman.

Scannella's varsity contingent, which began spring workouts today (April 18), will continue one-a-day practices (with double sessions on Saturdays) right up to the scheduled May 6 clash with the alumni. Over 70 candidates reported to the varsity spring sessions, including 34 lettermen. Co-captains Wayne Bohman (defensive end) and Rich Kostovsky (linebacker) lead the lettermen.

Alumni coaches, Mitchell and Brink, have scheduled their first workout, Monday (April 24), behind the Gutterton Field House on Spear St. All alumni football players interested in playing should attend the 3:30 p.m. session. More practice dates will be announced Monday.

More alumni participants will be announced in the next two weeks.

Spring Practice Begins

Spring football workouts at the University of Vermont began Tuesday (April 18) and 69 candidates, including 34 lettermen, reported to the first session.

It was the biggest turnout since Joe Scannella took over as head coach in 1970.

Daily workouts will continue for the next two weeks, culminated by the second annual varsity-alumni game, May 6, at Centennial Field. At this time, over 40 alumni gridders have signed up for the game, and by the May 6 date, over 60 are expected to be on the squad.

Scannella will have two additional staff members for the spring workouts. Joining the regular staff this spring will be John Coons, an associate in the Development Office at the University and a former line coach at Vermont, and Tom Canas, a former receiver and defensive back with the Denver Broncos and Montreal Alouettes.

The Catamounts are scheduled for an inter-squad scrimmage in St. Albans, April 29, at Coors Field, home of the Bellows Falls Academy Bobwhites. The Green-White game, sponsored by the St. Albans Rotary Club, will be open to the public. Admission is $1 for adults and $.50 for students. The game will be under the lights, beginning at 8 p.m.

Winner Of Satire News Of The World

by David Ingraham

Today, from the speaker in the set, from the speaker in the station, from the speaker in the speech, we heard the news. The well-dressed, well-spoken, well-spoken person, said the news, he said what happened.

At six o'clock what dying sunset bled the sky red and bright yellow? And poured a pale then evening blue across the sky? The person said the news, the change in the world today. He did not say the sky fell dark and could not stand, the earth crested up the horizon and bled the wound red across the sky, the sky blue down the evening, he said what happened.

The person said from his desk that informed across indicated that, that in fact the move was in fact made. He said that official spokesman denied that, he said that one person killed another person. The person had killed the other person because the court decided he had. Now, the court will give the man a sentence. Then the person said the sentence will be forgotten. The news is a sentence. What sentence will the man now say over and over, that he must remember? He served a sentence in the news.

He was curled around his own neck in the lawful suit the court dressed him in, and his eyebrows seek where his nose started down and out from the shiny forehead. His eyes looked extra large, magnified under water, mist. And the photographer took his picture when he had just given it away. The photograph was black and white and grey and gave on television. He is given a sentence when they only have a picture. The person who said the news did not say the color hair, or if the man was sorry, or why a man would kill a man. The person must not know, he was not said.

The person in the shirt, coat and tie, with the combed hair and face, said, the money was appropriated. He said not about the money and other money, and all the money was not. The person said the money was needed by some people, some people said it was not. Some people must not know, he did not say. Money makes news and murder makes news and news makes people. The news is money, the news is murder, and the news is the argument whether it happens. The person on television said it happened.

The rough-edged, wrinkled man does not smile or frown or speak as though a man had died, he was not sorry for the hangman's news around the neck of the man in the picture. And what bell tolled when he told the day's tolled dead? He must get the facts figured out of all feeling. What stoic or stopped man is this that gives the news and lives in twenty-one inches grey behind a screen filtered of feeling set at his desk, looking out at our living room and seeing nothing? What set this? Why doesn't he make a mistake, or cry, this news, this mistake?

You, speaker of news, must read the news sitting on the toilet and find the gentle hold on your mind of fact more comforting than the feeling of your genitals in sanitized comfort station. And you look the door to your home bathroom so the ad vice of the paper can be dreamed in secret slow secretion.

What is news to you, station airy inside studio where the work unveiled is the shame of our soul's struggle made champagne with a dash of approval? The news of the day, interrupted to give you gas, O line, O gasoline of happy motorists! O line so sung I know the station is the gas station and I now have lubricated skin to slide through the news. Back to the station where impotent news is distorted, first fast, as it happens. The station sends the Great Western the train down the last track of feeling. All's based for the news. Buy your programs here. When the train left the station, it could not move. Blocked on the digestive tract.

Give us feeling of the world, not the flimsy skeleton of fact, the figure bone dry, the world screened as a microscopic chamberboard of endless moves of black and white, and grey shades of field. Your news is not news, the exile of feeling is sentenced in every age. The vicious experience of the world seen, safety having happened, and now food for thought for supper sandwiched between aspirin and gas. We sit back into the day to see what earthquake we missed at noon, what race question is over run, what little life ends the news in anecdote, as if there is hope.

Television, Media media of millions, the face that turns the nation to stone itself. We turn you on!

What news of the world? The news, the mourning news, the late news, that died while converting savage life somewhere in the rough ways of the channel. This has been the news.

"That far-off day the leaves in flight
Were letting in the colder light

A season-ending wind there blew,
I leaned on with a singing trust
And let it drive me deathward too"

(Robert Frost)

His solitary song
To the wind and rain cried out.
Concealed and hidden from his song,
A cricket kept time with Jean Sibelius;
Their notes ascending and mingling together,
Forming a sorrowful lament for the season ending.

The string and wind instruments of Sibelius
Recreated the vision of Tuonela
The Finnish mythological land of death,
While this unseen orphan of Zephyrus Sang to an autumnal wind.
And their combined music sang of life and passing.
First vibrant and alive . . .
Then fading in an anxious flight
Falling among leaves, escorted to earth.

Now all of Summer's memories are Asleep in Tuonela.
Sibelius has silenced his strings.
The cricket, who had lived on with A singing trust,
Accompanied the last moment of Summer,
Passing on in silence
In the heart of a violin.

Human Reformation

by Susan Carol Kessler

A Fly,
Once among many flies
Fugaciously bombarding themselves Against a ceiling which would not give in to them, Fell
And saw fit to die
On my night table.

As it had been my impulse
To be irritated with his life
I was perplexed
By his now silent death.
Lying on the night table,
Frustrated by my eyelashes
His death became curiously poignant.
As the watchwatcher banded his folded wings
Moved with mechanical assurance Recording seconds no longer his.
You might say I felt guilty
And a part of me Wished to catch up with Whoever fleeing soul he had.
And in a kind of reconciliation
I would try to relate to him
The heavy truth
Of my human limitations.

The shadow of my hand
Passed over his head
Across on the table.
But then to remove him,
his delicate form,
With my fingers
Would be crushing.
To be sure
It would be far More humane
To wish gentle brush
Show him off my night table.

Possibility Of 'Quickie' Residency Threatens College Tuition Revenue

From the Chronicle of Higher Education
By LARRY A. VAN DYNE

The ability of newly enfranchised college students to move into a state and establish "quickie" residences so that they can qualify for low in-state tuition is a major new source of concern to state legislatures.

The resulting loss of revenue from out-of-state tuition is one of several financial issues affecting higher education that are facing the 42 legislatures holding special or regular sessions this year. There also are major controversies over appropriations, tuition, governance, aid to private institutions, and "accountability."

Since the extension of voting rights to 18-year-olds, at least 11 states—California, Georgia, Illinois, Maine, Michigan, New Mexico, North Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, Wisconsin, and Washington—have followed up by reducing their "age of majority" from 21 to 18.

Easier to Establish Residence

These new laws generally grant thousands of young people—including most college students—full rights of adulthood. The laws, combined with a number of legal opinions allowing students to vote in college towns rather than in the home towns of their parents, make it easier for students to set up immediate residence wherever they are in college.

The implications of this for the nearly universal policy of charging higher tuition to out-of-state students who attend public institutions are vast.

Thousands of students are now paying millions of dollars in out-of-state tuition, and much of that revenue would be threatened if they suddenly changed their residence and qualified for lower in-state tuition.

Plugging the Loophole

Three legislatures that have ended their 1972 sessions—Georgia, New Mexico, and Washington—took steps to plug the loophole. Similar measures are under consideration by other states. Most observers believe, however, that the issue eventually will be decided by the courts.

In one case that may influence others, a local judge in Kansas ruled that a junior college cannot charge higher tuition to students whose parents live outside its district. The judge's decision was based on the theory that a student's home—if he is 18 and registered to vote in his college town—is no longer with his parents.

Responsibilities Of President Discussed By Candidates For SA Office

by Jeff Yacker

The four candidates for Student Association President met with each other and members of the press last Friday at a press conference in Billings Center. The press conference was closed to the public due to space limitations (Conference Room C), but it was broadcast over WRUV-AM. Reporters attending were Jeff Yacker and Jeri Covey from the Cynic, Cindy Kent from This Week, Jeff Cohn from WRUV, and reporters from The Militant, The People, and other publications.

The conference commenced with opening statements by the candidates. Sharon Reed led off, stating that the SA "is not with the students, or in effect, for the students." She added that she felt, along with many other students, that the SA faced a problem of cliques dominating the government.

"One of my primary goals will be to bring the SA back to the students," John Franco, candidate of the Coalition for a Democratic University (CDU) then spoke. "Because so many critical movements of oppressed people (are happening) the SA and the University can not sit idly by and let these things pass."

"The SA is unresponsive to the needs of students—the perspective of our campaign is to build the independent mass movements that are affecting students—the gay movement, the women's movement, the Chicano movement—we say that the SA should be involved in building the struggles of all these people, and for establishing student-faculty control of this University," Bill Sisco followed, stating that the objectives of his campaign is "to provide more and better service to the student body as a whole, and move away from emphasizing... small and select X 'club' special interest."

Terry Demas concluded the opening statements. Demas claimed that he "didn't have a platform." "The president has one major responsibility—to see that what the students want done can be done and done effectively."

Following the opening statements a lively exchange ensued. John Franco stood by his contention that women are oppressed at UVM. Sharon Reed disagreed: "Just the fact that I am running for this office, I think, tends to negate your argument." For a time the conference seemed to be a debate between Franco, Reed and the Cynic on the political role of the Student Association. Franco claimed that "since the University is a political institution, the students are involved in political issues."

Sharon Reed and Terry Demas stated that they preferred the SA to stay out of the political issues and concentrate on the students' role in the UVM community.

Before the conference, the candidates were given questionnaires drawn up by the Cynic. The following are the candidates' answers to one of the questions:

QUESTION: What do you see as the primary responsibility of the Student Association President?

Sharon Reed: I see the primary responsibility of the SA President as bringing the SA back to the student body. It must be kept in mind that the SA Senate as a body is representative of the students, but moreover, the President owes his direct allegiance and responsibility to his constituency: the entire student body at UVM.

John Franco: The President must listen and act. I feel that the SA has done neither. For instance, women are demanding status as human beings. Women in this university are becoming aware of the sexist policies of this place. Women have come to me complaining that they don't have equal access to the gym. Others are in desperate need of an abortion referral service. Many are demanding a women's studies program. I am aware of these grievances and, with the Coalition, support their demands. The SA cannot sit idly by. It must actively support the women's movement. If I am elected, I will see that it does just that. Terry Demas: The President is the chief administrator of the SA. He represents the students to the Academic community and to the rest of the state. But most importantly he is the one person, given intentions and hard work, who motivates the organization of the SA to act. He must have the knowledge of how UVM runs, who runs it, and why. He must be able to work with the information or have someone on his staff who can. The President must define the goals of his administration and see to it that they are carried out. The best President is the one who accomplishes his goals with the minimum publicity and fanfare. It is not so important that the student know who his SA President is, but where he can go if he needs help. The primary responsibility of the President is to see to it that the student know that place.

Bill Sisco: Since the President does not have a vote in the SA Senate and therefore no power base on paper, he has to affect the Senate's direction and momentum through his election by the student body and by the implied power lent to his office by its title. This position must be employed responsibly by the President to ensure the delivery of services by the Senate to the student body as a whole, and hand-in-hand with appropriating and executing the delivery of services as determined by the students and the assigning of the students' priorities for the implementation of the services. This process of determining services and program priorities is the primary responsibility of both the President and the student body together.

Trends in Appropriations

Many experts believe the eventual outcome of these cases may be to strike down the whole out-of-state tuition system. Says an executive of a major Washington higher education association: "I think out-of-state tuition has only two or three years to live."

Appropriations for higher education, which have recently begun to level off and shift emphasis toward the development of community colleges seem likely to continue through 1977-78.

In New York, Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller has proposed a "no-growth" state budget that would force colleges and universities including the State University of New York and the City University of New York—to operate on essentially the same money as this year.

Controversy in Illinois

In Illinois, the coordinating board of higher education has created a major controversy with its budget proposals. Its recommendations, which have been endorsed by Gov. Richard Ogilvie, would provide a 7 per cent increase for all of higher education. There is, however, considerable dissatisfaction with some of its priorities.

Favored were the state's growing system of community colleges (a 15 per cent increase), two new "upperlevel" colleges (roughly 51 per cent increase), and the state scholarship program (a 31 per cent increase). Budgets for most senior colleges would stay at their current levels, but the two main campuses of the University of Illinois would suffer cuts—1.9 per cent at Urbana and 8 per cent at Chicago Circle.

Low Tuition Policies Reexamined

The same strains that are affecting appropriations also are prompting a reexamination of the long-standing and widely used policy of across-the-board low tuition at public institutions. Blue-ribbon groups in both Illinois and New York have proposed that this policy be revised, and a similar proposal has been advanced in Massachusetts by Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

These plans would force students from affluent families—who are increasingly opting to attend public institutions—to pay a larger share of the cost of their education. Under the plans, tuition would rise in relation to family income, and the resulting extra revenue would be used to support more scholarships for the needy.

A Sign of the Times?

Another indication of the pressure for financial adjustments in higher education is the state of accountability bills that started appearing a few years ago and are continuing this year.

Many educators consider them "nuisance" bills that have little chance of passage, are unenforceable, and are of dubious legality. "Still," says a Kansas lobbyist, "they are a sign of the times."

Kansas had several such bills introduced, but all were killed. They included measures that would have set a 12-hour minimum faculty workload, required a "cost accounting" of all courses, and restricted out-of-state travel by state employees.

More Efficiency Demanded

In Florida, where the legislature passed a faculty workload law last year, a bill is still under consideration that would require public universities to review the contracts of all faculty members at least every five years. University regents believe, however, that they have forestalled this anti-tenure move by adopting new evaluation procedures of their own.

The demand for more efficient use of scarce resources—particularly an end to costly program and facility duplication—is an underlying factor in numerous proposals to restructure the governance of various state systems of higher education.

Ceremony To Honor ROTC Students

Top Reserve Officers' Training Corps students at the University of Vermont will be honored at 4:30 p.m. Friday (April 21) at the 104th annual Military Awards Ceremony, to be held in the Allen Chapel.

Cadet Lt. Col. Robert M. Field of Danville, cadet battalion commander, will speak. The University of Vermont Band, led by Herbert L. Schultz, associate professor of music, will play.

Taking part in the awards ceremony will be Maj. Gen. Reginald M. Cram, Vermont adjutant general; Melvin A. Dyson, vice president for financial affairs at UVM; and Lt. Col. William C. Haponaki, chairman of the department of military studies.

The event is open to the public.

Battalion officers, in addition to Field, are Thomas Moynihan, Northfield, executive officer; Paul Bergeron, Winouki, adjutant; Lawrence S. Clark, Bellows Falls, operations officer; Thomas F. Drew, Florence, supply officer; Kenneth F. Habich, Cranford, N.J., information officer; Lawrence J. Westover, Albany, chaplain, and Lawrence Bilodeau, Middlebury, sergeant major.

Company commanders are Joseph K. Wetherell, Brattleboro; Brian Ripley, St. Albans; and Clay E. Capen and Nelson W. Coleman, both of South Londonderry.

"Insight" Changes Time

On Sunday, April 23 "Insight UVM" will be seen at 12:30 p.m. instead of at its regular time. Guests on the show will be Hockey Coach Jim Cross and Ski Coach Chip LaCase with a look at the past season, and Lawrence VanBenthuysen, Director of Public Relations, Channel 22 (WVNY).

Because several cyclists have shown interest in riding to the raft race, this Saturday, April 22, several students are planning to meet in the Robinson Hall parking lot at 8:00 A.M. The trip is approximately 20 miles and it is expected that arrival in Bolton will be by 10:30 A.M. All are welcome.

SA Discusses New Hockey Rink And Parenti Fund

Among the topics discussed at the last Student Association Senate meeting on April 12 were the plans for a new hockey rink and financial support for the Parenti suit against the Board of Trustees.

In a finance Committee report a motion was made that the Senate take the initiative in determining a coherent and complete plan for the proposed renovations of the hockey rink. Before this, preliminary plans called for renovations amounting to $72,000, one third to be paid by SA, one third to be paid by the University from the Athletic Bond surplus, and the other third to be raised by SA and Sigma Nu fraternity.

The motion also asked that the Senate reject, until such plans are complete, any and all of the current proposals concerning the hockey rink and that they endorse in principle the concept of partial funding by the SA of the project once, and only at that time, a complete and feasible plan is presented.

The Finance Committee also noted that their investigation of the proposed plan revealed that only four games last season were completely sold out. The motion was tabled until next week.

Financing Parenti Suit
A motion was passed that listed the non-approval of the use of University General Funds of the Court Suit involving Michael Parenti against the Board of Trustees for the defense of the Board. The motion states that "we do not believe that the Board of Trustees should use student's tuition or our University General Fund for a court suit that in our opinion is aimed at limiting our academic freedom."

Another motion was made and passed that the SA give $500.00 to the Michael Parenti Defense Fund. Emil George, substitute for Dave Crosby, made this motion because the University's money is going against Parenti and because in January the SA condemned the Board of Trustees and he felt we should put our money where we state our feelings lie. The rules were suspended and the motion was passed in a roll call vote.

In regard to the Parenti suit, another motion was made by Ace Hughes that the SA give an additional $4,500.00 to the Parenti Defense Fund upon determination of the Finance Committee. The motion was tabled until next week. The SA Finance Committee did not recommend the giving of $500.00 to the Michael Parenti Defense Fund.

Buoyant S Annual Win

The fifth annual Winocock River Raft Race, sponsored by the UVM Outing Club, was held Saturday at the traditional site near Bolton, Falls. The race, which is 6 1/2 miles long, attracted a wide variety of rafts in all shapes and sizes, piloted by both male and female students and other persons who braved the 32-degree waters. The winner in the male division was maneuvered by Robert Thomson of the UVM Department of Geography, and also manned by workers from Staff Construction. Second was the entry of TEP Fraternity, followed by Sigma Phi Epsilon. The times of these rafts were 46:39, 50:55 and 54:00, respectively.

In the mixed division William Fritts of Burlington won in 54:00. Row Howard of Colchester was second in 58:22, followed by Steve Davis of UVM in third at 1:00:56.

Tricia Quenell led the women's division, followed by Kathleen McShers of Williston in second and Deb Perryman of the UVM Ski team in third.

Three other prizes were also awarded on Saturday. For the most unusual entry, a red Volkswagen supported by barrels took first. A raft constructed entirely of beer cans was awarded the most unusual flotation, and in the category of largest crew, a raft holding 23 people came in first.

Sisco Wins Presidency By Seven Votes Four-Way Race Sees Franco, Reed Extremely Close Second, Third

by Jeff Yawley

Bill Sisco was elected President of the Student Association this week in an amazingly close race. Dick Cassidy, S.A. vice president for Student Activities, announced Tuesday night that Sisco received 426 votes; close behind were John Franco of the CDU with 419 and Sharon Reed with 404. Terry Demas finished fourth with 366. There were 18 write-in votes. Broken down into percentages, Sisco came out with approximately 26%, Franco with 25%, Reed with 24.7% and Demas with 22%.

Balloting for the election took place Monday and Tuesday in Billings Center, the library, the bookstore, and several dining halls. Cassidy stated that the ballots were not counted until Tuesday night, and because of the closeness of the race, they were counted four times. Yesterday morning he also stated that a final recount would be held at 3 PM. At present time it was the opinion of all concerned that Sisco would be confirmed, and installed at the weekly Senate meeting as the new student government president.

Sisco, in a release to the Cynic yesterday, said, "The Conference On Slavic Studies Begins Today

The University of Vermont will be host today, tomorrow and Saturday to the Northeastern Slavic Conference of the American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies. The group's annual conference will be open this afternoon with registration in Billings Center at 2:00 PM. At 5:00 PM Henry L. Roberts will deliver the keynote address, entitled "New Perspectives of Strabismus? Interdisciplinary Studies Reconsidered."

Roberts was formerly the head for years of the prestigious Russian Institute at Columbia University in New York, and was also editor of the Slavic Review, which is published by the A.A.S.S. At 9:30 tonight a reception will be held by President Andrews at the President's Residence on South Williams Street.

Tomorrow and Saturday will be taken up mainly by seminars and discussions on various aspects of Slavic life - literature, sociology, economics, demographic trends, educational trends, and of course, politics. A complete listing of the seminars was published in the April 13 issue of the Cynic. Information can also be obtained from the Department of Political Science.

UVM Professors James Facy and Stanislaw Staron have done the bulk of the arrangements for the conference. Other consultants have been Professors Dellin of Economics and Daniels of History. Professor Daniels is presently President of the Northeast Slavic Conference of the A.A.S.S.

Other Senate News: Concert Bureau Constitution

by Jeri Covey

The major topics of discussion at the Student Association Senate meeting on April 19 were the new constitution of the Concert Bureau and the motion concerning the renovation concerning the of the hockey rink in Guterson Fieldhouse.

The new constitution of the Concert Bureau changes the format of the bureau to include three officers, Chairman, Fiscal Manager, and Publicity Director, and four unassigned assistants. The original format consisted of seven members, Chairman, Treasurer, Producer, Publicity Manager, Technician, Secretary and Liaison Officer, each with specific job activities.

The four assistantships will be chosen by the SA from eight candidates selected by a special ad hoc committee formed every spring by the SA Senate. These assistants may not have an academic standing above Sophomore. Also, at the same time, with the advice of the outgoing officers the SA Senate will choose, from the current assistants, who will become the new chairman, fiscal manager and publicity director.

At the Senate meeting there was some discussion as to what should be the definition of the term "concert". The original draft of the constitution defines concert as "any musical event, sponsored by students or student organizations where musicians are employed." It was pointed out by several Senators at the meeting that this has to be defined better in order to prevent the Student Association from becoming responsible for the losses that might incur from a concert sponsored by any SA recognized organization. The preamble was amended by a motion by Bill Sisco defining concerts as "musical events held at Patrick Gym, the Allen or the University Green, or by any group using the name University of Vermont and financially underwritten by the SA." The preamble also states that the "Student Association Concert Bureau of the University of Vermont will be the only organization on the campus authorized to produce or sponsor concerts on this campus."

The "ad-hoc" status of the committee was removed and the report of the Concert Bureau Committee containing the constitution was accepted as amended.

A motion was passed as follows: "The Finance Committee moves that the Senate take the initiative in determining a coherent and complete plan for the proposed

Despite freezing cold water—32 degrees, and cold weather in general, many students and other participants maintained an enthusiastic spirit throughout the race (see letter to the editor). One of the "highlights" of the race was the collision of two rafts near a railroad trestle (see picture, page three), spilling several people into the water. The

Wood Elected President Of Fraternity Forum

Steve Wood was elected President of the Fraternity Forum Monday in a hairbreadth election. Wood, a sophomore from North Hartland, Vermont defeated Jim Morse by one vote in the closest election in IFC and Fraternity Forum history. The new president is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon, Morse, also a sophomore, is a member of Sigma Phi and hails from Springfield, Vermont. Under the F.F. constitution, Morse automatically becomes vice president.

The two new officers were installed Tuesday at the weekly Forum meeting in Billings Center. Jack Alute, retiring president, introduced them and then handed over the meeting. Wood and Morse appointed Sandy Friedman of Phi Gamma Delta to the post of Secretary, and Marc Goldstein of Sigma Nu Treasurer.

Wood emphasized that one of the major goals of the Fraternity Forum in its coming year would be the renovation of the almost dead Winter Carnival under Greek leadership. One major possibility for the weekend involved the use of the UVM Ski Jump in Williston. Wood added, however, that this was only in the formative stages, and entailed a lot of "ifs and buts."

The Fraternity Forum is also in the process of finding out exactly what the member houses want and expect from the organization. This is being achieved under Project Tradewinds, in which several members of the F.F. Executive Board go around to various houses to seek out ideas, comments and criticisms.

The President of Fraternity Forum is also automatically a member of the SA Coordinating Committee; under the new SA Constitution, Wood stated that he looked forward to cooperation with the SA.

S.A. Senate Supports Strike ; Constituent Response Limited

by Jeri Covey

Last week a series of anti-war demonstrations hit the University campus. However, only a few students actually participated in the scheduled and unscheduled activities. At a special meeting of the Student Association Senate, called on Thursday noon (April 20), the Senate voted to accept a petition from the National Student Association. The motion read: "We the SA Senate by majority degree (vote) support the nationwide student strike on Friday, April 21, 1972 called for by the Nation Peace Action Coalition and the Peoples Coalition for Peace and Justice in protest to the escalation of the Indo-China War, particularly the newly renewed massive bombing of North Vietnam. Therefore we ask:

1) Students not attend class on Friday

2) Professors either cancel classes or devote class time to discussions over the war in Asia.

3) We encourage students to participate in local demonstrations on Friday in the Burlington and attend the April 22 march against the war in New York.

The question was asked why it was necessary to close classes for the demonstrations and the teaching planned. It was felt by the representatives of the bill that if a student wanted to go to class that the group striking would not interfere. But, the strike would show opposition to the war and raise consciousness about it. Other Senators pointed out that by not striking, we would be showing our support for Nixon as part of the "Silent Majority." Emil George thought that Nixon would use the number of schools not striking to his own advantage. He and President Gene Boudoin agreed that not striking is not a neutral position. Bill Sisco felt that voting for the strike would make it available but not compulsory. Doug Marshall said that a strike would not be against the University but against the government. The question was called and passed in a roll call vote. However, despite flyers distributed that day and on Friday, no substantial strike took place.

At noon of the following day a demonstration took place at the Federal Building in downtown Burlington. About 125 demonstrators crowded in to the main floor lobby of the building. U.S. Attorney George Cook addressed the crowd and asked them to clear the area. In the meantime, the demonstrators were clear down on the only a minimal of people were floors or downstairs to the military recruiting office. Later in the afternoon, demonstrators heckled and shouted obscenities during a ROTC Korus at the Allen Chapel. This included hooting and foot-stomping during the national anthem. Despite repeated warnings and appeals in the name of academic freedom by Vice President of Academic Affairs Alfred Rollins, the disruptions continued throughout the awards ceremony.

Lieutenant Colonel William Naposki, Chairman of the Military Studies Department, said that in regard to the demonstrations, that they were of two different types. The first as the three-day fast outside the Military Science building, the second was the demonstration in the Chapel during the ROTC ceremony. Of the fast, Naposki said that he "respected them" because they were willing to give up something and devote their time for an issue that they believed in. He added "we both learned from one another, or at least 'reached' a better understanding" through a conversation between the Colonel and the protesters. However, he called the demonstration in the Chapel "entirely different." Despite the name of academic freedom by Vice President Rollins, the heckling and shouting of obscenities continued. Naposki felt that it was "ironic that one that is being supported for academic freedom (Michael Parenti) should deny it to others." He said that this demonstration in the Chapel was "tactically damaging and ineffective." Naposki added that he "hopes that all of us can learn from these two demonstrations how things can be done effectively."

In an address at the awards ceremony, Lt. Col. Naposki pointed out that many military men warn that war has to cease because of the increase in technology. There is "deep anti-war concern in the military." But, he added, that "war is a two sided issue, and side is not all guilty or innocent."

On Thursday President Andrews issued the following statement regarding the strike: "We recognize that students, reacting to recent events in Vietnam, may as a matter of conscience, wish to participate in peaceful activities which symbolize their opposition to current U.S. policy. It has also Elementary and secondary school teachers in Vermont are being invited by the Canadian Studies Program of the University of Vermont's Center for Area Studies to take part in a summer "traveling course" in cooperation with the University of Maine.

The June 25-Aug. 6 Canadian Studies Institute will focus on the geography and history of Canada, and will open with a week of lectures and seminars at the University of Maine in Orono. The following four weeks will be spent in Canada's Maritime Provinces of New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario, and the Institute will conclude with four days of lectures and evaluations at the University of Vermont.

Eighteen Cadets Receive Honors

Eighteen cadets of the ROTC unit at the University of Vermont won honors Friday (April 21) at the 104th annual military awards ceremony in the Ira Allen Chapel.

The cadets' military and academic achievements were recognized as they received awards from professional and patriotic societies.

The inspecting party at the ceremony included Maj. Gen. Reginald M. Cram, Vermont adjutant general; Melvin A. Dyson, vice president for financial affairs at the University; and Lt. Col. William C. Hapgood, chairman of the department of military studies.

Award winners were: The Wadsworth Rammer Smith Sabers: To the outstanding senior cadet, Cadet Lt. Col. Robert M. Field, Danville.

The General Douglas MacArthur Medal of the ROTC Officers Association: To the sophomore cadet for high academic achievement and outstanding leadership potential, Cadet Staff Sergeant Scott A. Whitted, Plattsburgh, N.Y.

La Societe des 40 Hommes et 8 Chevaux Award: For scholastic achievement in a cadet in the senior class who intends to accept a Regular Army Commission, Cadet Captain Bruce Ripley, St. Albans.

The Army Superior Cadet Award: To four cadets for outstanding military and academic proficiency in ROTC, Cadet Captain Clarence J. Corey, Jr., No. Bennington; Cadet Sergeant Joseph Marks, Barre; Cadet Corporal Craig N. Merrill, East Junction; Cadet Private First Class Maurice J. Morey, Cabot.

The Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America Medal: For military academic achievement, Cadet Corporal Robert E. Walsh, Oyster Bay, N.Y.

The Association of the United States Army Award: To the cadet of the junior class who has contributed most, through leadership, to the ROTC program, Cadet Captain David J. Wheel, Burlington.

The Daughters of the American Revolution Award: To a senior cadet who has demonstrated qualities of dependability, good character, and leadership ability, Cadet Captain Clay E. Capen, Londonderry.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars Award: To the most proficient member of ROTC, Cadet Captain William R.

Scott, East Junction. The Reserve Officers Association Medal: To the cadet in the senior or junior class who has shown the greatest versatility and participation in the ROTC program, Cadet Captain Nelson W. Coleman, South Londonderry.

The Sergeants Medal: To the cadet selected best at drill, Cadet First Sergeant Blain M. Harvey, Montpelier.

The Professor of Military Studies Award: To the senior cadet who exhibited outstanding leadership qualities and devotion to duty, Cadet Captain Thomas E. Drew, Florence.

The Sons of the American Revolution Award: For outstanding traits of character, leadership, and ROTC proficiency, Cadet Private First Class Bruce K. Durgan, Stowe.

The American Legion Award: For scholastic excellence, Cadet Major Thomas M. Moynihan, Northfield.

Another award presented was: A certificate to the most improved senior cadet in leadership, Cadet Major Lawrence S. Clark, Bellows Falls.

Red Square Affair???

The title is a takeoff on the Russian May Day celebration which is held in Moscow's Red Square each year. Here the emphasis is on the cooperation possible between people of diverse interests and talents. This year we're offering everything from crafts to games to a band to a rummage sale. The more varied activities that are offered, the more people there are that will be attracted to the event! It will be a great day for everybody!

The Red Square Affair will be held on Saturday, April 29, from 10 AM till dark. (Rain date is the following Saturday, May 6.) It takes place at the CBCW Residence Hall Complex on Main Campus.

Professional craftsmen from downtown will be displaying their crafts and selling their wares. People from Burlington, the Pine-Rock, Elm and Metal and the Shoe Repair will be present all day to demonstrate and answer questions. People from the Ski Rack may be holding a bike clinic to perform minor repairs and offer advice. In addition to all this, student craftsmen will be exhibiting everything from stained glass art to candlemaking and bottlecapping to ceramics.

Sporting events include a tricycle race, a 10-speed bike race, softball, kite-flying, tug-of-war, a leg-put, and a street hockey game played by the members of the varsity hockey team. These events are scheduled to take place at various times throughout the day.

In addition to all these things, there will be bands and a folk singer, a concussion stand, and a rummage sale. There will be someone sewing leather patches on pants, and someone doing on-the-spot portraits. A troop of Girl Scouts will be having a bake sale; the Environmental Dism will be setting up several booths. Plus, WRUV may be broadcasting from in front of Buckham.

Cooperation for the event has been excellent; it's exciting to see what a lot of people working together, but each doing his own type of thing, can accomplish. And here it is!

The Red Square Affair. Come and celebrate spring with us!

Pan Sexuality Meeting

This Thursday, April 27, at 8:00 p.m., in 457 Waterman, there will be a meeting to discuss human sexuality. The meetings are focusing particularly on expressing one's own sexuality to those of the same sex, and the problems incurred in a society which still castigates such activity. The nature of previous meetings has been characterized by a wide diversity of opinion. We welcome this opportunity to freely and honestly exchange different points of view, and cordially invite everyone interested to attend.

Editorial Tired Of The War? Don't March, Write

With President Nixon's renewed bombing attacks in Vietnam, a group of UVM students went on "strike" last Friday, because the Student Association said it was okay to do so.

The 200 participants chose a rather nice spring day to parade downtown, occasionally disrupting traffic, and eventually, taking a noisy rest stop at the Federal Building on Pearl Street.

All this wonderful energy, supported by SA, was a wasted effort. After all, the war certainly didn't end. In fact, none of our representatives in Washington will ever know that there was a march.

A more effective protest could have been a spontaneous letter-writing campaign to our representatives. Anti-war sentiment in Washington is reportedly high, and 7000 more letters might have helped it grow higher.

And imagine, if you will, what kind of action could possibly have happened if all the college campuses, instead of striking and disrupting ROTC ceremonies, had undertaken such an effort, demanding an immediate end to this catastrophe.

Indeed, it is perhaps more comforting to be cynical about writing a letter to your representative, but, how effective have all the mass demonstrations, and community walks, been in bringing this war to a halt?

Letters To The Editor Questions, And An Answer, On How The Cynic Operates

April 21, 1972

To the Editor:
I have a few questions to which I would appreciate answers: How was the Cynic's decision reached to support Sharon Reed for SA President? Was this a majority, or an unanimous opinion? Of the entire staff or of the editorial board?

I must say I was very disappointed with last week's Cynic. In an election as important as this one, the coverage of the candidates was hardly adequate. A newspaper, staffed by students, for the use of students, has a much greater obligation to them than endorsing its favorite candidate. Why let over the others? Your editorial did a good job of describing her capabilities, but what are those of the other candidates?

It seems to me that the fourteen pages of last week's paper should have contained much more than the two small articles on the candidates. I would have liked to see the rest of that questionnaire which the Cynic gave the candidates at the press conference, and more background on the candidates' previous activities and involvement in student affairs. Were you afraid your candidate might not look as good?

You may say that those who were interested and concerned should have attended the forums with the candidates. Perhaps so. But you should have made an effort to reach those who could not, or would not, attend, by informing them of all the candidates and their stands on the issues.

The Cynic's first obligation should be to objectively present the student body with the information for it to make its own decisions.

Sincerely,
Leslie Ann Wood
Class of '75

Editor's Note: Your letter raises some good points. In order to clear up any misunderstandings, let the following be known: (1) Sharon Reed was endorsed by the Cynic after a poll among the editors showed that the general consensus favored her candidacy. (2) The staff is never consulted on editorials. Editorials are written by the Editors.

About the election coverage — we felt it was sufficient. If you were disappointed with our coverage of the election, I suggest you also inquire as to how many staff writers we have working for us. Not very many — perhaps five in a good week. Last week the number was closer to two: two people who in addition to writing for this paper, also have classes to attend, exams, hour exams, quizzes, book reviews, term papers, etc. Just plain people, not to mention their private lives. For the past two years, the Cynic has made no bones about the fact that it desperately needs writers on a regular basis. That means writing an article when assigned one, not waiting in every six or seven weeks with two pages of wordiness and expecting us to publish them.

Would you care to write for the Cynic, Miss Wood? How about some other work in the office? Because, in addition to writing, the people who covered the election had several other things to do in connection with the paper. Two people cut their classes on Wednesday and spent the entire day — 9 AM to 5 PM, working on this newspaper. Can you join us? I doubt it.

You also raise some questions about editorial content. An editorial is an opinion; not a fact sheet, not an announcement, not a rehash of the news. We did not feel obligated to restate the other candidates' qualifications. All we did was state our choice of president and state why we felt she was qualified. The reader can take it for what it's worth. If we were to list every candidate, we would run into two problems: space and subjectivity. To comment positively requires less restraint on the personal bias than to comment negatively. If the reader wanted to meet the candidates face to face and formulate his own evaluation, he had ample time to do so. You mention the questionnaire: several of them were three or four pages long. That's a lot of material to retype so the typesetters can make sense out of it. If you had let us know before hand that you were so interested in informing the students objectively about the candidates, I am sure that your office would not have gone unanswered.

Your letter underscores the major problem facing the Cynic and most student organizations on this campus: everybody loves to bitch and criticize, but when it comes time for them to do anything constructive, they have "priorities." Or rather, some flimsy excuses.

Disheartening Room Choosing

April 24, 1972

Dear Editor:
I have just survived a very disheartening experience. This experience is known as room choosing day. It actually started for me at 9 o'clock Sunday evening when we all went over to camp out on the steps of Billings. As we arrived, we were all given numbers of the order we would get to choose our rooms in the dorms. And so many freshmen spent the night on hard cement surfaces trying to keep warm in their sleeping bags.

Towards morning more and more people began to show up. The day was that the late arrivals seemed to think that they could crowd in front of their classmates who had braved the night. Luckily for us (it was only fair) they soon found out that they could not get away with this. But when the doors of Billings opened, everybody started acting like animals — pushing and shoving — trying to see who would get in first. And this sort of unsportsmanlike behavior lasted until everybody had finally secured their room.

I, for one, certainly do not look forward to going through this again next year. I think that the university should find another way for students to get their rooms. A suggestion might be that each student write down his first two choices for a dorm, and also his last choice. The housing office would go from there, going by seniority, and assigning each student a room. This would be final and everybody would have to accept what they got. I think this would prevent a lot of hassles.

Thank you,
Lynn Grant

P.S. — Thanks should go to the two people who saw everyone sleeping on Billings steps and very kindly went and bought doughnuts for everyone. Also in the morning they brought us coffee.

Deplore Behavior At ROTC Rites

Dear Editor:

I would like to make a formal apology for the conduct of student and faculty anti-war protesters at the ROTC awards ceremony Friday afternoon. I feel that a relatively fine and peaceful march was conducted to the Federal Building downtown but I think the shouting of obscenities, heckling and singing at the Allen Chapel were uncalled for and in bad taste. Anti-war demonstrations are needed but I feel strongly that this kind of action is detrimental to the peace effort by alienating those people whose support is sorely needed.

Joan Walker

April 24, 1972

Dear Editor:
Last Friday afternoon there was a ceremony at the Allen Chapel to honor the ROTC students. There were a number of people in the rear of the chapel, who held opposing views of those in ROTC. Very disturbing to me was the fact that some of these people were very rude and discourteous throughout the length of the program. They were politely asked several times to refrain from interrupting, but to no avail. To hold opposing views is fine, but lack of manners is totally unacceptable.

I think that the program was carried on remarkably well despite the interruptions.

Failure To Recognize ROTC Credits 'Unfair'

To the editor:

The rejection by the Arts and Sciences College of a move to recognize ROTC credits is both tragic and unfair. This action is not a rejection on a purely academic basis, but rather a crude attempt by some faculty members to have their philosophical views dominate all studies in the college. Very strange for a group that is continually clamoring about academic freedom. It is apparent that academic freedom is freedom to study and have credit accepted only in courses in which they are in philosophical agreement.

It seems that what the curriculum committee really wants is to be able to veto appointment of Military Science faculty as it sees fit. This presumably means that Army officers who were not in tune with faculty ideological sympathies would not be appointed. Isn't this practically the same situation as the Parenti affair which Arts faculty has been protesting?

This profound hatred of things military at least has not affected other colleges on campus, where ROTC credit is recognized. But is this really fair? Aren't we all a part of the same university?

The fact remains that military science courses are just as viable as courses in other subjects, some of which are ridiculous.

The vote against MS credits is even more revealing in that it demonstrates that the overwhelming makeup of A & S faculty is leftist-oriented and anti-military in outlook. Who could expect a fair judgement from such a biased group? I am thoroughly disgusted with this situation. Perhaps veterans and ROTC students can use other methods to get this credit accepted.

Sincerely yours,
James N. Praeger II

Professor Betty Bandel

Betty Bandel Defends

by Betty Chaffield

A seminar on "Women's Lib," held in the Harris-Mills lounge on Wednesday, April 12, attracted about forty very interested students. The speaker for the evening was Professor Betty Bandel from the University of Vermont, invited by Jim Darling, Hollis Bevis, Patty O'Leary, and Louise Strini of Harris and Mills Hall.

Dr. Bandel is a member of the English department at UVM and is an expert on Shakespeare. She received her Master's degree from Columbia University for her thesis on Shakespeare's treatment of the social position of women and then was granted a doctorate in English in 1951.

Miss Bandel is herself an excellent example of a capable and accomplished woman. She was employed for seven years as a reporter and then women's editor of the Arizona Daily Star, in Tucson, Arizona, and served for four years in the Women's Army Air Corps, reaching the position of Lieutenant Colonel. She has written several books, the most recent being Walk Into My Parlor, a collection of comments and chapters from books that were popular near the end of the 19th century.

In her talk to the students in the Harris-Mills lounge, Dr. Bandel used quotes from literature which illustrated the role of the American woman in society fifty years ago. One story came from the book Freshman and Senior by Jessie Elvira Wright Whitcomb, published in 1889. It is the only novel ever written about the University of Vermont.

It is Dr. Betty Bandel's belief that the problems which plague today's movement for Women's Liberation arose one hundred and fifty years ago with the coming of the

by Betty Chaffield

Unknown to most undergraduates at UVM there are numerous studies and research projects being conducted right here on the campus, covering a multitude of interesting topics. One such study is the research of Mrs. Frank Emanuel (UVM Home Economics Department) on the flammability of children's sleepwear. Many children die each year as a result of burns received when their clothing catches fire, and it is hoped that thorough research and federal legislation such accidents can be prevented.

Mrs. Emanuel, an assistant professor in the area of textiles, carries out her study at the University of Vermont in conjunction with others who are working at academic institutions in Maine, New York, Virginia, Rhode Island, and Pennsylvania. The project is supported by Hatch Funds and recommendations for this and other similar studies come from the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Mr. Poger Isn't "Mr. Coulter"...

Dear Sir:
I am not paranoid; some one really is picking on me. In last Thursday's Cynic my identity was hidden under a pseudonym. I have been called many things but never Professor Coulter. More important, the story misquotes my argument. Professor Stout (Flout?) called, not for the abolishment of pass-no pass, on the submission of a report—in that case, why have the report? but for its automatic abolition if such a report was not made by a certain date. My argument was not "The sit-in-ate-abolishment of pass-no pass won't solve anything," but that its "automatic" abolition wouldn't solve anything.

Accuracy in a newspaper is highly desirable. I am glad the Cynic covers the deliberations, such as they are, of the Faculty Senate. I hope they continue to do—accurately and responsibly.

Yours truly,
Sidney Poger

May I offer my sincerest apologies for somehow thinking that your name was a Mr. Coulter. May I offer my sincerest apologies at what appears to be a serious misrepresentation of the arguments that were offered at the Faculty Senate meeting concerning Professor Stout's amendment, and your eventual argument.

It is evident now that I may have done a great injustice to the Faculty Senate by the careless reporting that I thought at the time to be accurate.

I agree, Mr. Poger, "accuracy in a newspaper is highly desirable," and anything short of it, creates not only embarrassment to the individual reporter involved, but to the newspaper as well. Again, my sincerest apologies, though I know it does little good to apologize for a mistake. The harm is already done...

A Black Woman's "Morningtime"

By Evelyn Smith

Albany's State University's black steering committee presented their third annual Black Political and Enrichment Culture Conference, April 14-16.

The initial idea for this weekend conference was Albany's black students' concern for people of African descent's need to come together in hopes that the conference will be an inspiration and motivation for us in the world struggle, as well as the eventual liberation of our brothers and sister world-wide.

This conference was a tremendous success with the help of the "Queen of Soul," Aretha Franklin, who performed on one evening of the conference.

An example of the creative work presented during the weekend activities was written by a member of the steering committee. In it, she is expressing her realization what it means to be a black woman:

Morning Time

The morning of me life's day is beautiful Refreshing is the truth of purpose and meaning
And to perform the duties...
Black Woman, Black Man, Black Power

The truth is Blackness, the genesis of beauty
The motivation of spirit and deep love
Is completely ours
Black people must seek and find that truisms
Black Woman, Black Man, Black Unity

The purpose of my life
What is it?
Why do I struggle so severely, exhaustingly,
To exist through my life's day
Black Man, Black Child, Black Nation

I've awakened, I am beautiful
I love
Being Black, Living Black, Talking Black
I love you
Black Man, Black Man, Black Man

The final events of the conference were held Sunday from 2 p.m. until 8 p.m. A soul food dinner was also served, consisting of barbecue spare ribs, collard ribs, corn bread and potatoes.

This was a rewarding and unforgettable weekend for everyone who attended.

The Society for Black and Puerto Rican Unity

Puerto Rican Weekend

by Evelyn Nieves

On April 21, one of UVM's minority students attended one of Albany State University's Puerto Rican weekends. The purpose of this weekend was to give the Puerto Ricans a better awareness of who they are, and where they stand as a minority group economically, socially, and politically in the United States.

This weekend was a true Puerto Rican experience, not only for myself, but for everyone who attended. The weekend offered music, songs, literary and political presentations.

The weekend was dedicated to all the Puerto Rican political prisoners who have struggled to keep our nation alive: those who have refused to deny their identity...so fight for the self-determination of our people.

GREAT FOR GRADUATION The Fisher 402

Unlimited Performance and Convenience at a Moderate Cost

Motor and Turntable Platter: The virtually rumble-free motor and the low-rumble, damped mounting of the 502 have been retained in the Fisher 402. The turntable is of the same non-resonant, non-magnetic design and construction as that of the 502, differing only in its weight of four pounds. In addition, the top plate of the 402 is slightly smaller, to facilitate more compact installations.

Tone Arm: The Fisher 402 incorporates, in all major aspects, the same low-mass tone arm and low-friction bearings as the 502. The stylus force and anti-skating adjustment knobs are lined, with vernier adjustment possible for various styles. In addition, stylus angle has been pre-adjusted to optimum, based upon statistical determinations of average record loads.

Operation: The 402 offers the convenience of automatic record scanning and stylus protection, with automatic repeat in both manual and automatic modes, single-play or sequential. All functions are controlled by a single master control-command lever. Universal cueing is operative during manual operation.

Variable Pitch Control: The Fisher 402 incorporates a variable pitch control to vary any of the three record speeds (33 1/3 rpm, 45 rpm, 78 rpm) up to plus or minus 3%, permitting critical adjustment of the pitch of the recorded music.

Spindles: Manual play and automatic play spindles are included with the Fisher 402.

"Flea" Su Making Pe

The Arena Theatre's recent "Flea," a farce employing broad, enjoyable and capably acted technical aspects.

The play, which was presented by Jennifer A. (Steffen Saifer), has been unfailingly successful. She enlists the play by Leslie Ayvazian, and in the Hotel Coq d'Or. The play's other complications are and hilarious speech impediment until the end, when the right people get together.

The play was written by Feydeau, and, although transposed, most of the lines are original. Mentionable for Charles Towers as Camille, pronounces his consonants, at the Hotel Coq d'Or, and Ted Hirsangna, the violently jealous everyone. Steffen Saifer, in the role of the head of the household, Poche.

Although a great deal of which were quite beautiful could have been paid to the Hotel Coq d'Or, the actors were clumsy and the receiving box, were handled apart.

Despite these fallacies, amusing, highly suggestive. As the author, Georges Feydeau, will make people laugh.

From The Creative Writing Contest

"Flea" Succeeds In Making People Laugh

The Arena Theatre's recent production of "A Flea In Her Ear", a farce employing broad sexual humor, was extremely enjoyable and capably acted, if a bit amateurish in certain technical aspects.

The play, which was presented on April 18-23, deals with a woman, played by Jennifer Allen, who feels that her husband, (Stefen Saifer), has been unfaithful to her because of his recent lack of desire. She enlists the help of her best friend excellently played by Leslie Ayvazian, and they set off to the local house of sin, the Hotel Coq d'Or. The only problem is the friend's fanatically jealous husband who also goes to the infamous Coq d'Or. Other complications ensue, including mistaken identities and hilarious speech impediments, leaving everyone in quite a tangle until the end, when everything miraculously works out, and the right people get together again.

The play was written by the French playwright Georges Feydeau, and, although translation stilted the language in some places, most of the lines are quite funny, and, in some places, operatic. Mentionable for particularly humorous roles were Charles Towers as Camille, the innocent nephew who can't pronounce his consonants, and, who is really quite a swinger at the Hotel Coq d'Or, and Terry Demas as Carlos Homenides de Hestange, the violently jealous husband who wants to kill everyone. Steffen Saifer, in the lead, was amazingly versatile and also quite good at quick changes as Victor Emmanuel, the dignified head of the household, and his lookalike, the drunken poet, Poche.

Although a great deal of attention was paid to the costumes, which were quite beautiful and elaborate, perhaps a bit more could have been paid to the sets and props. The backdrops, for both the Hotel Coq d'Or and the parlor of the Chandebise's home, were chunky and rather unattractive. Props, such as a powdering box, were handled awkwardly and were apt to fall apart.

Despite these criticisms, the production was a very amusing, highly suggestive comedy, which was performed well. As the author, Georges Feydeau said, his play is a "farce that will make people laugh."

UVM Faculty String Quartet In Concert May 3; 'A Group That Deserves To Be More Widely Heard'

The String Quartet will perform at 12:00 noon on May 3, in North Lounge, Billings Center. Free and open to the public.

Now in its third season, the University of Vermont Faculty String Quartet has emerged as one of the most important instrumental groups in the State.

Beginning in the 1968-69 season, the Quartet has developed new audiences for a string quartet literature that is vast, but relatively unfamiliar outside of its limited audience.

Afficionados, meanwhile, have been rewarded by a series of well-studied readings in concerts of serious and demanding works.

The Quartet's reviews have been consistently appreciative; Burlington Free Press critic John D. Donoghue wrote of the last concert of the 1969-70 season, "This is a group that deserves to be more widely heard."

The Quartet is an outgrowth of the opportunity afforded by the concentration of musical talent in the University of Vermont Department of Music, and the additional talent available in Vermont's largest city.

Three of the founding members — Thomas and Evelyn Read, violins, and Flora Kinsey, cello — have faculty status at the University, and a fourth founder, violinist Cecil Carter, was instructor in elementary strings in Burlington Public Schools.

Mr. Carter has since been replaced by Roger Gillim, a research associate for the Northern New England Regional Medical Program which is based at the University.

Mrs. Kinsey studied at Yale University School of Music and was a student of Charles Krane of the Juilliard School of Music.

She has played with many symphony orchestras, including New Haven, Springfield, Bridgeport and Florida State. She played for three years on the Brock Shampoo network radio program.

She is cello instructor at the University and has a large class of private pupils.

Mrs. Read has B.M. and M.M. degrees from Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore, and has studied at Meadowmount School of Music, N.Y. She has coached chamber music with Joseph Gingold, William Kroll and Leon Fleisher, and has given many chamber music performances in Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia.

She was the winner of the Thomas Prize in violin at Peabody.

Her husband, Thomas Read, is assistant professor of music at the University and holds degrees from Oberlin Conservatory and the New England Conservatory, Boston and Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore. He studied violin with Andor Toth, Richard Burgin and Robert Gerle.

He formed and conducted the Frohnburg Chamber Orchestra, Salzburg, Austria, and was a member of the Boston Chamber Orchestra and the Baltimore Symphony.

Professor Read is also a composer whose works have been performed in Boston, New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia and at the University of Iowa. His "Concatenation" for flute and piano premiered at Carnegie Hall in 1967.

Mr. Gillim earned the B.A. degree at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., the M.S. at Brandeis University, and the M.M. at Ball State University in Muncie, Ind.

He has been principal violist with the Muncie Symphony and the Ball State Opera Society.

UVM Announces Ticket Plan

60 Mile Rally This Saturday

Final plans have been made for the first annual Maxwell Silverhammer Memorial Road Rally to be held this Saturday at 10:00 A.M. Cars will begin leaving the starting area at the Guttererson Fieldhouse parking area at that time, as they start on the sixty mile course which will take them over a variety of highways, state roads, and less well-traveled dirt roads in some ten different towns in the greater Burlington area. In addition to following written directions, the driver and navigator in each rally team will be required to answer questions concerning landmarks they pass along the route. Winner of the event will be determined on the basis of penalty points given for errors in time elapsed while traveling between checkpoints and incorrect answers to the written questions.

Plans include a keg party open to all contestants which includes the driver, navigator, and any passengers of all the rally teams. The location of the party has not been disclosed, since it will be in the immediate area of the secret finish line. Promoters of the rally have stated, however, that the finish will be within a reasonable distance of Burlington and UVM campus.

At the present time, there are a limited number of openings for rally teams. Applications will be accepted up until the start of the event. However, those who wait until Saturday morning to enroll will have to draw their starting positions after all those who have pre-registered. While this cannot affect the outcome of the race, it does mean that a late registrant may have to wait over an hour for the other entries to leave the starting area at two-minute intervals.

Applications are being accepted by rally sponsors who may be contacted at 656-2513, Room 223; or at 656-2036, Room 302; anytime between now and the day of the rally. The fee for entering is two dollars per member of each team, with a minimum of two members. Any additional members will be allowed to ride for fifty cents each. With the first prize of twenty-five dollars being offered, there is good incentive for everyone who has a car available to them on Saturday to get out and try. Previous experience is positively unnecessary: all that is needed is a watch with a second hand, a working mileage indicator, and a paper and pencil. The free keg party at the end of the rally and the chance to meet a lot of new friends should be of interest to any rallyists, whether or not they care about winning.

Tennis Team Aces Two

The UVM Women's Tennis Team is off to a smashing start. In the first two games of the season, UVM has beaten both Middlebury and Colby Jr. College on their home courts.

Coach Sally Guertle has succeeded in lengthening a usually short season by scheduling a total of 5 games and 1 scrimmage. The Women's victories were claimed by Ginger Moran, 6-2, 6-4; and Pat Dillon, 6-0, 6-2. Winners of the doubles were Gerri Gross and Debbie Kelly, 6-0, 6-1; and Emily Schnaper and Julie Herzig, 6-4, 6-3.

The next home game is tonight, Thursday April 27, at 7 p.m., against Johnson St. at the indoor courts. You all are invited to come and watch some fine tennis.

by Tom Ferris

This past Tuesday a new athletic ticket plan was announced by the University. Its object is to help fund athletic programs while at the same time keeping the cost down for students.

This ticket plan is not new to UVM. It was in existence in 1935 and has been adopted again for next year. The plan offers students a cut-rate price to attend all the home games provided he participates in the package plan, participation also guarantees admission to the home contests.

The plan will operate in this fashion:

Two thousand five hundred ticket books will be printed for the students. The cost per book will be $20.00. Applications for the books will be mailed to the students in the near future and the return date will be June first. Tickets will be sold on a priority basis, those who return their applications first will receive first consideration.

After June 1, the remaining tickets will be sold at freshman orientation.

The ticket books will be issued during registration or they may be picked up at the Athletic Office after September 1st. Books that are not called for by the 23rd of September will be forfeited.

A quick glance at this deal would make the student wonder what the designers of this plan were thinking of. (Students aren't made of money you know). Well if some of them who question this would make a few calculations, they'd find that the plan is cheaper in the long run.

Without the plan, the price for tickets would be 1.50 each. If multiplied by the number of home Hockey games, that comes out to $16.50. By participating in the Ticket

Book plan, they would be able to see all the hockey games plus any of the basketball or football games for only $3.50 more. By buying his tickets under the ticket plan, the student could save himself 1.70 a ticket.

One immediate draw-back some might cite is the fact that in order to get this reduction in price the student must buy tickets to games he might not want to see or not have the time to see. What is he going to do with that ticket? The answer is quite simple. He could give them away, he could sell them, or he could throw them away. Once he has his tickets, the holder can do whatever he wishes with them.

So far I have just been singling out the student, but the ticket plan is applicable for faculty and staff as well. A planned package price will be offered to the faculty and staff for $0.00, on the same basis as for students, i.e. first come first served.

Some of the advantages of this system would be 1) no more waiting in line at the Book Store or Athletic Office to buy tickets, 2) no more waiting in line at the gate and 3) the assurance you've got a seat.

The Athletic Department hopes to make an additional $25,000 over what the gate receipts have been for the past few years. The additional revenue will be directed only to athletics, none of it will go into the general fund for the University. The only good that will come of it, is the overall continuation and improvement of the athletic programs.

This reporter urges all the students to support this ticket plan, and any questions about it be directed to Tom Ferris c/o the Cynic Office and I'll try to get them answered for you.

THE INSIDER

by Bill Bode

Although, after a three week recess the Track Cats were back in action on April 15th for the Vermont Outdoor Invitational, we met with fate as we closed out the indoor season on March 24th. Having received an invitation from the University of Montreal to participate in the Canadian National Track Meet on that day, four of us, making up a slow but dogged sprint medley relay team, made our way up to the big city. Something had gone wrong on every away trip of the indoor season so far, everything from getting nearly hopelessly lost in Southern Maine when we were destined for Northern Maine to running out of gas on Rt. 89 at night in sub-zero weather. So naturally wary of this trip, we were however prepared for impending trouble. The meet itself progressed fairly smoothly; we took fourth in the relay and blamed the loss on the University of Montreal's flat board track. Nate Beeves, running second, damaged his ankle; yet this was merely the start of what was to happen. Supposedly the meet's director had arranged for us to stay in the city Friday night for the meet wasn't to end till midnight. However, in keeping with recent away meet occurrences, signals got crossed between here and Montreal and we were without lodging for the night. After a hassle of arguing and pleading with other competitors, we did however manage to secure a minimum of sleeping space for ourselves.

As I mentioned earlier, we opened the outdoor season on Saturday, April 15th with a victory over Norwich. It was a miserable day due to rain so what events weren't held indoors were either cancelled or generated poor times or distances. The following Wednesday, April 19th, we met Norwich again here at Post Field for a dual meet. Once again it rained; yet despite this adversity, the Vermont Track & Field team turned in a fine 100 yd. dash time of 10.1 seconds. After having rested last Saturday, the harriers will be back in action on this Wednesday for the state meet here and on Saturday, April 29th, for a dual meet with the University of Maine at Orono.

Buffalo and Portland announced the appointment of new head coaches. Jack Ramsay, who had coached the Philadelphia 76ers the past four seasons, replaced John McCarthy at Buffalo. The Trail Blazers selected Jack McCloskey of Wake Forest.

Athletic awards will be presented to four seniors at the 5th annual Senior Lettermen's Dinner at the Burlington Country Club, April 27 (Thursday). Over 30 senior athletes are expected to attend the dinner, sponsored by the University's Centennial Club.

Summer Session To Begin July 6

by Jeri Covey

The theme of this year's summer session at the University of Vermont is "The American Dream, the Reality and the Promise." According to Charles Fillingim, Assistant Director of Continuing Education, the summer session should prove to be a "pretty good experience for anyone who comes."

In addition to the regular sessions running from July 6 to August 16 and June 26 to August 18, there will be a series of short session workshops designed primarily for teachers. One such program will be held in conjunction with the Vermont Historical Society to introduce teachers to ways of using historical sites throughout the state. Another short session is a Drug Studies Seminar.

A Canadian Studies Institute will be offered this year jointly by the University of Vermont and the New England-Atlantic Provinces-Quebec Center of the University of Maine. The Institute will focus on the geography and history of Canada but will also include material in Canada's economy, government, society and culture. The program will begin with one week of extensive lectures at the Orono campus of the University of Maine. The participants will then spend four weeks in the Maritime, Quebec and Ontario Provinces. The session will conclude with one week at the University of

Panhellenic Names Outstanding Greeks

Jack Arute and Nancy Tabke have been named the Outstanding Greek Man and Woman of this year. The awards are given out annually by the Panhellenic Council of UVM to those two persons who, in the opinion of Panhellenic, exemplify the ideals of the Greeks in the following ways:

- (1) Service to fraternity or sorority
- (2) Service to the Greek system
- (3) Service to the University
- (4) Academic standing
- (5) General leadership qualities

Arute is a senior from New Britain, Connecticut and a brother of Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. He retired last week as President of the Fraternity Forum, which succeeded the IFC last year as the governing body of fraternities at UVM. He was perhaps better recognized in his fall outfit of Charlie Catamount at the football games, and in addition to holding several jobs, was able to attain a 3.7 average the past semester.

Nancy Tabke is a senior from Parsippany, New Jersey. A physical education major, she was the Panhellenic Third Vice President for 1971 and served on numerous Panhel committees. She is a member of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority.

Other nominees for the awards were: Steve John, Sigma Phi, Tom Pournaras, Sigma Nu, and Sam Simmons, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, for the Outstanding Greek Man; for Outstanding Greek Woman, Anne Bennet of Alpha Delta Pi, Wendy Baker, Delta Delta Delta, Maggie McCahon, Alpha Chi Omega, Ellen Musinsky, Kappa Alpha Theta, and Michele Penick, Alpha Delta Pi, were also nominated.

The winners will be presented with trophies Monday afternoon at a reception at Alpha Chi Omega Poco will be at Patrick Gym, Saturday May 6th at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $3.00 for students, $3.50 otherwise, available at Baileys and the University Bookstore.

Richie Furay, twelve-string guitar, was born in Yellow Springs, Ohio. He learned how to play guitar when he was eight and hasn't stopped since. There were a series of high school and college folk groups before he ventured to New York, where he met and teamed up with Stephen Stills to form the short-lived Au Go Go Singers. They left for L.A., and it was there that the Buffalo Springfield was born. Richie writes and sings much

Educational Marathon Day Termed Successful

On April 26, 1972 the College of Education of the University of Vermont sponsored an Educational Marathon Day. Several hundred students, faculty, and professional educators from around the state joined the UVM Community in a day long series of events designed as a forum for exchange of ideas, issues, and information in the field of education. The idea for the Marathon Day developed from a series of meetings by the College of Education Student Advisory Committee. Tom Ryan and John Rosenquist served as co-chairmen of the event. Messrs. Ryan and Rosenquist

UVM To Confer Four Honorary Degrees At Commencement

Honorary degrees will be conferred by the University of Vermont on a public health nurse, a physician, a medical-social worker and a federal judge at Commencement ceremonies May 21.

The University Board of Trustees has approved the honor for Dr. Laura C. Dugan, assistant commissioner for nursing service with the New York State Department of Health in Albany, Dr. Frank J. Lawless of Richmond, Miss Emily B. Sheldon, program director with the Vermont Association for the Crippled, and the Hon. Steery R. Waterman of the U.S. Court of Appeals. Because of prior commitments all the degrees will be conferred at the Commencement for the College of Arts and Sciences May 21 to 2 p.m. in Patrick Gymnasium.

Dr. Dugan, a native of Craftsbury Common and 1940 alumna of UVM, holds degrees as well from Western Reserve University School of Nursing, Columbia University, and the University of California at Berkeley, where she earned the Ed.D.

She taught nursing at the University of Vermont 1954-60, and then worked with the National League for Nursing until 1964 when she became Dean of the College of Nursing at the State University of Iowa. She was named to her present position this year.

Dr. Lawless, a native of Barre and 1923 graduate of the UVM College of Medicine, has been in private practice in Richmond since that year. He was secretary to the State Board of Medical Registration 1940-61, has been Richmond's town health officer for 30 years, auditor for 20, and school board member for 10.

In 1962 he was awarded a certificate of appreciation by

by Jeri Covey

A heated debate took place at the last Student Association Senate meeting regarding the motion to give $1,200 to the Michael Parenti Defense Fund. An amendment to the motion calling for a campus wide referendum on the issue was defeated. Finally, after much discussion, the motion was defeated in a division of the house vote.

The debate on the floor revolved around the issue of Mr. Parenti's personality versus support of academic freedom. Some Senators expressed the opinion that Professor Parenti should use his own money to fight his suit against the Board of Trustees because he is fighting for his job. Other Senators said that it is our duty to help him with his case because we are fighting for academic freedom which is an issue that is as important to the students as to the faculty.

So that the Defense Fund would know that the Senate wishes to give the money for the express purpose of academic freedom and not to defend Michael Parenti per se

Ace Bugbee, author of the motion, accepted a friendly amendment from Jack Arute to include a qualifying letter explaining that the money is to be used for the defense of academic freedom.

A division of the house was called on the vote, that is each Senator's vote is weighed in proportion to the number of constituents he represents. The motion to give the Parenti Defense Fund $1,200 was defeated.

Phi Beta Kappa-Sigma Xi Sponsor Panel On Academic Freedom

by Jeri Covey

A distinguished scholar and journalist, Dr. Irving Dilliard spoke at the University of Vermont April 18, in an afternoon panel and an evening lecture on academic freedom jointly sponsored by Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi.

Dr. Dilliard, Ferris Professor of Journalism and senior fellow of the Council of Humanities at Princeton University, was a member of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch staff for more than thirty-five years. He graduated from the University of Illinois where he served as a trustee from 1961-1967. He is a historian for the United chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, and a lecturer for that association.

He has edited "The Spirit of Liberty," a collection of Judge Learned Hand's papers, "Mr. Justice Brandeis, Great American," and "One Man's Stand of Freedom: Mr. Justice Black and the Bill of Rights." His articles have appeared in many magazines and newspapers.

The afternoon panel consisted of, in addition to Dr. Dilliard, Dean C. Corrigan, Dean of the College of Education, Richard E. Gallagher, News Director of WCAI-TV, Ruth Page, Editor of the Suburban List, and Kendall Wild, Managing Editor of the Rutland Herald and President of the Vermont Press Association. Norman T. London, Chairman of the UVM Communication and Theatre Department, was moderator.

The panel was entitled "Traditional and New Directions for Academic Freedom." Dr. Dilliard started the panel by stating his two basic propositions on academic freedom. The first is that "the universities must lead in our society." Politicians can lead the country only part of the time because they represent various constituencies and must be elected. His second proposition is that the university is a highly pluralistic institution. This is the "way it should be." Therefore nobody can speak for the whole university or the faculty. He later added that the administration, faculty and students must all work together.

Richard Gallagher said "what can you say about academic freedom after you say that you are in favor of it." He added that it is too often put in the political context. You often think of academic freedom as something that a non-academia do to the academia, however, interference from agencies such as HEW, is also a violation of it.

"Freedom isn't anything that you find in the natural state," is the statement made by Kendall Wild. He added that you have to accept a sense of combat is not out of the ordinary and only by assertion of rights can real freedom be achieved.

Dean Corrigan said that we should "focus on academic freedom for students." The student's freedom to learn is the complement of the teacher's freedom to teach. There should be a responsibility to make decisions with joint investigation by all concerned constituencies. "Students ought to have a right to a relevant education."

Ruth Page said that education is left to solve the problems of a "country run by big government, big business, big labor." She said that students are providing the initiative. She challenged the areas of employment of women and tenure in regard to academic freedom.

A question was raised by Professor Gould, Chairman of the Political Science Department, that the panel with the exception of Mr. Gallagher had not addressed their remarks to academic freedom. Referring to academic freedom as "the history of defending disagreeable people," Professor Gould said that academic freedom is an individual case and has nothing to do with groups. Dean Corrigan replied that freedom has to do with choices between alternatives. The concepts are applied to individuals.

Another question dealt with the communication of the university's ideas on academic freedom. Mr. Wild replied that it is necessary to educate the legislature, but that the legislators have to go more than halfway.

The subject of the evening lecture was "The Greatest Freedom of All." There were responses by Sister Elizabeth Candon, President of Trinity College, and William H. Macmillan, Dean of the UVM Graduate College. Both the panel discussion and the lecture were open to the public.

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Land Use Planning In Vermont

Vermonters concerned with trends in land use in Vermont will hold an all-day session at the University of Vermont Saturday (May 6). The topics are "Private Property, Human Rights and Land Use Planning in Vermont."

Talks, panel discussions and photographs of conditions in Vermont are planned in the public program being presented by the University of Vermont Environmental Program, working with the Vermont Natural Resources Council and the Lake Champlain Committee. Aim is to stimulate thinking on land use planning, and to develop approaches and ideas of use to planners.

Featured speaker will be Dan Kiley of Charlotte, whose firm has been responsible for planning and execution of major environmental projects across the nation. He will speak on "Man in Nature."

The session will open at 10 a.m. in Ira Allen Chapel with a sound-and-slide show offered by Arthur A. Ristau, director of EPIC (Environmental Planning Information Center).

of Montpelier. A discussion of this presentation, "So Goes Vermont," will be led by Mrs. Margaret Garland of Burlington, chairman of the Vermont Natural Resources Council and president of the League of Women Voters of Vermont.

Kiley's address will follow. At the luncheon in Billings Center, participants will join in a thought exercise on goals in land use planning. The theme will be continued in a panel discussion following luncheon. This is titled "What Shall Vermont Be?" and two planners, a businessman and a philosopher will be on the panel.

Participants may choose from a variety of topics planned for various workshops, all meeting at 2 p.m. At 3, the group will meet together to hear workshop reports and to vote informally on any resolutions offered.

Chairman of the event is Dr. Herbert L. Leff, assistant professor of psychology.

The conference is free and open to the public.

Tri-Deltas Assist In Green-Up

Going through an eight week period of pledgeships in a sorority includes not only involvement within the sorority, but also with the community and the school. Services called projects are to be carried out before a pledge can become a sister. So, last Wednesday the Delta Delta Delta pledges, Connie Oman, Cathy Doane, Sue Winston, Heather Logan, Leigh Davies, Maureen Cannon, Sue Darby, Mary Lou Manchester and Patty Lafayette accomplished their school project. In conjunction with Vermont Green-Up Week the Delta Delta Delta pledges picked up litter in Waterman parking lot. Not only did they fulfill their school project, but at the same time they helped to clean up the environment.

Peace Vigil

On May 4, 12:00 - 1:00 p.m., there will be a Peace Vigil at City Hall Park. It is sponsored by a group of concerned citizens. The Vigil will include Prayers, 5-minute speeches, Silent Witness. Can you give one hour of witness? It may end the war! Participants are also invited to an Air War Slide Show in City Hall Auditorium at 1:00 p.m. The slide show is sponsored by the A.F.S.C.

VPIRG

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group will conduct a survey on the adequacy of health care services among residents of buildings owned by the Burlington Housing Authority. This will be done as a foundation for a comprehensive health care plan for low-income tenants of the B.H.A. Volunteers are needed for this project, particularly those who will be in Burlington this summer. Those interested may leave their names and addresses in Box 15, Billings Center, or call Jeff Ewen at 863-3280.

Mass For Peace

The Newman Center (St. Augustine's Chapel) will have a Mass for Peace, May 4, 7:00 p.m. May 4 is the anniversary of Kent State and also a day set aside for War Moratorium. Can you give some time to prayer, and witness that you want the war to end now? Following the Mass, participants are invited to St. Anselm's for an Air War Slide Show presented by Steve Early of the A.F.S.C.

Meal Plans Available

Any returning residence hall student or off campus student wishing a meal plan who missed getting their picture taken, can have it done September 5th and 6th at registration, Patrick Gym. All arrangements can be done there: sign up, picture and payment.

Anthropology Indian Exhibit

The Department of Anthropology announces the opening of an exhibit consisting of group projects done by students enrolled in this semester's class in museology. The exhibit concerns various aspects of Indian culture native to the area in pre-contact and post-contact times and includes such displays as Iroquoia Pottery Manufacture, Subsistence Hunters of the Northeast, a reconstruction of an Iroquoian longhouse, and a model of the excavation of a Vermont archaeological site. These and other projects may be viewed in the back room of the Sociology and Anthropology Building at 31 So. Prospect St. during regular office hours from April 29 through May 15.

IRA Meeting:

Dance Feat

The weekly Inter-Residence Association meeting was held in the MAT lounge Tuesday, April 25 at 6:30, with President Sig Heller presiding. Under the order of new business, $10 was allocated to a suspended rules vote for repainting the lines on the Jeanne Mance tennis courts. These courts serve the CBCWJM dorm complex area.

Stan Brädeen reported that the I.R.A. dance at Harris-Mills on April 21 went over very well, and that two more dances were to be held: Snake River on Friday, April 28 and Gunnison Brook on Friday, May 6. Both are scheduled from 9 to 1 in the Harris-Mills main lounge and are open to all students on campus.

As many I.R.A. members as possible were requested to attend the Billings Governing Board meeting on May 1. The Board will consider whether or not to let I.R.A. keep its office on the second floor of the Center. The executive board of I.R.A. feels that the office is necessary and will be frequently used, and asked that its members petition for its continued use by I.R.A.

Dean Thompson announced that the Family Associates of U.V.M. had made funds available to the Inter-Residence Association for the purchase of all screening equipment. I.R.A. gratefully accepted the offer.

In a general discussion session, I.R.A. members talked over the feasibility of several different projects for the improvement of dorm life. Among the ideas under consideration were proposed craft areas in dorm complexes and an I.R.A. communications center for Audio-Visual equipment. Any student living on campus with an idea for a worthwhile project is asked to contact his I.R.A. representative or a member of the executive board. New proposals are welcome.

The I.R.A. Committee on Fall Activities met with Debbie Orr last Thursday evening in Harris Hall. Many various activities were selected from a number of ideas, and committee members were assigned to each to start planning. It was stressed that although these activities are aimed at maximum freshmen involvement, they are by no means restricted to freshmen, and upper classmen are urged to attend. Some "social" events in the planning stage include a TGIF party, a play, dances, a bonfire, several movies, a hayride and so on. A full list of events is expected to be ready at Freshman Orientation in the early summer. Anyone interested in helping organize these events may talk to Debbie Orr in 332 Harris.

There will be an I.R.A. sponsored dance in the Harris-Mills main lounge area Friday, May 5. Featured will be Gunnison Brook. Dance is open to all students.

GREAT FOR GRADUATION THE FISHER 402X TURNTABLE

Motor and Turntable Platter: The virtually hum-free motor and the low-rumble, damped mounting of the 502 have been retained in the Fisher 402. The turntable is of the same non-resonant, non-magnetic design and construction as that of the 502, differing only in its weight of four pounds. In addition, the top plate of the 402 is slightly smaller, to facilitate more compact installations.

Tone Arm: The Fisher 402 incorporates, in all major respects, the same low-mass tone arm and low-friction bearings as the 502. The stylus force and anti-skating adjustment knobs are linked, with vernier adjustment possible for various stylus. In addition, stylus angle has been pre-adjusted to optimum, based upon statistical determinations of average record loads.

Operation: The 402 offers the convenience of automatic record scanning and stylus protection, with automatic repeat in both manual and automatic modes, single-play or sequential. All functions are controlled by a single master control-command lever. Universal cueing is operative during manual operation.

Variable Pitch Control: The Fisher 402 incorporates a variable pitch control to vary any of the three record speeds (33 1/3 rpm, 45 rpm, 78 rpm) up to plus or minus 8%, permitting critical adjustment of the pitch of the recorded music.

Spindles: Manual play and automatic play spindles are included with the Fisher 402.

was passed to give up to $3,000 to the Senior Class for the Senior Class Banquet, and Senior Week. One thousand dollars will be used to set up an entertainment and a PA system for the Senior Week. Another $2,000 will be used for the use of the grounds at Marble Island Resort for the Senior Banquet. Each Senior attending the banquet will also have to pay $2.00 to cover the cost of food and liquor as SA regulations will not allow SA money to be used for food and liquor.

Dick Casady proposed a motion to appoint a committee to nominate candidates for the Concert Bureau officers and assistants. There are three Concert Bureau officers: chairman, fiscal manager, and publicity director. In addition, there are four unassigned assistants, from which the following year's officers will be chosen. This is in accordance with the new Concert Bureau constitution, previously there were seven officers appointed every year, each with a specific job. The rules of the house were suspended and the motion was passed.

A motion was made by Jack Arute to send a letter to the Coalition for a Democratic University expressing dissatisfaction at the actions of their representatives to the April 30 special SA Senate meeting discussing the proposal to have a campus-wide student strike on the following Friday. The motion was tabled until next week.

The Executive Board proposed a motion to recognize the Women's Commencement Committee. This committee was formed to commemorate the one hundredth year of women at the University. They will be planning a week-long symposium of women's issues to be held next fall. Already this year they have held several events including a day symposium and a craft fair.

country bands throughout the state. After a year at the University of Colorado, Rusty joined a Denver group and became a full time musician. From Denver to Los Angeles where he supported himself as a studio musician. He was a union man on "Kind Women," a track on the last Springfield LP.

George Grantham, drummer, is an Oklahoma boy who provides the excellent percussion backbone for Poco. Grantham worked in various bands in Denver, Colorado where he eventually met up with Rusty and joined him in the short-lived Boonys Creque band.

Timothy Schmit, bass guitar and vocals grew up in Sacramento, California. A few units short of a degree in psychology from Sacramento State College, Timothy dropped out of the college scene to pursue music as a full time musician. Tim joined Poco just before the group began recording their second album, "Poco."

Paul Cotton, guitarist, was formerly a member of the Illinois Speed Press. He began taking piano lessons before he started kindergarten, took up French horn in elementary school and discovered the guitar in junior high school. Although he's been in groups that concentrate primarily on progressive rock, his first love has always been friendly, people music. He's at home with Poco and it's obvious.

Careers In Catholic Church

A unique vocation team will attempt to interest University of Vermont students to investigate careers in the Roman Catholic Church during a weekend informational program at UVM's Catholic Center, Redstone Campus, May 6 and 7.

The group includes a preacher and a priest folk singer — both members of Missionaries of Our Lady of La Salette — and two Worcester, Mass., college students who are studying to be priests. The UVM program is organized by the La Salette Center for Church Mission and Vocations, Worcester, Mass.

Team members will be available for counseling and dialogue throughout the weekend at the Catholic Center and will participate in six celebrations of the Eucharist and a PRAYER SERVICE OF LIGHTS, Saturday evening at 10:30 p.m.

Pan Sexuality

In Marsh Lounge, Billings, Thursday, May 4, at 8:00 p.m., discussion will continue on human sexuality, with specific emphasis on dealing with our relationships with people of the same sex. This is the final meeting of the semester. Definite plans are being made for continuing the meetings through the summer, and next semester at UVM. For further information, contact Tom Phillips at 985-2638.

Student Program Coordinators for the Marathon - Tom Ryan and John Rosenquist.

Educational Marathon Day...

are graduate students in Guidance and Counseling and Student Personnel in Higher Education, respectively.

The topics of the discussion groups varied from Urban Studies in the Secondary School, presented by Mike

Choukas, Headmaster,

Vermont Academy, to a seminar on Non-Traditional

Higher Education, led by R.

V. Phillips, Dean of UVM's

Division of Continuing Education. A discussion was held with Dr. Harry

Thompson, Adjunct Faculty

Member at UVM in Rochester and Director of Urban Education Planning Center, and College of Education

and Karen Morris concerning the opportunities for an internship in an urban setting in Rochester, New York. Miss Scheidecker and Miss Morris are currently involved in such a program.

The College of Education hopes that the Marathon Day will become an annual affair and expand to a two or more days in future years. They also hope that future Marathon Days will include any and all segments of the university community who care to participate. Hopefully through experiences of the Marathon Day, new programs and innovations in education will be initiated throughout the State and within the University.

Sisco Emphasizes Role Of Communication For SA

Bill Sisco was recently elected to the post of the President of the Student Association. The following are responses that he made to questions concerning his new position.

In response to the question of what plans he had as President to work with the other student governments, namely, Panhellenic Council, Inter-Faternity Forum and Inter Residence Association.

Sisco mentioned that he would put his "emphasis on lateral communication and decision making as the policy with cooperation on the executive aspect of implementing the legislation of the student senate."

Sisco said that the main problems on this campus are interest and awareness. In this connection he alluded to "information flow, overlapping of personnel and projects, undefined objectives and long range planning. He said that the projects he has planned for next year will aim to "alleviate the problems created by the above."

"Final 58"

At WRUV

What is the Final 58? Each year WRUV-AM, the campus radio station located in the Pomeroy Hall Annex, ends their year of broadcasting by doing a special 58 hour show. This year the event will begin at 6 am Saturday, May 6 and will run through till 4 pm Monday, May 8.

Bill Gordon, an announcer at the station, will be having the final 58 hours singlehandedly. Every 5.8 hours he will be giving away stacks of $8.45's, so stay tuned for the fun. That's 58.0 on your dial for the Final 58.

look to the lowlight which blankets the earth with days of regret and subtleties dispersed reach to the sunlight from the bottom of the river and follow me homeward for now is forever

Bob Bradley

Responding to the situation of a seeming development on this campus of an anti-politics sentiment as shown by the low turnout at the SA Presidential Election, SA Constitution Referendum and the anti-war demonstrations held recently, Sisco said, "The sentiment of the students on this campus are legitimate in their origin; however, it is my ambition to have these sentiments founded intelligently through as much information as I am able to furnish the student population. Ignorance of a situation should not be the keystone of any sentiment."

He offered the following response to the question of the SA's position toward the Michael Parenti case and the action of the SA Senate last week defeating the motion to give $1200 to the Michael Parenti Defense Fund: "As SA President I shall execute the legislation of the SA Senate and the express will of the student community. As with any other citizen of the SA I shall instruct my representative senator as to my desires as an individual, but as SA President I refuse to dictate to the students or the Senate."

Summer Session Offers Special Programs

Vermont. This study is limited to thirty elementary and secondary teachers.

Another special program offered is a Living and Learning, Experimental Program. The program, June 19-30, will be held in the Green Mountains at the base of Camel's Hump and will combine group process techniques, outdoor survival techniques and academic components. Students will be requested to complete selected readings prior to the first class. For further information interested people should write to Living and Learning Experiences, Continuing Education, University of Vermont. Applications for this special program have to be in before June 1.

For the first time this summer, qualified high school students entering their Junior and Senior years may enroll in regularly scheduled undergraduate classes and earn credit at the University of Vermont. There will be two special dorms set aside for these students. There will also be a special High School Music Session. This program will afford an unusual opportunity for high school students to combine stimulating musical experience with pleasurable university campus living.

This is only a sampling of all the programs to be offered this summer at the University. Students requiring more information should write to the Office of Continuing Education, University of Vermont or stop into Room 357, Waterman Building. Applicants are encouraged to register by mail to insure a place in the desired courses.

Pre-registration materials must be postmarked no later than June 16. In person registration will be held on June 26 and July 5.

Extracurricular activities planned for the summer will include visiting lectures, as well as faculty and local persons, to speak on various aspects of American Society. There will be Arts and Crafts exhibits and possibly a photography contest. There may also be a cafe on the University Green. Many of these plans are still not entirely formulated.

The University of Vermont Lane Series honored its outgoing student officers and welcomed new officers at the annual Lane Committee banquet Sunday (April 30) at the Sheraton Motel Inn.

Album Review:

New Allman Brothers Album Shows Dedicated, Creative Musicianship

by Doug Collette
EAT A PEACH The Allman Brothers Band (Capricorn 20P 0102)

Duane Allman's death late last October was an ill-timed misfortune to say the least.

The band he and his brother, Gregg organized had achieved nearly unanimous praise from critics and fellow musicians alike and was on the threshold of their last album. The Allman Brothers Band at Fillmore East has sold a million dollars worth of records.

As a result of the tragedy, the group was at a temporary halt since their music would have to be restructured to compensate for the loss of Duane's explosive slide and lead guitar. However, the resources of the band are plentiful even without Duane and in concert they continued to get people stompin' in ecstasy.

The news of a new two-record album including studio and live performances was good news indeed and the thought of extended versions of things like "In My Mind" and "Ain't My Cross to Bear" made my mouth water. But the best word for any upcoming LP, whoever it may be, is "no expectations," especially in a fragile situation such as this one, since Eat A Peach would be the band's opportunity to not only solidify their hold on a wide audience, but to assert themselves as five-man musical unit.

Wisely enough, on side one the Allmans do just that. For "Les Bèrrs in A Minor," Dicky Betts seems to have taken some ideas from during live jams to construct a coherent composition, the arrangement of which leaves plenty of room for each member of the group to work: imagine what they can do with this in concert. Like Dicky, Gregg Allman has a knack for building songs on catchy blues-oriented riffs and "Ain't Wasting Time No More" and "Meats" are just as infectious as his earlier tunes besides being more subtly attractive and mature. Dicky isn't the master slide guitarist Duane was, but the restraint he displays on "Time" is one of the outstanding features of the performance and reassures us that, in his own way, Dicky will be able to fill the void left by his late sidekick. Although the lyrics of the mellow "Meats" tell the universal tale of the rock and roll musician on the road, I can't avoid the feeling that, at least in part, it's Gregg's tribute to his brother.

Gregg's piano and organ take a more up-front role in the new material which is only natural, since with just a single guitar, his instruments won't be used so much solely for rhythm. In addition, the group is learning to make use of the studio as they skillfully achieve a fuller sound by overdubbing.

Nearly all of which is also true of the three cuts recorded last fall as a six-man band. "Stand Back" has the same kind of herky-jerky rhythm as "Leave My Blues At Home," but while that track from Idlewild South is the only cut on either studio album to not quite make it, this funky thing is joyously danceable. Dicky's

"Blue Sky" is pure and country-sweet and "Little Martha," an acoustic duet by Duane and Dicky, proves that Nashville cats aren't the only ones who can play clean as country water. And these two tunes, least much of their beauty by the Allman-Betts double-barreled guitars, along with "Meats," are three of the downright prettiest songs I've heard in many a month.

The remainder of the album was recorded live at the Fillmore and it's in this context that the Allmans can, for my money, surpass any rock and roll band performing today (Yes, no ifs ands or buts. Even the Dead). The Allmans pick you up and carry you along on their music and though the ride is sometimes rough, it's nevertheless thoroughly exhilarating because the boys know the road and their vehicle. When the ride is over, they usually let you off gently, but never with more than the solid jolt that makes you feel alive.

Two blues by Sonny Boy Williamson and Buddy Waters show the band being concise and disciplined. Dicky Betts' solo on "One Way Out" deserves appreciation and praise almost as much for what he leaves out as for what he plays. Gregg's chuckle near the end is a good example of why his voice ought to be rated 'X' sometimes. "Trouble No More" isn't much different from the Allmans' studio version, which is only further proof of how tight they can be. Furthermore, it gives some indication of how strong is their identity as a band: if I didn't know any better, I'd swear Gregg or Dicky wrote the song and the arrangement makes use of the kind of slashing riff that marks many of their tunes. Duane is at his best here as his screaming licks fill the spaces around his brother's vocal; elsewhere on Eat A Peach it's Duane's playing that drives the band to many of the lofty peaks they reach.

"Mountain Jam" is the absolute killer though. Based on Donovan's "First There Is A Mountain" (although the theme is a bit difficult to recognize), the opening will be familiar to you as the fade-out of "Whipping Post" from the live album; it's a four-decade deluxe in which each member of the band gets a chance to solo. Duane and Dicky lead the pack, of course, smokin' it up on those guitar dialogues we'll miss so much, working so smoothly alone or in tandem. Gregg confines himself as usual to lush chords of foundation, stepping out only briefly for a sly solo. On records in the past, the two drummers weren't let go except for tantalizingly brief passages, but here Butch Trucks and Jai Johanny Johanson let loose with a barrage of rhythm that'll nearly tear your head off; they play drums much like Duane and Dicky play their guitars, often functioning as one but most of the time in a complementary fashion that leaves not a single hole in what can truthfully be described as a wave of sound. Basant Berry Oakley returns after the drum solo for a short workout in that nimble style of his—the J. Gels rhythm section may provide a punch in the stomach, but Berry and those two drummers give a walloping kick in the gut, even while preserving the fluidity of the music.

"Mountain Jam" isn't a collection of individual solos though; on the contrary, it's a remarkably cohesive piece which expresses a full range of moods through an expert use of dynamics: it's stimulating, dreamy, vicious, gentle, etc., etc. No music can truly be expressed in words because verbal language can't convey a certain magic that makes music so evocative. The best you can do is try to choose the images that lead to the appropriate associations in the reader's mind. For "Mountain Jam," I can't do even that unless I write an entire essay on it and even then I don't think I could do justice to it.

It goes on for thirty-five minutes in which the Allmans never once overextend themselves. Which isn't to say they don't take chances, because they do in abandoning the skeletal theme they start with and going free-form most of the time. If that weren't amazing enough, they don't repeat themselves or wander aimlessly: fresh ideas come thick and fast and each one is explored with delicacy and taste, resulting in an astounding display of consummate musicianship, the epitome of what the Allmans would call "hittin' the note."

Probably more than I like to admit, my opinions about rock and roll are shaped by what other people say and write. For a very long time, I regarded the Grateful Dead as America's finest band and though I'm not denying their unquestionable talent, I do think their reputation is based very much (maybe too much) on their unique image-mystique.

But after listening to Eat A Peach and the other three Allman Brothers LP's, I've got to conclude that there is not a rock and roll band in the world, with the exception of the Who (and I'm even debating that point) that can top the Allman Brothers Band. Their dedication to their music is equaled only by a tremendous creative intuition that has afforded me some of the most satisfying listening I've ever experienced.

Several weeks ago, a letter to the papers this column appears in noted the problems involving homosexuality in the military. I checked 700 conscripts that had to do with homosexuality, by a man who was not concerned about but wanted advice about the draft. I reply from me, which he received. I from readers for the subject matter explanation for my lack of response. But, I wondered why I had not. Are homosexually active readers not sexual preference, or are their concerns anyone else's? Perhaps it took a letter too. Following Name Withheld's letter communications having to do with The picture was brightening. The "the closest after all. The stereotypical homosexuality are such that it seemed a separate column to the subject answering questions.

The view of the person who on activities is a distorted one. The view society in general, which considers the aberrant. And, the view is distorted in homosexual activities who often everywhere and sometimes succeeds in differences between themselves and activity) rather than focusing on the about everything except sexual activity great, that we even label people he defines them completely, rather the homosexual activities. A person may heterosexual acts and one homosexual homosexual, yet one heterosexual.

homosexuality is considered in second. After more than 20 years, "Attitudework," "Sexual Behavior in the '80s" companion volume on the human for most accurate data on homosexuality enlightened discussions of the subject important lesson to be learned from appreciated and/or talked about by so-called straights. Homosexuality absolutely present or absent in the women who engage in homosexual sexual life (four per cent of white men who have been, will be or are active in heterosexual relationships.

Thus, while Withheld accurately quoted that 37 per cent of white men have a to orgasm between adolescents and many of these experiences have been have persisted over more than a three-many occurred during adolescence quite commonplace. The suggestion are homosexual (whatever that means of the situation I wouldn't even use many of the people who condemn have engaged in such activities recognize gradations, no matter what.

Gay issues are hard to define from view. Most people who are defined, emotionally ill, probably no heterosexual. Nor are they especially heterosexual molesting of small children homosexual molesting, and I am not that homosexually active people are equal pumbers of heterosexually active problems of the homosexual are care from unprejudiced physicians, regardless of the partners' sexes, as before, these are usually nothing more used.

The major problems faced by the person are social. Most people who homosexually have been made unhappy some time. The stigma, isolation, difficulty (at least for the man) in a relationship, especially as he ages, seem that much of the aforementioned loosened if society's views were different confuse the description of behavior person.

In the midst of all this, the homosexual specifically be mentioned. For should always dealt more kindly with the counterpart: One view might be that from sexism as the woman was not a concern. I think many homosexually way and this explains their greater all Lib movement than to: Gay Lib.

The society we live in is a reality, to modification. Its prejudices against irrational though it may be, are very part and parcel of our Judeo-Christian necessary to fight for more rational with sexual behavior. It is irresponsible commitment to homosexual activity choice and when such a commitment accompanied by considerable grief rights of people engaging in homosexual worthy of defense as are the rights end, Gay Liberation serves an invaluable extent that Gay Lib focuses on homosexually active person, and lib Gay Lib defeats itself. To turn the Lib: "We are your brothers and sisters do not." Clearly, Gay Lib needs more QUESTION: I was told that studies that contain hexachlorophene cause sounds "fantastic to me. Ibs there there any known adverse effects hexachlorophene?

ANSWER: Hexachlorophene is a commonly found in many soaps recently. The rationale for its use is growth of skin bacteria, perspiration, diminished, since the latter is disapproved.

In some recent experiments, babies high concentrations of hexachlorophene material was absorbed through their skin. There have also been some infants with skin infections exposed to concentrations and amounts of hexachlorophene.

the doctor's bag

Box 974, East Lansing, MI 48823

Several weeks ago, a letter to the editor of one of the papers this column appears in noted that I had not dealt with problems involving homosexuality in this column. The writer was correct. I checked 700 consecutive letters and found one that had to do with homosexuality. That letter was written by a man who was not concerned about his sexual behavior but wanted advice about the draft. He requested a personal reply from me, which he received. Dependent upon letters from readers for the subject matter in this column, the explanation for my lack of response to gay issues seemed clear. But, I wondered why I had not received more letters. Are homosexually active readers unconcerned about their sexual preferences, or are their concerns no different than anyone else's? Perhaps it took a letter in print to break the ice. Following Name Withheld's letter, I received a few more communications having to do with homosexual behavior. The picture was brightening. The "issue" might come out of the closet after all. The stereotyped ideas about homosexuality as much that it seemed worthwhile to devote a separate column to the subject initially, rather than answering questions.

The view of the person who engages in homosexual activities is a distorted one. The view is distorted by our society in general, which considers homosexual behavior as aberrant. And, the view is distorted by the person engaging in homosexual activities who often sees homosexuality everywhere and sometimes succeeds in pointing out the small differences between themselves and others, (merely sexual activity) rather than focusing on the vast similarities (just about everything except sexual activity). The distortion is so great, that we even label people homosexuals, as if that defines them completely, rather than talk about their homosexual activities. A person may engage in hundreds of heterosexual acts and one homosexual act and be labeled homosexual, yet one heterosexual act among as many homosexual acts is considered an accident of sorts.

After more than 20 years, Alfred Kinsey's monumental work, "Sexual Behavior in the Human Male" and the companion volume on the human female, still provides the most accurate data on homosexuality and one of the most enlightened discussions of the subject available. However, an important lesson to be learned from that study is still not appreciated and/or talked about by Gay Liberation or the so-called straights. Homosexuality is not something absolutely present or absent in the vast majority of men and women who engage in homosexual activities. And, few men engage in exclusively homosexual activities throughout their adult life (four per cent of white men). The majority of men who have been, will be or are active homosexuals are also active in heterosexual relationships.

Thus, while Withheld accurately quoted Kinsey by saying that 37 per cent of white men have a homosexual experience to orgasm between adolescence and advanced adulthood, many of these experiences have been isolated incidents, few have persisted over more than a three-year period, and a great many occurred during adolescence when such activities are quite commonplace. The suggestion that all of these people are homosexuals (whatever that means) is absurd. The irony of the situation (I wouldn't even use the word humor) is that many of the people who condemn homosexual activity must have engaged in such activities themselves. We fail to recognize gradations, no matter where we stand on the scale.

Gay issues are hard to define from my medical point of view. Most people who are defined as homosexuals are not emotionally ill, probably no more than so-called heterosexuals. Nor are they especially dangerous. Far more heterosexual molesting of small children goes on than does homosexual molesting, and I am not aware of any evidence that homosexually active people seduce more children than equal numbers of heterosexually active people. The medical problems of the homosexual are primarily ones of seeking care from unprejudiced physicians, rather than uniqueness of diseases. Oral sex and anal intercourse have the same hazards regardless of the partners' sexes, and as I have indicated before, these are usually nothing much if common sense is used.

The major problems faced by the homosexually active person are social. Most people who have been or are active homosexually have been made unhappy by their activity at some time. The stigma, isolation, fear of exposure and the difficulty (at least for the man) in maintaining an ongoing relationship, especially as he ages, takes its toll. It would seem that much of the aforementioned grief would be lessened if society's views were different and if we ceased to confuse the description of behavior with the identity of a person.

In the midst of all this, the homosexually active woman should specifically be mentioned. For many reasons, society has always dealt more kindly with her than with her male counterpart. One view might be that the kindness stemmed from sexism as the woman was not seen as being worthy of concern. I think many homosexually active women feel this way and this explains their greater allegiance to the Women's Lib movement than to Gay Lib.

The society we live in is a reality, one that is very resistant to modification. Its prejudices against homosexual activity, irrational though it may be, are very long standing and are part and parcel of our Judeo-Christian ethic. While it is necessary to fight for more rational approaches in dealing with sexual behavior, it is irresponsible to encourage a commitment to homosexual activities when a person has a choice and when such a commitment is bound to be accompanied by considerable grief and unhappiness. The rights of people engaging in homosexual activities are as worthy of defense as are the rights of anyone else; to this end, Gay Liberation serves an invaluable role. But, to the extent that Gay Lib focuses on the differences of the homosexually active person, and lobbies for homosexuality, Gay Lib defeats itself. To turn the challenge back to Gay Lib: "We are your brothers and sisters, whether you like us or not." Clearly, Gay Lib needs more so-called heterosexuals.

QUESTION: I was told that studies have indicated that some that contain hexachlorophene cause brain lesions. That sounds fantastic to me. Has there been such a study? Are there any known adverse effects from the use of hexachlorophene?

ANSWER: Hexachlorophene is an antibacterial agent commonly found in many soaps and deodorants until recently. The rationale for its use was that by slowing the growth of skin bacteria, perspiration odor would be diminished, since the latter is due to bacterial action on sweat.

In some recent experiments, baby rats were exposed to high concentrations of hexachlorophene and enough of the material was absorbed through the skin to cause brain damage. There have also been some isolated cases of human infants with skin infections exposed to unusually high concentrations and amounts of hexachlorophene developing symptoms suggestive of poisoning. In one case death occurred.

The approach that was taken was the banning of hexachlorophene from a large variety of products and severe restriction of its use in newborn nurseries. For the last couple of months, hexachlorophene has been banned from soaps and deodorants, where they probably never did much good, but where they also probably never did any harm. In hospitals hexachlorophene has continued to be used by hospital personnel to wash their hands before surgery and before handling newborns. In the very short period of time since the restrictions on hospital use went into effect, numerous serious outbreaks of skin infections in nurseries have been reported. The outbreaks have necessitated a review of the entire situation.

Within the last few weeks, new guidelines for the use of this substance have been drawn up. Babies may be bathed with hexachlorophene in low concentrations, if they are carefully rinsed off. The situation is now much as it was before the fuss started. Unless a baby has skin infections, there is probably no reason to use hexachlorophene at home, where exposure to infection is much less than in a hospital. The problem under discussion typifies the difficulties of making rational decisions in medical treatment. The question is: Is more harm done by the mandated elimination of a product based on evidence of questionable applicability than is done by the occasional misuse of the product? The elimination of hexachlorophene from the newborn nursery may have been a literal example of throwing out the baby with the bath water.

THE INSIDER

by Bill Bode

On Saturday, April 29th, the UVM Track Cats traveled to Orono for a dual meet with the Bears of the University of Maine. We lost (consider it an upset) by 36 points with the final score being 95 to 59. Not only that, we also had traveling difficulties. Upon stopping in Lancaster New Hampshire for a little nourishment, we had trouble starting one of the vans; however that was soon remedied and we were back on our way.

Despite the loss, we managed to set a new university record in the mile relay; Mike Berry, Bill Bode, Tom Harrington and Frank O'Brien ran to a new mark of 3:28.3 minutes beating the old record of 3:30.1 set back in 1968 by Jim Dedman and friends. There were also other fine performances such as Devan Craig's javelin throw of 205 feet which picked up an easy first for Vermont.

On Thursday, two Catamount relay teams consisting of O'Brien, Berry, Harrington, Arnold, Bird, and Geronimo travel with head coach Bill Nedde to Quantico Va. where they will compete in the prestigious Quantico Relays.

didn't fit their car, they were lucky to find a resident in the neighborhood who had the proper equipment to make the repair. Several minutes later, the dog jumped from the car which had stopped at the side of the road while the occupants got information from a historical marker. During the same stop, one of the team members was accused of desecrating public property by one of the townspeople in Richmond. In actuality, he was only consulting the number of stars on the out-dated American flag which had been placed in the ground at the marker. Later in the rally, the team was stopped and questioned by two police officers who made comments about the numbers painted on the sides of the car. Finding no grounds for legal action, both officers released the car and allowed it to continue on its improbable path to victory.

On the basis of these several setbacks, the winners were understandably amazed when notified of their victory. To be certain, the raw scores of all the contestants were re-evaluated by rally officials, with the same results. In an informal ceremony after the re-count had been taken, the winners were awarded the $25 cash prize.

When promoters of the rally, Bob Lanza and Tom Tashjian, were asked about the success of the rally, they stated that everything had gone quite well, particularly since this was their first attempt at staging an event of this kind. They emphasized the fact that the whole idea of the event was to have fun while introducing as many people as possible to the sport of road rallying. While they said they had several complaints from "professional" people with sophisticated calculating devices, it seemed that most people involved enjoyed themselves, and many stated that they would be interested in doing it again.

At the present time, some long-range plans have been made to hold the second annual Maxwell Silverhammer event at the same time next year, as well as another rally event in the fall. No specific dates have been announced at the present time. For those teams in this year's event who didn't see the final standings, a

Alpine and Nordic Captains Named

Standard skiers, David Dodge (St. Johnsbury, Vt.), Wayne Wright (Wilmington, N.Y.) and Martin Grimnes (Oslo, Norway), have been named the alpine (Dodge and Wright) and nordic (Grimnes) captains of the University of Vermont ski team. It was announced today (April 27) by Athletic Director J. Edward Donnelly.

Dodge, only a freshman, proved to be one of the top alpiners in the East, winning the special slalom at the Williams Carnival in near-blizzard conditions. Wright, also a freshman, developed into one of the top young collegiate skiers in the country. He was recently Grimnes, one of the two top Norwegian jumpers on the Catamount squad, has been a consistent performer for the past two years, finishing 5th in the NCAA's two years ago, his freshman year. He also served as the nordic captain this past winter and was also named an honorable mention choice on the EISA team.

Also announced this week was the most valuable alpine and nordic performers for Vermont. Wright was the alpine MVP choice, while freshman jumper, Putter Kongell (Oslo, Norway), was named the nordic MVP.

In addition to the skiers, head coach Chip LaCase was honored after completing his first year as head coach, being named the new president of the EISA, succeeding Middlebury's John Bower.

is particularly impressive with three-year veteran Rostowsky leading the way. Joining Rostowsky are outside linebackers Doug Bull, Stu Jones and Johnny Thompson.

"Although we lack depth in many areas on defense, our first unit has been awesome at times. With some freshman and junior college help this fall, we could become a serious challenger to Connecticut and Massachusetts, the defending Yankee Conference champions," added Scannella.

Vermont closes out its spring sessions with its second annual varsity alumni game, May 6, at Centennial Field, beginning at 2 p.m. The alumni have recruited the services of over 50 past graders, including some players that have been out of school for over a decade.

U.V.M. SPORTS

From The Editor

by Tom Farris

That time of the year has come that most of us on the staff have been looking forward to since the day after our first issue, i.e. the last issue for this year. Those of you who have never worked on a student paper before will never know the joy of coming in on layout night only to realize you have nothing to put out. The panic which ensues is worth watching as one certain editor madly calls up writers to fill up the sports page.

The purpose of this short editorial is to thank those dedicated fools for helping me out.

The first thanks go to Dave Clark. The hockey fans who read the Cynic will long remember Dave for his witty and oft times poignant remarks about the team and the individuals on the team. Dave was the one person I could turn to for moral support and a three page article on the hockey team. Even when the hockey season was over he continued to write about the sport. That's what true dedication and a knife in a persons back can accomplish.

Sam Simmons also deserves my thanks for coming through for me. I could count on him to write an Insider column at least every week.

UVM skiing was taken care of by Peter Hicks, who not only skis and plays football well but can also write well.

And last but not last is Ken Whittaker. Ken was the editor for the past year and a half and during that time we were good friends. Then a funny thing happened at the beginning of this semester, he hooked me into his job. Since then he's continued to write for me, mostly zeroing in on the basketball scene. At times he left sports to focus his attention on the lighter sides of life as the writer of WHIT'S WIT. It's a pity his eyesight is as bad as his wit. I must thank him for helping with my task of putting out the page for without him it probably wouldn't have gotten done.

These are just a few of the people who have written for me this past semester. Others include Ann Dietz, Gretchen Von Berg, Bill Bode, and the mysterious S.G.T. Callihan. These people also deserve my thanks.

Varsity Alumni Game This Saturday

With the second annual University of Vermont varsity-alumni football game but two days away, alumni-coaches, Rusty Brink and Bobby Mitchell, have announced that 14 former Catamount gridgers have been added to the squad for the May 6 tilt at Centennial Field.

The game, sponsored by the University's Centennial Club, is scheduled for 2 p.m.

With the addition of the 14 new players, the alumni squad has increased to over 50 players. The most recent additions to the squad are flankers Dennis Robinson ('71) and Phil Barner ('72); linemen Bob Stearns ('71), Harvey Bazarian ('66), Bill Bonczek ('71), Bob Murray ('66) and Bob Fiorczak ('67); open end Dave Martin ('69); defensive backs John Felcher ('72), Paul Walker ('72) and Jack Stroker ('69) and linebackers Ira Gordon ('70), Tom Dexter ('64) and Jim Kraus ('68).

Tickets for the game are currently on sale at the University's Book Store and the Roy L. Patrick Gymnasium (Room 206). Cost of the tickets are $1, with an additional $1.50 for parking at the field the day of the game. Proceeds from the game will go directly to the University's Centennial Club, an organization designed to support the University's athletic program.

In addition to the game next Saturday, the varsity-alumni committee, with Ray Pecor and Bob Cooper serving as its chairmen, have announced plans for a dinner at the Ramada Inn the night of the game. A social hour begins at 6:30 p.m., followed by the dinner at 7:30 p.m. The public is invited. Cost of the tickets are $4.

UVM Track To Go To Quantico

The University of Vermont track team will have six competitors at the Quantico Relays, Friday and Saturday, (May 5-6), including a group in the sprint and distance medleys.

Representing the Catamount trackmen will be spring competitors Frank O'Brien, David Bird, Tom Harrington and Mike Berry. Head coach Bill Nedde will also have Harrington, Berry, Don Baker and Charlie Arnold running in the distance medley.

Nedde's harriers are scheduled to leave for Quantico, Virginia, Thursday.

Injuries Plague Spring Practice

Although hampered by several injuries to key personnel, the University of Vermont spring football sessions have been very productive the last 10 days.

"It has been a very rewarding spring session thus far, despite the injuries to some of the front-liners. In fact, we have progressed further this spring than we have since I took over as head coach (1970)," said Joe Scannella. Vermont's offense and defense went head-to-head last Saturday (April 29) in the first full-fledged scrimmage since the spring drills kicked off April 17.

Offensively, Scannella has been very pleased with his quarterback corps, headed up by three-year veteran Earl Olson. It appears that with Olson and two capable back-up signal callers in senior Paul Jakubielski and sophomore Fran Baczek, Vermont will have its "most experienced and talented" group since Scannella took over the helix three years ago. Joining the quarterbacks in the backfield will be a group of rugged backs, led by Gary VanDecker (5-10, 192), Barry Vian (6-0, 210), Karlis Daukas (6-0, 206) and Craig Erickson (6-3, 220). Erickson, one of the pleasant surprises this spring, was a standout as a freshman two years ago but was not in school last year. In addition to these backs, Scannella will have All-Yankee Conference running back Steve Coon (6-1, 205) returning to school. "With a contingent of backs like that, I can't help but be optimistic about our offensive potential," Scannella said.

Ready to aid the offensive potency will be one of the best sets of receivers in the Yankee Conference, led by returning veterans Dan Leber, Peter Hicks (missing practice this spring because of a knee injury), Billy Looker, Dave McCoullum, junior college transfer, Tony Jones and All-Yankee Conference tight end Tim Sullivan.

The critical area still appears to be the offensive line, even though it is a veteran group returning. "I've been very impressed with the offensive line and its steady improvement. Carl (Falivene - offensive line coach) has done a great job with them," remarked Scannella. Standouts include tackles Mark Rowse and Peter Trono (All-Yankee Conference as a sophomore), guard Mike Lucio and centers Mike Prondecki, Bob Weiler and Gay Reed. "We are very strong at center and if the tackle and guard positions continue to improve, we'll have a sound offensive ball club," said the third-year head coach. Defensively, Vermont has been most impressive. They are led by co-captains Wayne Bulman (defensive end) and Rich Rostowsky (linebacker). "Although our front-line defense has been exceptionally strong, we are lacking depth at several key areas, especially at end and in the secondary," said Scannella.

Up front, the Cats are led by ends Steve Lippe and Bulman, with John Hemphill, Gary Holtz, Mike Johns and Pat Dwyer carrying the load in the middle. The linebacking corps

Road Rally A Success

by Richard Padrick

Sunny skies and temperatures in the sixties provided a perfect setting for the first annual Maxwell Silverhammer Memorial Cannon-Ball Rally, held last Saturday from UVM's Gutterston Fieldhouse. The field of entries numbered forty-nine, with a variety of makes and models from several Volkswagen 10 to a 2-28 Camaro. The winner was the Ford Torino entry from Big Brown, which was driven by Mark Teirstein and navigated by Pat Sorenson. Passengers in the car included Gary Straw and Bryan Hemley, as well as Pandy, the team's canine mascot. Last place went to Stanley Zanchi and Scott Stanwyck from Davis 2nd.

With car number one leaving the starting area at 10:00 and entries leaving at two-minute intervals after that, the final car didn't leave until nearly noon. Participants' cars could be recognized easily, with large white-painted numbers on their side doors, as they travelled around the Burlington area, puzzling over some rather ambiguous directions near the beginning of the rally. All teams did quite well, however, as all but one of the starters managed to find the first checkpoint, located east of Nineburg. While few of the elapsed times to this point resembled closely the ideal time, most of the inexperienced rallyists had gotten the idea of navigation and times between checkpoints one and two showed improvement over the previous results.

Over the second half of the course, fatigue and errors in calculation began taking their toll, as more and more entries quit the course and headed back to Burlington. Nine of the original group of entries failed to reach the finish area at the state fishing access to Shelburne Pond. Those who did complete the course found plenty of welcome refreshment in the form of two ice-cold kegs of beer. Immediate results of the rally were not available at Shelburne, as there was a large amount of computation involved in tabulation of both the elapsed times and the answers to questions asked of the rallyists as they proceeded along the course. Each minute early or late to a checkpoint resulted in one penalty point, while incorrect answers to the written questions cost five points each.

Later Saturday evening a decision was made by the rally officials, when they announced Big Brown as the winning team, with a score of 66 points. Second place finishers were Hoby Hartman and Gerry Gomez, in car number 36. They finished with 95 pts, followed by car number 33, with 98 points.

A check with the winning team revealed that their victory didn't come easily. Their problems started with a flat tire caused by a spin out on one of the course's dirt roads. After finding that their luck

Athletic Awards Presented

Four athletic awards highlighted the 7th annual University of Vermont Senior Lettermen's Dinner at the Burlington Country Club, April 27.

The dinner, designed to honor the senior athletes at the University, is annually sponsored by the University's Centennial Club. Over 35 seniors attended the dinner.

The four recipients follows: The Russell O. Sunderland Memorial Trophy - To Sam Simmons of Wynnewood, Pa. Simmons was a standout forward on the hockey team. The Sunderland Trophy is presented to the senior who has "exemplified those qualities of character, leadership and persistence in overcoming obstacles during his college career."

The Wesson Athletic Prize - To Ray Ortiz of Union City, N.J. Ortiz was the captain and top scorer on the basketball team. The Wesson Prize is for the senior who has "maintained the highest standard of academic scholarship and athletic attainment."

The Semans Trophy - To Ted Yeates of Dorval, Que. Yeates, the captain and All-American defenseman on the hockey team, won this award for his "outstanding qualities of leadership, loyalty and service to the University, active participation in athletics and winning the respect and regard of his fellow students."

The Athletic Council Managerial Prize - To John Stowell of Rutland, Vt., who has served as the manager of the track and swim teams during his four years at Vermont. The Prize is presented annually to the varsity manager who has shown the "greatest proficiency in performing the work of his office."

If you think Kodak is just pretty pictures, you ought to have your chest examined.

When a chest x-ray shows that you have a potential killer like TB or cancer, it's not a pretty picture. But it's an important picture because it can help the doctor detect and catch the killer in time.

When doctors are out to catch these potential killers, they want the sharpest, clearest x-ray films they can get. And that's why people at Kodak spend so many hours creating new and better x-ray film equipment. Already, the results include convenience for the patient, economy for the hospital, an even more useful tool for the radiologist—and, most important, reduced radiation exposure.

Researching and creating better x-ray films is good for our business, which is why we went into them in the first place. But it does our society good, too—which isn't a bad feeling. After all, our business depends on our society—so we care what happens to it.

First Greek Week At UVM In Three Years

The first Greek Week at UVM in three years will be held from September 19 through 24. Fraternity Forum and Panhellenic Council have scheduled a week of events open to all students, culminating on the weekend of September 22, 23 and 24.

On Tuesday evening at 7:30 President Andrews will deliver an address in 235 Life Sciences Hall. This event is being co-sponsored by the Greek Week Committee and the Vermont Cynic. Admission is free. On Wednesday evening the fraternities will be holding rush parties for those girls who have elected to register for rush. The last day for registration is September 19. Sorority rush will continue on Thursday evenings.

On Friday night there will be several fraternity parties throughout the campus area.

next week's Cynic for details). The highlight of the weekend activities will be the famous Greek Games, where teams from fraternities and sororities will compete in several events. There will be a fire-up at Lambda Iota at 12 Noon on Saturday, and at approximately 1:30 PM the games will commence with a relay race. The route covered will be as follows: from Lambda Iota, down Pearl Street to South Williams and College Streets (Sigma Phi Alpha), up Maple Street to South Prospect, down South Prospect to Pi Beta Phi, where the finish line will be. The unusual aspect of this relay race is that each runner has to chug one beer and carry one more to the next runner who must chug it and carry one more, etc. After the conclusion of the relay race the games will move across the street from Pi Phi to the lawn in front of Southwick. The first event on the lawn will be a tug-of-war in both fraternity and sorority divisions. Other featured events for the fraternities will be a pie-eating contest, three-legged race, bicycle relay race and the famed Greek Chariot Race. Sororities will field teams in an egg-relay, three-legged race, and the bicycle relay.

Greek Week has been organized by a joint Fraternity Forum-Panhellenic Committee under the chairmanship of Leslie Bieber. She stated that, "Greek Week will be a tremendous boon to both the Greek System and the entire UVM campus. We hope the

by Steven Rice

Like returning soldiers reeling up for the coming academic year, members of the University of Vermont's faculty assembled for its first Faculty Senate meeting Tuesday at Carpenter Auditorium in the Gibbon Medical Building located near Converse Hall here.

The meeting was called to order by the senate's new chairman, Dr. Ralph Orth, who will be serving the last term year of Dr. William White, who resigned this summer after serving two years of a three year term.

Orth had previously served as vice chairman. That position was filled by Gladys Jameson, Tuesday, when she won election to the post over John J. McCormick. Ms. Jameson is a professor of home economics in the College of Agriculture. McCormick is an associate professor of pharmacology.

Orth paid tribute to White in his preliminary remarks to the Senate. The new chairman also made a plea to his colleagues to devote their energies to matters of substance that affect the university community.

Highlighting the two hour meeting was an address by university president - Dr. Edward Andrews. The bulk of his talk centered on what he would like to see the Senate do, and suggested items that could be placed on its agenda for the coming year. They included:

1. The matter of the Faculty Senate itself. The president said it has the capacity to become influential and powerful. He, echoing Orth, suggested that the faculty devote more time and energy on questions of substance. He expressed confidence in the workings of the senate's three policy committees: Financial, Academic, and Administrative, and reported a healthy relationship now existed among the committees and the University's administration.
2. Faculty Moral. Andrews said he has been concerned with this problem for a number of years, and claimed low moral among university faculty is a "national phenomenon, not a local one." He suggested ideas that could help: A) an increase in faculty salaries by Fiscal year 1974, perhaps as much as 5 to 6 percent; B) improve the flow of communication to work closely with committees.

Again, at this point, Andrews, as he was to do throughout his remarks, said that despite low faculty morale, he was impressed by the performance of UVM's professors.

3. A need for collegiate and department reorganization. A special task force, he hopes, will be appointed to move "rapidly" on this, the president envisions a Dec. 1 deadline on the task force's efforts.
4. He cited the College of Technology as one department that could be effected by reorganization, and remarked "two or three" other departments, now in "limbo," that faced the same possibility. He did not name those departments.
5. Dr. Andrews announced that there will be no replacement for Melvin Dyson, who was financial vice president last year. However, the president feels the need of a fourth person in the university's administration, and feels that part of the money for this new officer will come from what was paid to Dyson.

Andrews also announced that a committee, spearheaded by John Weiger, will look for a replacement of Roland D. Patzer, who resigned his post of Dean of Students during the summer.

President Andrews also

They Did It Again !

Housing Shortage Overcrowds Dorms

by Steven C. Rice

One student travelled all the way from St. Louis, Missouri to come to the University of Vermont; another came from Rutland, Vermont. Both are in a predicament.

They are two of 310 freshmen who found themselves in temporary housing upon arrival here. They are a part of an unexpected overcrowding dilemma which surprised university officials during the summer when it was learned that many more residence hall students were returning to their dormitories to live, a 12% increase over last year.

That percentage represents about 350 upperclassmen that university leaders thought would be living off-campus.

Because of this, the university has 310 students more than anticipated for its residence halls, which, under normal occupancy, house 3232.

Affected are 235 women and 75 men. Most are living in tripled-room assignments; others are living in dormitory lounges. All are waiting for permanent housing, though in some instances, not too anxiously.

When this appears, a bedcheck will have been conducted to determine how many students, who have permanent housing, didn't return. Upon completion of this, some affected by overcrowding will be assigned a permanent room.

In determining who would receive temporary housing, Dr. Keith Miser, assistant dean of students and residence hall director, randomly chose every seventh woman and every fifteenth man from the freshman class. They were then immediately notified "in August."

Tripled-rooms are in Simpson, Christie, Wright, and Patterson Halls. Lounges, housing upwards to four, include the same plus Wing, Davis, and Wilkes Halls.

According to Dr. Miser, every attempt is being made to return UVM halls to normal occupancy as soon as possible. In an apparent act of conciliation, the dean announced last Thursday that if there are students living in tripled-rooms after Oct. 16, six weeks into the semester, they will receive a $67.00 refund from their room-board payment.

Burgess Hall, located near the Mary Fletcher Hospital, was leased to the university to house freshmen women. Eighty-four are living there.

Also, space was leased in Jeanne Mance, located on Pearl Street.

Dr. Miser claimed that everyone affected was cooperating fine. He also explained that residence halls are funded with federal monies plus the room-board payment of every student. He noted that UVM has the second lowest room-board charge, $440, of northeastern colleges, with Trinity College on Pearl Street being first.

One out-of-state student, affected by overcrowding, lives in Patterson Hall. She's the one from St. Louis, Mo. One of her roommates is from Rutland, Vt. They are happy, and claim it will be difficult for them to split if permanent housing is found. Right now, they desire, like others in the same situation, another dresser and desk. Three beds and a roof over their heads is fine, but two closets, two dressers, and two desks, don't equal three of each.

Another woman, in a tripled-room, notes privacy is hard enough with just one roommate, but borders on absurdity when there are two roommates. Though everyone is getting along fine now, she wonders what will happen when one decides to have an overnight guest.

All the freshmen, now overcrowded, wonder why so many upperclassmen returned. Perhaps, Dr. Miser has the answer when he remarks residence halls can be a fine place to live, now that they have 24-hour patrollers, drinking privileges, an active Inter-Residence Association program of dances and films.

In his remarks with this writer last Thursday, the residence hall director said, "We may have oversold ourselves," which he believes is much better than underselling.

Paradoxically, at this time, last year, it was discovered that 350 students could not fit in the halls, thus, plundering the university into a million-dollar deficit, which has meant overcrowded classes and less faculty for this academic year.

Scannella Leaves UVM Football For Oakland

Scannella assumed his duties at Oakland, July 1, as an assistant coach under John Madden, the Raiders head coach. His assignments will be hunting advance game plans, working with the special units and assisting the quarterbacks.

A graduate of Lehigh University (1952), Scannella came to Vermont in 1970 following a year as an offensive coordinator with the Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League. In two years at Vermont, the Clifton N.J.

Dean Patzer Takes

native won only two games, but picked up the program and is leaving behind the best crop of performers Vermont has had in some time.

Last year, Vermont upset Connecticut, 20-7, in the opening game of the year, snapping a 13-game losing streak. Connecticut went on to tie Massachusetts for the Yankee Conference title with a 3-1 mark. Vermont ended the season with a conference mark of 2-3-0.

Prior to his short stint at Montreal, Scannella was an area scout for the N.Y. Giants (1968-69) and was the head football coach and athletic director at C. W. Post (Greenvale, N. Y.) from 1963-68. In addition to the Alouettes and C.W. Post, he served as an assistant coach at Cornell in 1962.

As an undergraduate at Lehigh, Scannella was considered one of the top quarterbacks ever to play for the Engineers and played varsity baseball for the Bethlehem, Pa. based university.

Patzer will be part of the Office of Education team that will be responsible for setting up admission guidelines for colleges and universities who will be affected by the New Higher Education Act passed several months ago. This act will set up new and additional financial aid for college students. It will also award direct grants to individual colleges. Patzer will be working with the disbursement of funds and the administration of the program.

Funding for the act has not yet passed by the Congress.

However, Dean Powers expected that the program "could be an opportunity to do something significant."

Dean Powers does not expect that the absence of Patzer will substantially affect his duties. He has been "pretty involved during the last few years" while Dean Patzer was on sabbatical two years ago and then last year when Patzer had a heart-attack. Powers has no plans to initiate any new programs due mainly to the "fiscal problems."

Strike Committee Attempts To Broaden Base

by Barbara Frankel

Students protesting against the war-occupied the ROTC building. As a result of this "symbolic act," a campus organization was formed, entitled The Committee Against the War, which, according to one of its members is "a viable group, working on some of the anti-war problems, which is striving to become a long-term, broad-based campus organization to give people the chance needed."

The Committee has been active throughout the summer in a series of demonstrations, drives and events designed to create a "much better general rapport with students, faculty and townspeople." After the ROTC demonstration, the protesters felt that their rapport with the people of Burlington had reached a low ebb. In an effort to remedy this situation, they tried to participate in a Memorial Day parade in which they thought they had a permit to march.

Burlington police claimed otherwise and the "marchers" were forced to limit their activity to speeches in City Hall Park, for which they feel they received a mixed reaction.

On July 4th, they obtained legal permission to have their own parade in Battery Park. There were several speakers including Professor Michael Parenti and a Burlington housewife who felt it her duty to talk to people about ending the war. The Committee later sponsored a talk in City Hall by Dr. Bill Zimmerman, head of an organization of doctors and nurses who want medical aid to Indo-China. Dr. Zimmerman, who had just returned from a visit to North Vietnam, is organizing a big drive in October to get medical supplies to North Vietnam. The UVM group is primarily concerned with getting children's hospitals built in North Vietnam.

The Committee Against the War was also on the UVM campus during the summer. They had a booth in Harris-Millis during Orientation and in addition to signing up approximately 40 freshmen, talked to many of the parents about their feelings on the war. Films were shown at Orientation and later in the summer at Billings Center, City Hall and the Fresh Ground Coffee House. The films included, "You Don't Have to Buy the War, Mrs. Smith," by Felix Greene and a filmed speech of Bess Myerson, Chairman of Congress Affairs of New York City and a former Miss America, denouncing the Vietnamese War.

Throughout the summer, the committee members attended regional meetings of anti-war groups. They have also been active in registering voters, although they will not actually campaign for or endorse any one candidate. At least once a month, students from the committee have been going to Montreal to attend meetings of the Association of Vietnamese Patriots of Canada, a group which supports the National Liberation Front. There have also been meetings held throughout New England for anti-war groups.

In addition to co-sponsoring a booth with the Anti-War Vermont-Vietnam group at the Champlain Valley Fair, they have worked with the Vermont Caravan, a touring group that goes to fairs. The Vermont-Vietnam group is a traveling anti-war caravan which incorporates speakers and films. They appeared at UVM on September 11 on the green and in Votey Hall.

The Committee would like to be the center of campus anti-war efforts. Their office is located in Conference Room C of Billings Center. Their main fall claim that this referendum was promised to them as one of the conditions for their leaving the ROTC building last spring. They plan a program to aid in tax resistance and have several members awaiting trial for a demonstration held last spring when fifty-three students occupied the Federal building downtown and were subsequently arrested.

next week's Cynic for details). The highlight of the weekend activities will be the famous Greek Games, where teams from fraternities and sororities will compete in several events. There will be a fire-up at Lambda Iota at 12 Noon on Saturday, and at approximately 1:30 PM the games will commence with a relay race. The route covered will be as follows: from Lambda Iota, down Pearl Street to South Williams and College Streets (Sigma Phi - Accacia); from there, across and up Main Street to Summit Street and, Maple (Delta Psi-SAE); up Maple street to South Prospect, down South Prospect to Pi Beta Phi, where the finish line will be. The unusual aspect of this relay race is that each runner has to chug one beer and carry one more to the next runner, who must chug it and carry one more, etc. After the conclusion of the relay race the games will move across the street from Pi Phi to the lawn in front of Southwick. The first event on the lawn will be a tug-of-war in both fraternity and sorority divisions. Other featured events for the fraternities will be a pie-eating contest, three-legged race, bicycle relay race and the famed Greek Chariot Race. Sororities will field teams in an egg-relay, three-legged race, and the bicycle relay.

Greek Week has been organized by a joint Fraternity Forum-Panhellenic Committee under the chairmanship of Leslie Bieber. She stated that, "Greek Week will be a tremendous boon to both the Greek System and the entire UVM campus. We invite the

Like returning soldiers reeling up for the coming academic year, members of the University of Vermont's faculty assembled for its first Faculty Senate meeting Tuesday at Carpenter Auditorium in the Gibbon Medical Building located near Converse Hall here.

The meeting was called to order by the senate's new chairman, Dr. Ralph Orth, who will be serving the last term year of Dr. William White, who resigned this summer after serving two years of a three year term.

Orth had previously served as vice chairman. That position was filled by Gladys Jameson, Tuesday, when she won election to the post over John J. McCormack. Ms. Jameson is a professor of home economics in the College of Agriculture. McCormack is an associate professor of pharmacology.

Orth paid tribute to White in his preliminary remarks to the Senate. The new chairman also made a plea to his colleagues to devote their energies to matters of substance that affect the university community.

Highlighting the two hour meeting was an address by university president Dr. Edward Andrews. The bulk of his talk centered on what he would like to see the Senate do, and suggested items that could be placed on its agenda for the coming year. They included:

1. The matter of the Faculty Senate itself. The president said it has the capacity to become influential and powerful. He, echoing Orth, suggested that the faculty devote more time and energy on questions of substance. He expressed confidence in the workings of the senate's three policy committees: Financial, Academic, and Administrative, and reported a healthy relationship now existed among the committees and the University's administration.

Andrews said he would make every attempt to keep in close contact with the senate by attending everyone of its meetings.

2. Faculty Moral. Andrews said he has been concerned with this problem for a number of years, and claimed low moral among university faculty is a "national phenomenon, not a local one." He suggested ideas that could help: A) an increase in faculty salaries by Fiscal year 1974, perhaps as much as 5 to 6 percent; B) improve the flow of communication to work closely with committees.

Again, at this point, Andrews, as he was to do throughout his remarks, said that despite low faculty morale, he was impressed by the performance of UVM's professors.

3. A need for collegiate and department reorganization. A special task force, he hopes, will be appointed to move "rapidly" on this; the president envisions a Dec. 1 deadline on the task force's efforts.

He cited the College of Technology as one department that could be effected by reorganization, and remarked "two or three" other departments, now in "limbo," that faced the same possibility. He did not name those departments.

4. Dr. Andrews announced that there will be no replacement for Melvin Dyson, who was financial vice president last year. However, the president feels the need of a fourth person in the university's administration, and feels that part of the money for this new officer will come from what was paid to Dyson.

Andrews also announced that a committee, spearheaded by John Weiger, will look for a replacement of Roland D. Patzer, who resigned his post of Dean of Students during the summer.

President Andrews also

They Did It Again !

Housing Shortage Overcrowds Dorms

by Steven C. Rice

One student travelled all the way from St. Louis, Missouri to come to the University of Vermont; another came from Rutland, Vermont. Both are in a predicament.

They are two of 310 freshmen who found themselves in temporary housing upon arrival here. They are a part of an unexpected overcrowding dilemma which surprised university officials during the summer when it was learned that many more residence hall students were returning to their dormitories to live, a 12% increase over last year.

That percentage represents about 350 upperclassmen that university leaders thought would be living off-campus.

Because of this, the university has 310 students more than anticipated for its residence halls, which, under normal occupancy, house 3232.

Affected are 235 women and 75 men. Most are living in tripled-room assignments; others are living in dormitory lounges. All are waiting for permanent housing, though in some instances, not too anxiously.

When this appears, a bedcheck will have been conducted to determine how many students, who have permanent housing, didn't return. Upon completion of this, some affected by overcrowding will be assigned a permanent room.

In determining who would receive temporary housing, Dr. Keith Miser, assistant dean of students and residence hall director, randomly chose every seventh woman and every fifteenth man from the freshman class. They were then immediately notified in August.

Tripled-rooms are in Simpson, Christie, Wright, and Patterson Halls. Lounges, housing upwards to four, include the same plus Wing, Davis, and Wilkes Halls.

According to Dr. Miser, every attempt is being made to return UVM halls to normal occupancy as soon as possible. In an apparent act of conciliation, the dean announced last Thursday that if there are students living in tripled-rooms after Oct. 16, six weeks into the semester, they will receive a $67.00 refund from their room-board payment.

Burgess Hall, located near the Mary Fletcher Hospital, was leased to the university to house freshmen women. Eighty-four are living there. Also, space was leased in Jeanne Mance, located on Pearl Street.

Dr. Miser claimed that everyone affected was cooperating fine. He also explained that residence halls are funded with federal monies plus the room-board payment of every student. He noted that UVM has the second lowest room-board charge, 2400, in northeastern colleges, with Trinity College on Pearl Street being first.

One out-of-state student, affected by overcrowding, lives in Patterson Hall. She's the one from St. Louis, Mo. One of her roommates is from Rutland, Vt. They are happy, and claim it will be difficult for them to split if permanent housing is found. Right now, they desire, like others in the same situation, another dresser and desk. Three beds and a roof over their heads is fine, but two closets, two dressers, and two desks, don't equal three of each.

Another woman, in a tripled-room, notes privacy is hard enough with just one roommate, but borders on absurdity when there are two roommates. Though everyone is getting along fine now, she wonders what will happen when one decides to have an overnight guest.

All the freshmen, now overcrowded, wonder why so many upperclassmen returned. Perhaps, Dr. Miser has the answer when he remarks residence halls can be a fine place to live, now that they have 24-hour perials, drinking privileges, an active Inter-Residence Association program of dances and films.

In his remarks with this writer last Thursday, the residence hall director said, "We may have oversold ourselves," which he believes is much better than underselling.

Paradoxically, at this time last year, it was discovered UVM lacked 350 students to fill its halls, thus, plundering the university into a million-dollar deficit, which has meant overcrowded classes and less faculty for this academic year.

Scannella Leaves UVM Football For Oakland

Scannella assumed his duties at Oakland, July 1, as an assistant coach under John Madden, the Raiders head coach. His assignments will be hunting advance game plans, working with the special units and assisting the quarterbacks.

A graduate of Lehigh University (1952), Scannella came to Vermont in 1970 following a year as an offensive coordinator with the Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League. In two years at Vermont, the Clifton N.J.

native won only two games, but picked up the program and is leaving behind the best crop of performers Vermont has had in some time.

Last year, Vermont upset Connecticut, 20-7, in the opening game of the year, snapping a 13-game losing streak. Connecticut went on to the Massachusetts title with a 3-1 mark. Vermont ended the season with a conference mark of 2-3-0.

Prior to his short stint at Montreal, Scannella was an area scout for the N.Y. Giants (1968-69) and was the head football coach and athletic director at C. W. Post (Greenville, N. Y.) from 1963-68. In addition to the Alouettes and C.W. Post, he served as an assistant coach at Cornell in 1962.

As an undergraduate at Lehigh, Scannella was considered one of the top quarterbacks ever to play for the Engineers and played varsity baseball for the Bethlehem, Pa. based university.

Dean Patzer Takes

Job In Washington

by Jeri Covey

Roland Patzer, former Dean of Students, left UVM this summer to take a job with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in Washington. There had been much speculation as to why Dean Patzer had left, but Richard Powers, Acting Dean of Students, described the situation as Patzer having "got a rather good opportunity to join HEW."

students. It will also award direct grants to individual colleges. Patzer will be working with the disbursement of funds and the administration of the program.

Funding for the act has not yet passed by the Congress.

However, Dean Powers expected that the program "could be an opportunity to do something significant."

Dean Powers does not expect that the absence of Patzer will substantially affect his duties. He has been "pretty involved during the last few years" while Dean Patzer was on sabbatical two years ago and then last year when Patzer had a heart-attack. Powers has no plans to initiate any new programs due mainly to the "fiscal problems."

Strike Committee Attempts To Broaden Base

by Barbara Frankel

Last spring, a group of students protesting against the ROTC building, which was occupied by the ROTC building, was a result of this symbolic act. A campus organization was formed, entitled The Committee Against the War, which, according to one of its members is "a viable group, working on some of the anti-war problems, which is striving to become a long-term, broad-based campus organization to give people the chance needed."

The Committee has been active throughout the summer in a series of demonstrations, drives and events designed to create a "much better general rapport with students, faculty and townspeople." After the ROTC demonstration, the protesters felt that their rapport with the people of Burlington had reached a low ebb. In an effort to remedy this situation, they tried to participate in a Memorial Day parade in which they thought they had a permit to march. Burlington police claimed otherwise and the "marchers" were forced to limit their activity to speeches in City Hall Park, for which they feel they received a mixed reaction.

On July 4th, they obtained legal permission to have their own parade in Battery Park. There were several speakers including Professor Michael Parenti and a Burlington housewife who felt it her duty to talk to people about ending the war. The Committee later sponsored a talk in City Hall by Dr. Bill Zimmerman, head of an organization of doctors and nurses who want medical aid to be provided to North Vietnam, is organizing a big drive in October to get medical supplies to North Vietnam. The UVM group is primarily concerned with getting children's hospitals built in North Vietnam.

The Committee Against the War was also on the UVM campus during the summer. They had a booth in Harris-Mills during Orientation and in addition to signing up approximately 40 freshmen, talked to many of the parents about their feelings on the war. Films were shown at Orientation and later in the summer at Billings Center, City Hall and the Fresh Ground Coffee House. The films included, "You Don't Have to Buy the War, Mrs. Smith," by Felix Greene and a filmed speech of Bess Myerson, Chairwoman of Consumer Affairs of New York City and a former Miss America, denouncing the Vietnam War.

Throughout the summer, the committee members attended regional meetings of anti-war groups. They have also been active in registering voters, although they will not actually campaign for or endorse any one candidate. At least once a month, students from the committee have been going to Montreal to attend meetings of the Association of Vietnamese Patriots of Canada, a group which supports the National Liberation Front. There have also been meetings held throughout New England for anti-war groups.

In addition to the anti-war Vermont-Vietnam group at Champlain Valley Fair, they have worked with the Vermont Caravan, a touring group that goes to fairs. The Vermont-Vietnam group is a traveling anti-war caravan which incorporates speakers and films. They appeared at UVM on September 11 on the green and in Votey Hall.

The Committee would like to see the anti-war efforts nationwide anti-war efforts. Their office is located in Conference Room C of Billings Center. Their main fall offensive so far seems to be a general referendum to the student body as to whether or not ROTC should be on campus, as very few freshmen have enrolled. The members claim that this referendum was held last spring. Conditions for their leaving the ROTC building last spring. They plan a program to aid in tax resistance and have several members awaiting trial for a demonstration held last spring when fifty-three students occupied the Federal building downtown and were subsequently arrested.

Oriental Art To Be Shown

A special exhibition and sale of original oriental art will be presented on Thursday, September 14, 1972, at Billings Center from 11:00 A.M. to 8:00 P.M. The exhibit is sponsored by the Billings Center Governing Board.

Welcome

The sororities on campus wish you happiness and the best in everything you do throughout your college years. There are six Greek Sorority houses surrounding the U.V.M. campus. Our activities range from rush to Spring Formals to all nighters to hockey to philanthropic projects to just about anything. The houses offer unique living and waterhood.

The Fall Rush program has begun. Rushing is merely an organized system for girls to become acquainted with the houses and join if they wish to. There is no obligation on the rusher. Sign-up parties going on now. Invitation parties begin on September 20.

Again, we say, welcome to Vermont and our campus.

Welcome Froth!

Mason Ltd. of Baltimore, Maryland will exhibit works by HIROSHIGE, TOYOKUNI, KUNICHIKI, CHIKANOBU and other 18th and 19th century masters, plus a collection of outstanding etchings, lithographs, and drawings by distinguished contemporaries in all price ranges.

Our representative Mr. John C. From will be present to answer questions about the work on view. Browsers are welcome, without obligation, to look through the well-described collection.

'True Identity'

True identity involves looking beyond material concepts of individuality that so often restrict a higher sense of freedom, according to Edward C. Williams, who will be lecturing on campus on Thursday, Sept. 21 at 7:30 p.m. in Marsh Lounge of Billings Center. Mr. Williams is a member of The Christian Science Board of Lectureship and is being sponsored on campus by the Christian Science College Organization.

Share Hiking Opportunities

Going for a hike? Give someone else a ride, too. Pick up a special hiking sheet from the nearest resident advisor and fill in your name, destination, departure time and place, and any request for gear money. Then post the sheet, allowing interested students to sign up in the space provided for additional riders. (Maybe just you and a friend are going - that leaves some space in the back seat!)

Once your car has been filled, remove the posted sheet and use it to check the students you meet at your point of departure. It's easy. It's organized. Riders should automatically come meet you on the listed date at the departure time and place that you have indicated on the sheet.

Give some non-driver a chance to reach the mountains. Meet someone new on the way. (It's like organized hitch-hiking.) This Saturday, share a ride, okay?

Editorial Activism Proper UVM Role

So begins another year at UVM. Freshmen probably are not aware of some of the changes which are more apparent to returning students.

The trees which lined Williston Road between MAT and the East Avenue light are now gone, only the ugly stumps remaining. Were trees all that sick that they had to be destroyed? Every year the once-beautiful UVM campus loses something or is marred by the addition of an ugly structure. Where will it stop?

One thing freshmen are aware of is the housing shortage. Let's see now... three times in the last four years such a situation has existed. Not bad! As long as the money rolls into the bursar's office from student wallets the University will keep running in its usual fashion. But think of the one, two, three, four, or five freshmen who are crammed into a lounge with three others and just can't make it through their first year at college, possibly because of problems resulting from overcrowding.

The lesson to be learned is that we have to be aware of policies which affect us before they are implemented. Complaints after the fact are worth nothing. We at the Cynic hope to increase our coverage of events which affect students, so that students can take an active role in shaping their university. Activism has its proper role in a university; it is up to all of us to decide wisely and maturely when and where it is needed.

SA Tries To Meet Student Needs

by Paul Cillo
S.A. Secretary of Elections

Many students here at the University have criticized Student Association for being unresponsive to student needs. They say that the S.A. Senate, which is the decision-making body of the S.A., does not represent UVM's students and does not act in their interests. But a closer look at S.A. shows that it does try to meet students' needs. S.A. provides student input for faculty and administrative decisions. It also attempts to provide student services that meet the cultural, social, educational and recreational needs of the student.

However, S.A. is only as good as the people in S.A. who make the decisions, and the people who make the decisions are found in the S.A. Senate.

The Senate is composed of one member from each residence hall, fraternity and sorority and several members who represent off-campus students. It is these people who budget S.A. funds and make S.A. policy. It is these people who hold the power to make the decisions.

In past years, few students took part in the working of the S.A. Senate. Last year, however, one-third of the University's undergraduates were not represented in the Senate.

This year, however, Student Association is organizing and publicizing the S.A. Senate elections. This will allow interested students to know how they can become involved.

So, beginning next week, nominating petitions will be available to students who are interested in running for a Senate position. The actual balloting will take place early in October.

Student Association needs good people. One doesn't need any special knowledge of government to be in the Senate.

If you would like more information about S.A., call Ext. 2053.

Commentary On 'Jughandle' State Highway Department's Degradation Must Cease

by Gene Swadlow

It's not often that a student newspaper is critical of an agency of the State Government. At some point it becomes the newspaper's responsibility to be critical when a State agency flagrantly violates the individual both philosophically and physically. The Vermont State Highway Department has done just that. Among their projects in the state presently are two stretches of Route 22 A and the famed "Jughandle" at the intersection of East Ave. and Williston Road.

The two stretches of Rt. 22 A are among the most scenic of that route. The decimation of the land, the cutting of trees which line the road and the general destruction of the adjacent area is a disgrace to the people of the state of Vermont. And, it's all being done to make a two lane road a wider two lane road which receives little use south of Vergennes.

The "Jughandle" is still another outgrowth of the basic philosophy of the Highway Department. The philosophy of human degradation, blind progress, and concrete which is at the heart of the Department must cease. The word jughandle will ring in the ears of Vermonters and all those who love the NON-CONCRETE Vermont for a long time to come. The tribute to the Vermont State Highway Department is being built right now at the intersection of Main St. and East Ave.

It is important to point out that the "Jughandle" is not to be solely blamed on the State of Vermont Highway Department. Just as guilty, is the University of Vermont. The Board of Trustees, acting for the University, made a land swap which allowed the "Jughandle" to be built. With Dr. Andrews in complete concurrence, the Board demonstrated to the community and to the State of Vermont not a philosophy of leadership, at a time when it sorely needed in the Environmental arena, but rather a philosophy of avoiding the ruffling of feathers. In allowing the "Jughandle" the University of Vermont has supported the Highway Department in their bid to devastate the land, degrade the human, pollute the automobile, and to generally not deal with the questions of the environment and the future.

It is a paradox that we should have an Environmental Studies Program, courses in Environmental thought, and lead in the field in theory while in practice depend on philosophy that is 20 to 30 years behind the times. If, indeed this paradox is present the blame must clearly be given to the Board of Trustees and President Andrews as THE decision makers of the University.

Recently, at convocation President Andrews spoke of conflict and how it added to the University community and to the educational process itself. It has become evident that here at the University of Vermont conflict can indeed occur but that the outcome of the conflict is clearly known at the outset by both parties of the conflict. The President and the Board of Trustees clearly dominate the University conflicts.

In July of 1973 the "Jughandle" will be complete. While it is a good reference point it is no longer a question. There never was a conflict with the case in point. The Board's wishes were done. To many it was of no surprise. Most of the University faculty was in this group. It doesn't take long here before one realizes that change is not wanted. The hierarchy often speaks of change, but how often does it occur? When the University stagnates it is dead. When it becomes a place of just theory it loses one of main functions in the society. To know what is right is simply not enough. The University of Vermont is well down the road to stagnation.

The "Jughandle," when completed, will be a tribute not only to the Highway Department but also to the University of Vermont.

Letter

Lonely Prisoner Seeks Only A Companion

Dear Sir:

At the present time I am serving a sentence in the Ohio Penitentiary. I have no family; therefore, my mail is very scarce. So my reason for writing you this letter is to see if you may print it in your campus newspaper to see if there are any female or male students there who might be interested in corresponding with me.

I work here in the hospital as a doctor clerk and script clerk. It's a very interesting job, and I really like the type of work that I'm doing. On the side, I'm taking a nursing course here, hoping it may help me out in the future.

As you can well imagine, any kind of confinement is very depressing, especially when it seems there is no one out there who cares about you. A few letters and someone to correspond with would mean more than anything I could think of.

They have mail call everyday here and when you see the same names everyday, receiving mail, and when you're not receiving any... well, it puts a big lump in your throat. It's a little hard to swallow, and your eyes kind of wet a little. Please don't take me wrong here, I'm not feeling sorry for myself.

I may feel a little down-hearted, but that's it.

I did a wrong, and I have to pay for it. I fully realize this.

To be perfectly frank, and honest with you, what I'm trying to say is it's a real hell not to have anyone to correspond with... it really kind of gets you way down deep inside, believe me. I do have feelings, and I care about others as well as myself.

There's still a real lot of good left inside of me.

Sir, please believe me when I say I don't have anything up my sleeve. I'm not trying to be a wise guy, or a comedian... I'm being sincere with you, and I'm not trying to pull your leg.

To have someone to correspond with sure would mean the world to me in every way. If I had someone...

One other thing, if there's anyone back there who would be interested in corresponding with me, they could feel free to ask any questions of me that they wanted to. I would gladly answer all of them, regardless of how personal it might be.

Respectfully yours,

remarked on tenure, and the overcrowding of Bailey Library, and the matter of quality teaching, which he hoped faculty would take an active leadership role.

Before suggesting these items for a possible agenda, Andrews reported on the current state of UVM. He announced attrition is down, and the acceptance rate up, the reverse of the way it was at this time last year. He remarked "we must be doing something right." Though he admitted, to no one's surprise, the university is overcrowded.

He reported the budget problem, which was a million dollar headache during last year, is improving. The university is operating with a $846,000 deficit, which he believes will be eliminated by the "overrun of students."

And Andrews noted that the image of UVM is improving "dramatically," and that respect from the outside community is returning. He said, "Some said we're even greater than before."

The university president seemed that the faculty wouldn't feel they must be on the "defensive."

The Olympic Games

by Steven C. Rice

In all the moments of terror that have taken place during my first twenty years on this planet, probably not one touched my heart in the same intensity as the recent killing of twelve members of the Israeli Olympic team. I can't explain why; there have been worse massacres, including My Lai and Tel Aviv.

Maybe it was because this time the massacre happened during games which bring men and women from all over the world to one spot every four years, the Olympics. Somehow, as a young citizen of this world, I like to think such an event supersedes political doctrines that form nations.

My world, as I am sure it is with many others my age, is one of abstractions. Words like love, fellowship, brotherhood, have special meaning. They indeed take precedence over words like hatred and oppression, which many will say, rightfully so, is the way of man.

So, that's probably why the Olympic games had a special meaning to me. It's a kind of utopia I wanted to see happen in a world that sadly will never seem to happen.

On opening day when a man, about my age, ran up the steps of an auditorium filled with 80,000, I nearly cried. To me, it wasn't so much that this was happening in a specific city in a specific nation; rather, the important thing was that it was happening.

I thought about that man, and how he must have felt when he lit that flame, standing there before the world with his heart probably pounding with a joy that we will never be able to experience.

And so the games commenced.

And, immediately, I fell in love with Olga Korbut, as I'm sure the whole world did. She did something that no one else did on the uneven parallel bars, and then, she failed to do something that everyone else did, a simple kip. But she came back the next evening, and succeeded at what she attempted, including the trick that once had been impossible to do.

Again, it wasn't so much that Olga was a Russian. To me, Olga was a beautiful girl with a pixie smile that captured the hearts of all of us.

And, as the days unfolded, my thinking continued like this. I looked at all the athletes, and kept saying to myself, "Hey, this thing they're all doing, it's beautiful."

But, delusion into a fantasy world can never be reality. Indeed, we are human beings with all the abstractions that form humanity; but, we live in different nations, shaped by different political systems. That's why twelve Israelis died

When that happened, the Olympics no longer had special meaning; blood had stained its purity.

Women's Health Center

The Vermont Women's Health Center (VWHC), located off Route 89, exit 16, in Colchester, opened Friday, September 1, on a limited basis.

The services performed included pregnancy tests, blood tests for VD, and Pap smears.

Earlier in the week, the Center's Board interviewed 20 women for staff positions after having screened 120 applications. Hired were:

Sue Adams and Deborah Helweg (Counselor-Coordinator); Mary McCorkle (Counselor-Secretary); Peggy Daniel, Cathy Snyder, Virginia Lyman, and Robin Wilkerson (Counselor-Advocates).

Rich in general medical and/or counseling background, the staff members, together with three additional volunteer counselors, are now participating in an intensive training period in specialized counseling lab and paramedic skills.

Any woman seeking services will be met by a counselor-advocate who will administer necessary tests and explain the procedures. This counselor will stay with the woman throughout the procedure to offer support and support.

After September 14, the Center will offer a full range of services including VD counseling and testing, contraception, pregnancy testing, and termination of pregnancy.

The Center is a non-profit organization, and services will be offered at cost to most women. A sliding scale of fees will be determined for women unable to afford the full cost.

The Vermont Women's Health Center is a result of a cooperative effort among private women (that is, women not acting in affiliation with any public agency or private business) in the Burlington area. Incorporation took place on July 13 with 41 members.

The Center's objective is to provide comprehensive services for women's health problems in a warm and supportive setting.

Future plans for the Center will be based on the expressed needs and desires of community women. Possibilities for expansion of services include pre- and post-natal care, midwife programs, films, rap groups, and education in nutrition, breast-feeding, mastectomy and hysterectomy operations, and in women's physiology, anatomy and sexuality. Many of the Center's services and activities are available from private doctors, clinics, or rap groups in private homes, but have never been offered in combination under one roof.

Termination of pregnancy will be performed by vacuum aspiration only in the first 12 weeks of pregnancy. No law prohibits this operation in Vermont if it is performed by a qualified physician. The operation as a medical procedure is a medical procedure.

In the decision to abort a pregnancy, the counselor might offer a wide range of options.

Anyone interested in trying out for Varsity Golf should sign up in Room 204, Patrick Gym at his earliest convenience.

Women's Health Center Opens In Colchester

The Vermont Women's Health Center (VWHC), located off Route 89, exit 16, in Colchester, opened Friday, September 1, on a limited basis.

The services performed included pregnancy tests, blood tests for VD, and Pap smears.

Earlier in the week, the Center's Board interviewed 20 women for staff positions after having screened 120 applications. Hired were:

Sue Adams and Deborah Helvarg (Counselor-Coordinator); Mary McCorkle (Counselor-Secretary); Peggy Daniel, Cathy Snyder, Virginia Lyman, and Robin Wilkenon (Counselor-Advocates).

Rich in general medical and/or counseling background, the staff members, together with three additional volunteer counselors, are now participating in an intensive training period in specialized counseling lab and paramedic skills.

Any woman seeking services will be met by a counselor-advocate who will administer necessary tests and explain the procedures. The counselor will stay with the woman throughout the procedures to offer empathy and support.

and a woman might be referred to Birthright, Howard Mental Health Services, the Land Home, Vermont Children's Aid or Welfare Rights Organization. The women who choose termination will be counseled in contraception and welcomed back to the Center if she desires follow-up counseling. Persons requesting further information should call 655-1600. The Center's hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 8:00-4:00.

Reading Improvement Program

The Reading Center invites all UVM students interested in reading improvement to attend its orientation meetings the week of September 11. Many applications have already been received. However, it was not possible to obtain addresses of all students living off campus. If you made an application and did not receive an orientation letter, please join the other students in attending one of these meetings.

If you should think that you just won't have time for CRIP, that's the best reason why you should make time. We hope to help you have more time to enjoy college. Our main objective is learning how to learn and efficient reading is the key to effective learning.

The Reading Center can become your best study center, coordinating its facilities with your courses. We will offer classes in reading and studying techniques, individual conferences and laboratory hours for study and use of life A-V equipment.

At orientation you will be able to acquaint yourself with the facilities of the Reading Center. Advance your primary objective: reading improvement and select a convenient class schedule. This is an elective course, open to all students, with a curriculum designed by the students.

Orientation Meeting Schedule

Place: 409 Waterman Times:
Sept. 11 1:00-1:45 (Last Name) A-C
Sept. 12 9:45-10:30 D-K
Sept. 13 1:00-1:45 L-P
Sept. 14 9:45-10:30 Q-Z

If you can not come at the suggested time, attend one of the other sessions or contact the Reading Center for an individual appointment.

VPIRG Deals With Price Comparisons

Thursday Sept. 8 at Robinson Hall the local Board of VPIRG (Vermont Public Interest Group) met for the first time of the school year. A group of about 25 students attended. Dick Couture conducted the meeting which mainly was an introduction to VPIRG and a recap of the events of the summer. Scott Stanger, the Director of the Statewide VPIRG was among the speakers.

Monday, Sept. 11 VPIRG met once again to deal with one specific project. The topic of the meeting was a consumer pricing project which would compare the various prices in food stores of the Burlington area.

CEA (Committee for Environmental Action) will meet this coming Monday night at 7 pm in the Main lounge at Billings Center.

OVP Continues To Offer Varied Programs And Opportunities

The Office of Volunteer Programs at UVM offers many programs in volunteering. The programs are as varied as the people who are in them. OVP opened its doors for the first time in the fall of 1970. It was immediately inundated by students interested in participating. Needs were identified and students were placed in agencies, community centers, schools, hospitals, day care centers, and independent projects such as Adopt a Grandparent, Sink or Swim, and many others. Volunteers also served in OVP itself as interviewers, project assistants, and members of the OVP Steering Committee. OVP is conceived as a "partnership" between students and the University of Vermont Administration to make full use of the facilities and human resources to meet the pressing human needs that exist in the Burlington Area Community. OVP's task is to assist people who want to help others by providing information on where needs are, transportation facilities where possible, a center for exchange of ideas, assistance both financial, and informational in developing new projects, a sounding board when problems arise, and other services such as recruitment, training, evaluation, and publicity as necessary.

Volunteers work independently or in projects already organized by other student volunteers under the advisement of community agency personnel, and OVP. A student project leader may take responsibility for coordinating the work of the volunteers and maintaining a liaison with the professionals in the agencies and OVP. The purpose of the coordination is to effect maximum impact of the available student volunteer manpower with a minimum waste of time and energy while utilizing all of the available resources.

The OVP Steering Committee will meet regularly each week during the year. The time and place of meeting is posted on the OVP bulletin board near the stairway to the Den in Billings and in the "OVP Help Wanted" column of the Cynic.

WHY WOULD A WOMAN AT UVM WANT TO TAKE ROTC?

She probably wouldn't. But she might be interested in taking some courses with ROTC students. Military affairs are certainly important to all of us, so why shouldn't the UVM cadet enroll in one or two of the following courses to be offered in 72/73 by the Department of Military Studies?

MS 1 Introduction to Military Studies. Fall Semester. Relationship of war to society; impact of technology on warfare; role of logistics and administration. Political, social, economic factors making up current military power. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 2 U.S. Defense Establishment. Spring Semester. Organization of Department of Defense. Process of formulating national security policy. Impact of economic factors on the decision making process. Case studies of current issues affecting national security. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 12 Contemporary World Military Scene. Spring Semester. Seminar on current international use of military force, viewed against a background of long-range national concerns, capability of U.S., Western European countries, U.S.S.R., China. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

Don't expect to find drill, or marksmanship, or first aid in these courses. Don't expect to be reading Field Manuals. Do expect to find provocative questions raised by the faculty and by the controversial texts to be used, such as Military Power and Potential by Knorr; How to Control the Military by Galtsoff; Defense Strategies for the Seventies by Hupstein; and others.

If you are interested in more information or a complete listing of courses for next year, drop by the Department of Military Studies or call 658-2988.

SECOND COLLEGE EDITION

WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY

Of the American Language

COMPLETE REFERENCE EDITION

This new, completely revised WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY, based on the same outstanding lexicographic standards as the first edition, is the only dictionary specifically designed for Americans in the 1970s.

New with more entries, more pages than any other college dictionary. There are over 157,000 entries in the 1,728 pages of this edition, including over 20,000 new terms and meanings. And it adds important new features no other dictionary can claim:

The only college dictionary that tells you which words and meanings were born in America. Over 12,000 terms are identified as Americanisms, those words or meanings which first became part of the language in the United States.

The only college dictionary with etymologies of American place names. For the first time in any general dictionary of the language, the origins and explanations of the names of American cities, states, rivers, etc. are given.

SECOND COLLEGE EDITION

WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY

Of the American Language

COMPLETE REFERENCE EDITION

These unique features in the Second College Edition of WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY are important advances. But equally important is the tradition of excellence which Webster's large, permanent staff of lexicographers has carried forward.

Every entry is written from a contemporary American point of view, either prepared directly or carefully reexamined and reconstructed to bring it in line with the latest findings. Technical terms, scientific names, and other specialized words, including specialized vocabulary, are included.

And thousands of usage examples and synonyms help you choose precisely the right word to convey just the right nuance of meaning. Many detailed etymologies show those of any comparable book are included, carried back, wherever possible, to a hypothetical Indo-European base.

All entries in a single alphabetical listing, with names of people and places, foreign expressions, abbreviations, etc., all appear in the main body of the book rather than in several time-consuming appendices.

Large, easily read type on glass-leaf white pages—both especially selected to make these pages the most lasting and readable of all dictionary texts.

All these features are part of the first dictionary of the 1970s. They guarantee that, for years to come, the Second College Edition of WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY will be the most useful desk dictionary you can own.

Fleming Hosts Exhibition Of Wood's 19th Century Paintings

An exhibition of paintings by the nineteenth century Vermont artist, Thomas Waterman Wood, opened Sunday at the Fleming Museum.

Thomas Waterman Wood, President of the National Academy of Design in the 1890's, was one of the most popular genre and portrait painters of his time. He has been assessed by one historian as the Norman Rockwell of his day. A native of Montpelier, Vermont, the artist spent his summers there painting in his "Gothic" Studio, Athenwood, now an historic landmark.

Before he died, Wood, with the help of other benefactors, bequeathed a large number of paintings, watercolors, and sketches to the city of Montpelier. The bequest is housed there in the Wood Gallery of Art together with paintings by Wood's contemporaries and more recent examples of American painting.

The present exhibition is drawn from the original bequest of Wood. As such, it is the first major loan exhibition from the Gallery and will travel, after it closes at the Fleming, to the Currier Gallery of Art, Manchester, New Hampshire, and then to the Boston Public Library.

Conceived by Mr. Charles Childs, the former Director of the Childs Gallery in Boston, the exhibition was organized by Mr. William Lipke, a professor of Art History at the University of Vermont, with the assistance of Mr. Ronald Slayton and Mr. Milton Sunderland, Curators at the Wood Gallery of Art.

With a supporting grant from the Vermont Council on the Arts, a small monograph about Wood's life and art, written by Professor Lipke, is being published for the traveling exhibition. Included in the catalog are some forty illustrations of Wood's successful career, together with a check list catalog of the exhibition.

Wood's paintings and watercolors reflect his interest in not only the rural life of Vermont, but in a simple life quickly being replaced by the tempo of modern living. His sketches, making up the larger part of the exhibition, have a particular freshness, isolating objects and environments and creating a sense of completeness that makes the sketches wholly satisfying in their own right.

The exhibition will be on view at the Fleming through October 5th.

Dean Attends Convention

Dr. Dean C. Corrigan, dean of the University of Vermont College of Education and Goddard College President Gerald R. Witherspoon, were among some 50 educators from throughout the U.S. who took part in a four-day Wisconsin meeting of the National Study Commission on Undergraduate Education and the Education of Teachers that called for a reshaping of higher education.

Established by the U.S. Office of Education, the Study Commission met at Racine, Wis., and agreed that educators should try to be "specific things to specific people in specific educational settings," rather than try to be all things to all people.

The Commission identified credentialing and accrediting as among the greatest obstacles to the needed diversity of education. Credentialing and accrediting as now carried on were characterized as representing only one small segment of those interested in education, namely the professional guilds.

In its final session the Commission proposed a series of "networks of schools without walls," including elementary, secondary and higher education institutions.

The Commission's recommendations will be forwarded to the U.S. Commissioner of Education and released to the educational community and general public.

SA Films Presents "Charlie's Aunt"

As part of SAF's first week of film, it is presenting Jack Benny in CHARLIE'S AUNT. The film, which has been in limited circulation for several years, will be shown twice on Saturday evening: once at 7:30 PM and once at 9:30 PM. Admission to all is $1.00. Tickets will be on sale at the door.

Brandon Thomas' brilliant farce comedy stage hit, "Charlie's Aunt" was brought to the screen with Jack Benny as the young man who pays a debt by impersonating a rich aunt from Brazil ("You know, where the nuts come from"). When the real aunt arrives hilariously as the result of Benny's "aunt" tries to keep from running into the real person and tries to avoid the amorous advances of two gentlemen who hope to improve their fortunes through proposals of marriage.

Archie Mayo, a comic master of inventive direction keeps the action non-stop and besides the great (albeit young) Benny, excellent support is given by Kay Francis, Edmund Gwenn, Laird Creger and Richard Haydn.

The contributions of screenwriter George Seaton and producer William Perlberg (who later teamed and earned themselves several Oscars for writing, producing, and directing) retain all the wit of the author's genius for dialogue and expand the limits of the stage to include an outdoor chase that is a classic in itself.

Blood, Sweat, And Tears Opens Lane Series October 5; Tickets Are Available

Single concert tickets for the fabulous, Blood, Sweat, and Tears, will be on sale this coming Monday in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman.

The rock group is sponsored by the Lane Series, which is offering 15 concerts this year, both on a series basis and on a single concert basis (provided tickets are not sold out on the series sales).

Blood, Sweat and Tears appears at Memorial Auditorium on Thursday, Oct. 5, in two performances - 7:30 and 10:30. Single concert tickets are $3.75, $4.50, $5.25 and $6. All seats are reserved. Single concert tickets are also available now for the opening Lane concert, the Beryozka Dance Co., a group of 100 dancers, singers and musicians direct from the Soviet Union. This is one of the most lavish productions ever to appear on the Lane Series.

The fifteenth attraction will be a major singing artist, who will be announced shortly.

These concerts may be purchased on series basis in groups of 6, 9, 12 or all 15. Prices for 6 concerts are $13, $17, $21, $24; for 9 concerts, $20, $26, $32, $36; for 12 concerts, $26, $34, $42, $48; for 15 concerts $33, $43, $53, $60.

Good seats are still available and may be purchased in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. Students, faculty and staff have seat priority if orders are received by Sept. 15.

The concerts are held in Memorial Auditorium, with the exception of the Fine Arts Quartet and Zoltan Kocsis, who appear in Ira Allen Chapel.

All seats are reserved. For reservations (single concert sales only) and for information, tel. 656-3418.

Cross Country Meet Saturday

The University of Vermont cross country team opens its campaign with a dual meet at home with Keene State, Saturday (Sept. 16), beginning at 1 p.m.

Bill Nedde's harriers will be a young team with eight freshmen on the varsity squad. Returning from last year's team are captain Mark "Red" Gravel, Don Baker, Mike Bezz, Greg Bobbin, Morris Frazier, Mark Phelps and Rudy Woodman. The Catamounts have a long list of performers: Peter Binst and Ole Anderson, because of personal reasons.

"Although we lost two top-notch runners in Binst and Anderson, we have a strong corps of freshmen who should continue to improve during the season," said Nedde.

This Saturday's home meet, open to the public, will begin on the outdoor track behind the Guttererson Field House on Spear St. Following Keene State, the Catamount hill and daleers run against a strong Northeastern squad in Boston, Sept. 23. New Hampshire is also in this premier.

UVM Rallies For McGovern

Wisconsin Governor Patrick Lucy addressed an overflow crowd of McGovern supporters here on Saturday night. Lucy accused the Nixon administration of catering to special interest groups and ignoring the real needs of the average citizen. The Wisconsin Democrat also predicted that, like Harry Truman in 1948, George McGovern will defeat his heavily favored Republican opponent.

The heaviest applause of the evening came during the question period when the Governor was asked about the possibility of a bloodbath after American troops withdrew. Governor Lucy replied, "I don't believe that the North Vietnamese have the capacity to kill as many innocent women and children as we kill with our bombing every day."

Governor Lucy stated that the bugging of the Democratic National Committee Headquarters was "a serious scandal," and that President Nixon should appoint a special council to prosecute those involved. "There is every indication," said Lucy, "that the path of those involved leads clearly to the White House."

Lucy told those attending the rally that they were the best of the McGovern victory, but with hard work, "a lot of people, will be surprised in October."

Football Recruiting Attracts New National Talent

Added to the 67 varsity players who completed spring football drills at the University of Vermont several months ago will be the best recruiting class since Joe Scannella took over as head coach in 1969.

Joining the regular 67, of which 33 are lettermen, at the opening of camp in August were 18 top junior college transfers and incoming freshmen, representing nine different states, including three from California and two from Georgia.

Out of the total of 18, seven are junior college transfers and 11 are freshmen. "We'll be inviting over 50 players to our opening session in August. Our staff did a great job of recruiting this year and for the first time, since I've been here, we'll have depth in most every position," said Scannella. (Editors note: see story about new coach)

Vermont opens its campaign with two rugged games on the road with Connecticut (Sept. 23) and LaGrange (Sept. 30).

The seven new junior college transfers will join three other transfers that enrolled at Vermont in January. Linebackers Greg D'Amico (Rye, N.Y.) and Johnny Thompson (North Augusta, S.C.) and wide receiver Tony Jones (Baltimore, Md.). The seven transfers include defensive backs Carl Chackman (Lithia Springs, Ga.), a star performer at Gordon Military Academy; Glenn Thigpen (Atlanta, Ga.), a 6-2 strong safety, also from Gordon Military Academy and Kevin Graf, a sprint champion from San Bernardino, Calif. Other transfers include 6-3, 230 lb. tight end Wil Waga (Modesto, Calif.) of Modesto Junior College; Greg Anderson (Paxton, Ill.), a 6-0, 212 middle linebacker from Rochester St. Junior College (Minn.); offensive tackle Dave Hibma (Walnut, Calif.) transferred from the same team to play at Central Junior College (Calif.) and Dave Alberico (Rutland, Vt.), a rugged defensive tackle who attended one year at Hudson Valley Community College (New York).

Some of the top freshmen who will be invited to camp in August include three quarterbacks, two defensive backs and five outstanding linemen. The quarterbacks include Gene Healey (Long Island City, N.Y.), an All-Prep star who Scannella considers an outstanding leader with tremendous speed; Rich Benenati (Brooklyn, N.Y.), a 6-2, 200 lb. quarterback who his coach, Bill Duffy, calls the best quarterback in 10 years at Brooklyn Prep and Bob Bateman (Darien, Conn.), a 6-4

The defensive backs are Mike Smith (Whitehall, N.Y.) and Mike Snodgrass (Southampton, Pa.). "Smith possesses blazing speed with good size," said Scannella, while Snodgrass (6-0, 175) was an All-Suburban Philadelphia League All-Star at Archbishop Wood High School. "An outstanding ballhawk," said Vermont's head coach.

The top linemen expected to report to the August camp include defensive tackles Sheldon Scruggs (6-4, 250) from Bronx, N.Y. and Ken Munson (Burlington, Vt.), the toughest lineman assistant Burlington High School coach, Gene Peck, has ever coached. Two rugged defensive ends, Paul Ridge (Pl. Pleasant, N.J.) and Louis Hatch (Wynmore, Pa.), will help support All-Yankee Conference candidates, Wayne Butman and Steve Lippe. Ridge is an "outstanding athlete who can adjust to many positions." while Hatch (6-3, 210) is very agile and was an outstanding performer for Valley Forge Military Academy.

Offensive tackle Joe Juson (Bristolboro, Vt.), a member of this year's Vermont Shrine team, rounds out the top freshmen expected to be invited to the August camp.

The Light Side

If UVM Athletic Hall of Famer Larry Killick was trying to keep his age to himself he should have kept it from some of his best friends in Cocoa, Fla., where the former UVM basketball great is an executive for a beer distributing firm.

The UVM Alumni Office has received a clipping from another UVMer from the Cocoa, Fla. Today, showing a sign reading: "Happy Birthday Larry—Welcome to the over the hill club."

The sign was placed on Killick's front lawn the day he marked his 50th birthday. Just so no one would miss it, it was a flashing sign.

meet) 6'6" in the high jump. The Hill award was presented to Tom Harrington (third from left) for being named the top runner of the meet. Harrington won the 100 and 220 yard dashes and was the anchor man on the record-setting 440-yard relay team. Reeves is a junior, while Harrington is only a freshman. Shown with the athletes are assistant coach Ed Kusak (left), holding one of the plaques presented to the school, while head coach Bill Nadeau is at the right. Mackey and Hill were both standout track performers at their respective schools, Mackey at Middlebury and Hill at Vermont. Both passed away this winter. Vermont won the State Meet, edging Middlebury 110-88. Norwich was third with 52 points.

Falivene Steps Up To Head Football Position

Last year's offensive line coach at the University of Vermont, Carl Falivene was named Vermont's head football coach. Falivene succeeds Joe Scannella who announced June 20th that he would step down in order to accept a position as an assistant coach with the Oakland Raiders of the National Football League. Lambert said the appointment followed consultation with the athletic council, representatives of the football team, the other assistant coaches and student leaders. These conversations led to an overwhelming endorsement of Carl Lambert said, "We are fortunate to have a man of this caliber on campus and we are delighted that he has accepted this assignment." Falivene assumed his duties as head coach July 1. The 1950 Syracuse University graduate joined Vermont staff last summer, after three years as an assistant coach under Larry Catuzzi at Williams College. He will continue to serve as an instructor of physical education on a part-time basis. Falivene will begin his new assignment after 19 years at the high school and collegiate level. In addition to his three years at Williams, the 42-year old coach spent two years at Hofstra University as an offensive line coach under Howdy Meyers, one of the winningest collegiate coaches in the country. His high school coaching experience began in 1951 at St. Anne's Academy in Port Smith, Ark. and in high schools in N.Y. and Ohio, as both head football, basketball and baseball coach. At Syracuse Falivene was a standout fullback and linebacker. A native of Schenectady, N.Y., Falivene is married and has five boys. One of his sons, Tom, will enter the University of Delaware this fall as one of the top quarterbacks recruited in the freshman class. Another son, Carl, III, is a lineman at Baldwin-Wallace in Berea, Ohio. His other three boys, Michael, 15; Stephen, 13; and Robert, 12 are also fine athletes in the South Burlington school system.

DAOUST... FOR THE ROUGH GOING!

In the course of a game, your skate is punished by sticks, skate blades and pucks. So you need a skate that can take it — a skate made by Daoust. Daoust protection. The famous Daoust boot is made of high quality materials — like lined Kangaroo leather — chosen for strength and durability. Inter-lined with ballistic nylon mesh and lined with English kip leather provides all-round foot protection.

The right box toe is guaranteed. And on top of all this... the Daoust fit — the ultimate in skate comfort. Daoust performance. Just as a player must perform under pressure, a skate must perform under punishment... and Daoust skates do just that. An example is the Daoust National 300 — illustrated above. Before this skate leaves the plant in Montreal, the blade is tested for strength and resistance.

on the Rockwell scale. It must register a reading of 58 to 60 — guaranteeing the DAOUST standards of excellence. With over 75 years of experience, DAOUST has created an impressive line of skates — ranging from the superb National 300 to the rugged Junior Pro... the skate for the future superstar.

The skate that made Montreal the home of hockey.

Record Turn-out For Catamount Soccer Team

A record number of candidates reported to the pre-season soccer camp at the University of Vermont, as the defending co-Yankee Conference titles began their march to hopefully their seventh VanCon crown in the last eight years. Over 75 candidates reported to head coach Don Soderberg, August 30, as the third-year coach began double sessions in preparation for the season opener at Connecticut, Sept. 23.

Salzberg Named Head Basketball Coach

Columbia's assistant athletic director and freshman basketball coach, Peter Salzberg, 29, was named the head basketball coach at the University of Vermont. It was announced by J. Edward Donnelly, director of athletics. Salzberg will assume his duties as head basketball coach and physical education instructor September 1. He replaces Art Locke, who stepped down in April.

A graduate of Columbia ('64), Salzberg was a member of the varsity basketball team and was captain of the University's golf team in 1963-64.

In addition to serving as Columbia's assistant athletic director and freshman basketball coach, Salzberg was the varsity golf coach for the last four years.

Following graduation from Columbia, Salzberg was a news writer for the Associated Press in Philadelphia for one year (1964-65), before moving back to his alma mater as an associate editor of the College Alumni Magazine from 1967-68, during which time he studied for his M.A. in Physical Education. Salzberg received his M.A. in June, 1970.

As the freshman coach (1967-72) under Jack Rohan, Salzberg recorded a 47-41 record, including a 17-3 mark in 1970-71, the best fresh mark in Columbia's basketball history. While serving as an assistant to Rohan the varsity coaches compiled an outstanding 74-19 record from 1967-71, which included national ranking. In addition to coaching duties, Salzberg was very instrumental in Columbia's successful recruiting program.

Salzberg was appointed the assistant athletic director in 1968, serving under Columbia's director of athletics, Kenneth G. Germann.

Immediately following his acceptance of the head basketball position at Vermont, Salzberg said, "I am extremely pleased that the committee, headed by Denis Lambert (Vermont's assistant director of athletics), has placed their confidence in me. I am familiar with the situation at Vermont and strongly feel that the ingredients of success are there."

Led by captain Jack Stone, the Catamount bowlers have 17 returning lettermen, including All-Yankee Conference selections from last fall, Vince Moorman, Chris Chappell and Peter Berns.

Soderberg has the unpleasant task in the next few weeks of narrowing his varsity squad from 75 to a manageable 25.

Two-a-day workouts continued until classes began, Sept. 7.

Last year, the Catamounts established eight individual and team records enroute to its best season ever, 10-2-0.

Vermont ranked third in the New England standings at the end of the season.

Since the inception of soccer at Vermont in 1963, Vermont has recorded an amazing 716 winning percentage (48-19-7). During this time, Vermont has either shared or owned outright the Yankee Conference championship six times.

Following the opening game with Connecticut, Sept. 23, Vermont travels to Pittsburgh, Sept. 27, before returning home for the critical game with Bridgport, one of the two teams that inflicted a loss (2-1) on Vermont last fall.

S.A. News Debates Involve Elections, Finan

by Jen Covey

Even though many of this year's Senators have not been elected yet, the second SA Senate meeting of the semester on Tuesday night, the debate often heated, revolved around the acceptance of new election rules and a new financial policy.

After the usual roll call and announcements, the Senate started to rise over the new election regulations. These regulations concern the election of SA Senators by their respective living units. This does not affect town Senators. A candidate for Senator must have a petition signed by 10% of his constituents, which is then turned into the living unit's election committee. Balloting for Senators will be done by secret ballot on the same day for all living units and town elections.

The issue was raised by Sharon Reed, Senator from Gamma Phi Beta, that the policy need not be used by the sororities and fraternities, who have their own ways and rules of electing Senators. Miss Reed termed the policy "a lot of hullabaloo." Dick Cassidy retorted testily that the change was "for the sake of uniformity" and that "if someone gets hazled, that's too bad." Paul Cilio, Secretary of Elections, explained in a more conciliatory manner that he realized that the new policy was "a lot of procedure," but that it was a matter of "legality." Cilio added that he had written the new policy at the request of last year's Senate for a "uniform election procedure."

Miss Reed said, "I am not calling quorum" (in this reporter's estimate there was not a quorum present) but requested that "this very important business shouldn't be voted on without more living units represented." The request was denied because it was argued that more units could not be represented until the Senators were elected.

Richard P. Dean of Student Affairs issued a "legitimate control." The issue grew out of the use of funds of SA, such as political action organizations, financial disputes, and that it was the Senators who were elected administrative

S.A. News Debates Involving Elections, Finances

Even though many of this year's Senators have not been elected yet, the second SA Senate meeting of the semester sparked two major floor fights on Tuesday night. The debates, often heated, revolved around the acceptances of new election rules and a new financial policy.

After the usual roll call and announcements, tempers started to rise over the new election regulations. These regulations concern the election of SA Senators by their respective living-units. This does not affect town Senators. A candidate for Senator must have a petition signed by 10% of his constituents, which is then turned into the living unit's election committee. Ballotting for Senators will be done by secret ballot on the same day for all living-units and town elections.

The issue was raised by Sharon Reed, Senator from Gamma Phi Beta, that the policy need not be used by the sororities and fraternities, who have their own ways and rules of electing Senators. Miss Reed termed the policy "a lot of hullabaloo." Dick Cassidy retorted testily that the change was for the sake of "uniformity" and that "if someone gets hazled, that's too bad." Paul Cillo, Secretary of Elections, explained in a more conciliatory manner that he realized that the new policy was "a lot of procedure," but that it was a matter of "legality." Cillo added that he had written the new policy at the request of last year's Senate for a "uniform election procedure."

Miss Reed said, "I am not calling quorum" (in the reporter's estimate there was not a quorum present) but "I am not calling quorum." Very important business shouldn't be based on without more living units represented. The request was denied because it was argued that more units could not be represented until the Senators were elected.

which required the passing of the election policy first. The policy was passed 13 to 4 with two abstentions.

A lengthier debate took place on the new financial policy statement of the SA. What the policy says is that all SA recognized organizations must keep all their monies in SA accounts, whether they are appropriated by the SA to the organization or earned by the organization through dues, admissions to social events, or advertisements (in the case of the CYNIC and WRUV). No organization may have money in University Consolidated Accounts or private accounts. Purchases by the organization can be made only by the utilization of an SA Purchase Order Voucher, which must be signed by the SA Treasurer.

Arguments against this policy maintained that it gave too much power to the SA Treasurer (not an elected officer, but appointed by the SA President). It would create too much bureaucracy and paper work, and that it would destroy the autonomy of the organizations to use money that they have acquired themselves (as opposed to the money appropriated to the organization by the SA) as they see fit.

Terry Demme, substitute Senator for Carol Hirs, received an ovation of approval from the Senate and organization representatives present when he stated that the policy "should separate money earned by organizations from SA money."

Richard Powers, Acting Dean of Students, said that the issue over the policy was a "legitimate question of control." The proposed policy grew out of the unauthorized use of funds by SA, such as the funding of political activities by certain organizations, and certain financial disasters such as Kate Walk. Dean Powers suggested that it was a matter of administrative control of the

by Peter Campbell

A barely presentable sized but attentive audience listened to Dr. Benjamin Spock, the famous "Baby Doctor," turned political activist in the Billings north lounge last Tuesday noon.

The distinguished pediatrician was here for the second time in less than a year to rally support for his 1972 Presidential Campaign on the People's Party ticket. Several candidates for Vermont's own Liberty Union Party, which is closely affiliated with the Peoples Party, spoke also.

Dr. Spock, who is called just plain "Ben" by his supporters, was introduced by Martha Abbott, a Vermont legislative candidate from Underhill, as "a man who was involved and not afraid to put his body on the line." The speech that followed has been well practiced by now, and was honed down to a much more precise and forceful presentation than the Doctor has been known to give in the past.

"I did not come here to argue with you; instead, I will tell you about my gradual radicalization." Dr. Spock told how, as a "New Deal Democrat" he joined SANE in the fifties, and campaigned for Lyndon Johnson in 1964 because he believed that Johnson would keep the US out of South-East Asia. Disillusioned with Johnson, Spock began to demonstrate openly. He joined an anti-war coalition that called for the President and others to be brought to trial for war crimes. In 1967, he and several others were arrested at Whitehall induction center for allegedly counseling Draft evaders, and later they were charged in a "conspiracy" by the Federal Government, only to be acquitted under the first amendment - the freedom of speech amendment.

Dr. Spock then went into the campaign part of his talk. "The Vietnam war is only a particularly obnoxious example of what America has been doing all along." He proceeded to list past US armed intervention in various parts of the world - "while America has thirty million people living below the poverty level," and Dr. Spock referred to the Scandinavian countries, which have less income than the United States, but have no poverty. "Look at medical care, said the Doctor. 'I used to be a doctor and I used to be a medical care, but I came to realize that we stand tenth or twentieth when we could easily be first, and if the government was actually concerned with the people this would be so."

Dr. Spock accused the Federal Government of being concerned only with industry, which paid for the Democratic and Republican campaigns. He, then accused industry as being chiefly responsible for pollution. On the subject of taxes, Dr. Spock said, "The progressive income tax structure has been bored with loop-holes." "The Housing Institution - no radical group - stated that there are seventy million dollars a year lost in tax loop-holes. He accused the recent administrations of being irresponsible in their taxing, especially where the Vietnam is concerned. "There are two ways that this war has been paid for. The first is by reducing services - by reducing the health services, reducing the quality of education, and by reducing the welfare of the people." The real has been paid by inflation. Dr. Spock emphasized to his audience, "if we are ever going to have a decent life, we will have to have a party that is independent of the Republicans and the Democrats, free of industry as well. "We have to start our own campaign, and start on a grass roots level in our own communities first to achieve this."

He then listed the People's Party's basic platform: 1. "Immediate withdrawal of troops." Not just from Asia, but from all over the world. And two thirds of our defense budget should be cut." 2. Minimum income - "where a family of four would get at least $6500 a year." 3. Free, good quality medical care. 4. Close all the tax loop-holes. (Dr. Spock commented, "not just the few that George McGovern plans to close.") 5. End discrimination against women, in the universities and in work. End discrimination against Blacks, homosexuals, and other minorities. 6. Legalize marijuana and abortion. Here, Dr. Spock

Democrats, Republican's Conduct Strong Voter Registration Drives In Burlington

by Barbara Frankel

Voter registration is of utmost importance to both the Nixon and McGovern campaigns. In Burlington, Democratic and Republican headquarters are each staging a massive effort to register voters who support their candidates. It is particularly necessary to gain the youth vote, a fact which is causing considerable attention to be given to the college student.

"All UVM students are eligible to vote in Burlington, whether Vermont residents or not. A recent Supreme Court decision allows those with only thirty days residence to vote in a Presidential election, so unregistered out-of-state students should consider the advantages to doing this. This includes avoiding the red tape of casting an absentee ballot and being able to vote in future state and local elections.

Both the Nixon and the McGovern campaigns have several events planned to increase voter registration in this area. On September 30, the Republicans will hold their "Burlington Blitz Day". This campaign, which is being done statewide on different days, will include door-to-door canvassing of approximately 75% of Burlington voters. Four hundred Nixon campaign workers will handle the canvassing, which will be followed up by phone calls, letters, and personal visits by notaries to the unregistered voters. The Nixon people feel that "complacency could kill us", and thus intend to wage an active battle in Vermont. The McGovern workers, fighting an uphill battle, claim that getting people registered, especially in the 18-24 age groups, is "extremely necessary" to George

McGovern. They feel that the Republican's belief that large numbers of the youth vote will go to Nixon is "a lot of hogwash." The Democrats plan to keep voter registration open throughout the bulk of the campaign, although they don't believe in "big, splashy rallies for Vermont, because that kind of thing doesn't go over well here." On the UVM campus, Scott McKay and Mark

Butterfield, Co Chairmen of UVM Students for McGovern, are planning to make a voter registration table available at Billings center for the week of October third through October seventh. They are hoping to appoint a notary in each dorm, who would be responsible for registering all pro-McGovern voters who are as yet unregistered. (continued on page eight) and professional people. He stated that there should be worker control in the factories, "where the factories should not just produce stuff for profit, but for quality in the environment."

Dr. Spock ended by urging all those who wanted "real fundamental change to work for the People's Party."

A sharp contrast to Spock's low key delivery was the fiery speech made by Bernard Sanders, the Liberty Union candidate for the governorship of Vermont. His staccato phrases were sharply aimed. He stated that Vermont had a regressive tax structure, "where cigarettes bring in more taxes than corporations do." "The two dozen people who own

Vermont industry don't give a shit," said Mr. Sanders. "And Vermont's children's teeth are rotting while the state gives two million dollars to the ski industry, which is owned by outside interests. He mentioned that the land in Vermont was being "gobbled up", and concluded that Vermonters needed vigorous thinkers in Montpelier. He mentioned that over a quarter of the legislature were retired. "Vermonters are losing to these outside interests while Vermont politicians come out against such controversial issues as drunken driving and heroin addiction, and go right on winning their elections."

Peter Diamondstone spoke next. A lawyer from Brattleboro, he is running for Attorney General on the Liberty Union ticket.

He spoke philosophically of politics as "just self-expression." Diamondstone remarked, "People vote for power with the idea that the person will do it all for them."

In an apparent clever analogy between profit and power, and the failure of both to yield any satisfaction, the lawyer concluded, "Vote for yourself." Steven Dunham, UVM Junior from Brattleboro, who ran for Secretary of State and captured 20% of the Republican primary vote, emphasized his efforts of having participated in the political system.

The talks were concluded by John Chaplin, a legislative candidate.

Mechanical Engineering Seminar

Students, staff and faculty are cordially invited to attend a Mechanical Engineering Seminar entitled "Equal Opportunity in Industry". The guest speaker, James I. Nixon, Manager of Corporate Equal Opportunity and Minority Relations for General Electric, will be at the Seminar on September 21, at 4 p.m. in 231 Votey. Refreshments will be served.

Mr. Nixon is a graduate of the Carnegie Institute of Technology in Pittsburgh. He worked as G.E.'s Flight Propulsion Lab in Evandale and the Knolls Atomic Power Lab in Schenectady before he assumed his present post. While in Schenectady he thrice received awards from the Schenectady Junior Chamber of Commerce for distinguished service to the community. In 1970 he was also awarded G.E.'s "Donald L. Philippe Medal for Distinguished Public Service." Since 1970 he has served as a consultant on the G-E Corporate Administrative Staff in New York, in all matters pertaining to equal employment opportunity and minority relations.

Communication Test For Education Majors

Any upperclass student who wishes to be accepted into a program in a teaching field in Art, Elementary or Secondary Education, Home Economics, Music, Physical Education or Vocational-Technical Education, must pass a written communication test. Proficiency in the use and range of vocabulary, logical expression of ideas, paragraph arrangement, sentence structure and spelling is judged on the basis of a few paragraphs, written on a suggested subject. The test will be given Tuesday evening, September 26 in the Life Sciences Bldg. auditorium and Thursday evening, September 28 in Room 106 Cook Bldg., beginning at 7:00 p.m. Students should sign up immediately in Room 311 Waterman for the evening of their choice.

Cunningham Newman Center Upcoming Events

On Thursday evening, September 28th, at 7:30 p.m., Dr. Karl Reidel, Director of Environmental Studies at UVM, will give a brief presentation and lead a discussion on environmental problems. The presentation is entitled "Whose Eye is on the Sparrow", and will take place at the Cunningham Newman Center on Redstone Campus.

Members at the Cunningham Newman Center invited its participants to boycott non-union lettuce. The money normally used to buy lettuce at the Center was used to purchase Bibles for student distribution.

Again this weekend, the theme of the Newman Center Services will be ecology. A stream will be placed upon the Biblical notion which describes the relationship between man and his environment as one of interdependence and excludes any type of exploitation. The readings, prayers, responses, slides, sermon and music evolve around this theme. The lobby at the chapter entrance displays posters which describe the ecological problem.

The Catholic Center at the University of Vermont was dedicated to the memory of Dr. John C. Cunningham on Friday, September 1, 1972. The tribute was paid to the late Burlington doctor and UVM faculty member in recognition of his years of service to the Center, especially as chairman of its Board of Trustees.

Do you know anyone interested in learning about Roman Catholicism? A course is being offered at the Newman Center, Redstone Campus, every Wednesday, 7:00-8:00. This week the presentation is "Jesus in the Scriptures." Instructor: Fr. Moscatello. No charge.

THE VERMONT CYNIC

Editorial

SA, Sadly, Still The Same

The Student Association hierarchy has apparently not learned from its experiences. Last year a select group of people attempted to railroad a poorly worded and vague constitution past students whose interests were affected. The S.A. met with some unexpected opposition, most notably from fraternities and sororities.

This year the call has gone out from Olympus for new electoral procedures and a new financial policy for student organizations. Quite frankly, the proposed financial policy is just another attempt by a few people - some elected, some selected - to consolidate their power. Fraternities, sororities, IGA, and all student organizations would do well to find out exactly where their best interests lie. The Cynic thinks that the financial policy, in particular, is unfortunate, and we hope to see it either drastically altered or scrapped completely.

And in regard to Dick Cassidy's remarks at the Tuesday Senate meeting that it is "just too bad" if some people get hassled, we disagree completely. If it is "just too bad" for anybody, it is for the Student Association officers who insist on perpetuating mistrust of the S.A. by unbecoming procedures.

The Cynic editorial page, VOICE, is your page. Columns and letters to the editor are strongly encouraged so that every inch on this page will reflect the thinking of the University of Vermont community. Also, cartoons are welcomed.

Deadline for columns and letters is Monday at noon. Copy may be dropped off at the Cynic office, located downstairs in Billings Center, or at the Student Activities desk, located upstairs.

Names must be signed on letters, but they will be withheld upon request. Names are required on all columns.

U.S. War Machine Is Costly, Especially When Americans Suffer

by Scott McKay, Mark Butterfield

In fiscal 1972, the United States spent approximately $72 billion on "defense." In 1973 the Nixon administration requested $81.6 billion to fund the Pentagon's activities, and received almost everything asked for, with Congress making only token cuts, despite Senator McGovern's efforts to hold 1973 military spending to the 1972 level. By 1975, the Nixon administration's defense budget will be spending $100 billion a year on our armaments.

Such staggering sums become even more meaningful when one considers that the federal budget deficit, the largest item in the federal budget, sixty cents out of every tax dollar we pay to Washington is used to finance past and present military activities. By contrast, only 18 cents is spent on human resources, such as education, job training, and health, and such items as agriculture, rural development, environmental cleanup, commerce, transport, community development and housing must make do with only 11 cents. It is interesting to look at some of the things we could buy with the money we are now using for weapons.

For example, the unfunded applications for water and sewer grants from the Department of Housing and Urban Development for 1973 budget total over $4 billion, which is approximately the cost overrun (to November, 1971) on the F-111 aircraft program. The cost one Huey helicopter (used in Indochina) is about equal to the cost of building 66 low cost, 2-bedroom homes. The funding for the National Health Service Corps, designed to improve health services in rural areas, is $22 million below Congressionally authorized levels. This amount is one half the cost increase requested by the Nixon administration in 1973 for the Lockheed Cheyenne helicopter. The Census Bureau's 1971 estimate of the cost of bringing all poor Americans - 25.5 million people - above the poverty line is $1.4 billion, which is also the current Pentagon estimate of the cost of the B-1 Bomber, without equipment. The overrun to date on this plane, not one prototype of which has been completed, is about $2.1 billion, which is equal to the cost of the Federal Child Care program for child nutrition, health and day care voted by President Nixon in December, 1971.

There are many other examples of what we are foregoing in order to finance the U.S. war machine, but this space is insufficient to cover them. It is clear, however, that we could be doing many other things here at home with this money. As President Dwight D. Eisenhower, a man Richard Nixon professes to admire greatly, said in 1953, "Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket fired signifies, in the final sense, a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, those who are cold and are not clothed." Some, such as Mr. Nixon, argue that these massive military budgets are necessary for our national security. Critics of this idea, such as candidate George McGovern, raise the fundamental question of just how much the military establishment is needed, and just how much money provides us with costly "overkill" capacity.

The current administration is of the opinion that the

The Atomic Energy Commission A Body Regulating Atomic Power Is The Same Group Promoting It

by Gene Beaudoin

THE A.E.C. or How Not to Govern Atomic Energy in the United States.

John F. Kennedy observed: "The men who create power make an indispensable contribution to the nation's greatness. But the men who question power make a contribution just as indispensable - for they determine whether we use power or power uses us." The question of power faces us all. How much power and for whom are among the important aspects of the question.

It is said by most valuable sources that the power demands for the year 2000 will triple, when compared with present rates. Some estimates are higher. While the year 2000 sounds very remote, for those of us who are twenty-one years old we will have reached the still young age of forty-nine. At this point the questions become far more pertinent. Power demands are statistics and, like most statistics can be used to fit the need. However, at the rate we are presently consuming power, by the year 2000 the needs will be far greater than they are now. One of the basic assumptions of those who would argue that we must meet the demands of the year 2000 is that the basic rate of consumption at present is a proper and correct one. The people who are presently setting the course for mankind, in terms of power, are the power merchants. Last we not forget: the business of business. Behind all of the statistics and curves are dollar signs. It would be wrong to blame one company, for many in the business have felt similarly but to make the first step would be to cut one's economic throat. It is indeed up to the people and therefore the government. The perfect analogy in government is the Atomic Energy Commission.

The Atomic Energy Commission, established by Act 42 U.S.C. 2031 has been delegated sole regulatory powers with respect to the atomic energy program, including the power to "make and promulgate, issue, rescind, and amend such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Charter." With this the Commission maintains that it has been the exclusive jurisdiction with respect to radiological safety matters. The Act goes on to explicitly vest sole regulatory authority in the Commission to license all aspects of the production, transportation, ownership, possession, import, export, acquisition or utilization of production or utilization facilities, including all nuclear generating facilities. The unbelievable Act goes on to give the Commission all regulatory power with reference to the health and safety of the general public. This includes the setting of all standards for health and safety.

Beyond all this the Act also gives the Commission promotional authority which includes research and development, public promotion, and further directs the A.E.C. to "exercise its power to insure" the development and utilization of atomic energy and radioactive material.

There have been many controversies about the A.E.C. They have ranged from recommended uranium mining processes to emergency core cooling systems for reactors. While I will not deal with those at this writing they are and have been numerous. The basic conflict involved is between the regulation and promotion phases of the A.E.C. It makes little sense to even the layman, to vest in one commission the decision of how much radiation the public or certain classes of people will be exposed to and at the same time be vested with the power to promote and engage in activities which inherently increase such risks. It has been pointed out that this is even a violation of the due-process principle that no man shall judge his own cause.

There is an irreconcilable paradox within the Atomic Energy Commission between its regulatory and promotional functions. Until the time that this basic problem is corrected all of the questions of radiation and atomic energy cannot be answered clearly or objectively.

Fields Become Concrete Cemeteries By MAT

by Steven C. Rice

I'm beginning to think machines, like bulldozers and earth-movers, are okay when they don't work. Last week, when they were working, I kept praying they run out of gas, or, better yet, have nervous breakdowns.

I'm one of those unfortunate souls who lives in the Marsh-Austin-Tupper complex. There used to be a time, not too long ago, when I could place my arm around a woman, and look at the sunset across the green from her window, sharing the moment's splendor. There used to be a time, not too long ago, when a group of guys played football or basketball on the grassy fields.

The green is gone. In its place is a modern and ugly, concrete block-out the evening sun. Early every morning, the bulldozers and earth-movers hum along singing a not too happy tune about progress.

Last week, a field below our dormitory on Spear Street, leading to a grocery store, was ripped to shreds. On my first Sunday here, I had sat there, listening to a crickets' song. Only days later, it was destroyed; it didn't take long. Destruction never does.

What was a field of tall grass, and paths, created by human feet, becomes a cemetery, dedicated in the name of human progress. When it becomes a road, you won't be able to plant a flower there; seeds don't grow in concrete.

Cat Stevens sings, "Where do the children play?" and that's how I feel when the machines roll along.

A Conflict Of Interest?

When A UVM Seller Is A UVM Trustee

by William Bowman

Students at this University are subject to many decisions over which we have no control; in matters of tuition, faculty, housing, and the quality of our own education. The University manipulates students to its own advantage, in many ways unknown to the student. The health insurance policy is one such example.

The agency which administers the student health insurance is the Allen Agency of Burlington. This agency is headed by Mr. Howard A. Allen Jr., who is also a member of the University of Vermont Board of Trustees. Could there be a connection here? The insurance policy was also offered under a negative option, meaning that a student had to make an effort not to pay for it. This practice is questionable at best.

The new Saga meal plan is also worth questioning. For the sixteen week, twenty meal plan, a student pays $389.00, or $18.90 a week, or $9.00 a meal. This year Saga was nice enough to allow students the option of buying either 20, 15, 12, or 9 meals per week. This idea sounds good, until price is considered. For fifteen meals per week, students pay $1.10 per meal; for twelve meals a week, $1.30 per meal; and for nine meals a week, $1.60 per meal. If Saga has a reasonable explanation for the $70 per meal price differential, would they please tell us?

Latest news from the Board of Trustees is that a student representative to the board has resigned. His reasons: "I had no vote on the board as a whole and felt we were being used as show case members." Apparently the Board of Trustees wants to maintain a front of democratic process, in order to placate the students, while giving the students no real control.

Lastly, rumor has it that the Philosophy Department graduate program may be phased out. Could this have anything to do with the ideology of certain members of that department. The ghost of Michael Parenti still walks.

The above information points up the fact that the University administration, and Board of Trustees do not have the best interests of the students at heart. It is the students who must care, and take the time to control their own education. The administration and Board of Trustees either will not, or cannot.

Letter

Jughandle Unneeded

Dear Editor,

Gene Beaudoin's article should be food for thought for our university officials and highway department planners.

The "jughandle" is the manifestation of the philosophy of our highway department that Gene writes of. That philosophy would seem to be "progress for progress' sake", accommodate the automobile oriented segment of our society, and put as much land as possible under asphalt.

Unless the highway department is right, and we want our city laid under miles of asphalt and lined with highways, the time for change has come! We can no longer live in an automobile age, where our cities are automobile cities. Highways foster cars, which in turn become cause for more highways. This vicious circle must be stopped!

The question of the "jughandle" has been answered. Without regard for the environment or the concerned citizens of Burlington, the "jughandle" is being built. May it only serve as an example of what will happen if the "progress" of the automobile and the highway department is allowed to continue!

Unique Construction Site Attracts Attention

by Dan Haskin Taunted by local residents as "the living and learning center", that new monstrosity of mud and bricks on Main and Spear Streets is fast becoming the most talked about building on campus.

Students have been cautiously eyeing the construction program and working out their minds the mass which is slowly taking shape. It isn't as puzzling as it looks, but it is as unique a building as 5.7 million dollars can buy.

The idea of living and learning center was born around 1955 when many other colleges were looking for alternatives to traditional education. It is founded on the principle that from research we know how much of our learning processes are developed from outside the classroom. Studies have proven that learning derived from social interaction of living together occurs, best within groups of five to ten people.
Combine this with 600 students and faculty living in cooperation with each other and experiencing a one-to-one ratio of academic and social contact, and you have the ideology of UVM's living and learning center.

It is unique in design and technique as well as purpose.
In design, it is one central building of a common room atmosphere, flanked by five residential buildings which house classrooms in each to create the total live-and-learn experience. Each floor of the residential buildings has three wings of apartment-type dwellings. The "apartment" contains six rooms and two baths and is designed to accommodate seven students.
The total complex will house an estimated 600 students. At present, the living and learning center is a cluster of buildings without a purpose. However, the physical structure is flexible enough for most any use. There will be fifteen faculty apartments for the live-in faculty and offices for the visiting participant faculty.
Some special features incorporated into the design are pottery and poster shops, an arena theater which double as a dance floor, and a dining area for both intimate and group dining, indoors and outdoors. There is also a large common area in the main building to include and welcome students from other dormitories. Adjacent to this is a snack bar which is strategically built to be a focal point of social activity.

Perhaps most unique about the living and learning center is the technique which was used in its creation. In normal construction of a building, a school would hire an architectural firm to design the building and from solicited contractor's bids accept the lowest for construction of the building. Such was the case of Harris-Millis which, after having begun construction, was going to cost a million dollars more than had been anticipated. Since the money was not available, one whole floor was eliminated from construction as were many of the extras such as painted rooms. Determined to do better with the living and learning center, the University of Vermont started a new concept known as "design-build" where the building is first planned in words according to the needs of the students and faculty for an academic and residential setting.

A book was written about these needs and sent to architectural firms who, in turn, submitted plans for the complex. A point system determined the merits of each contractor's bid, and finally those of the Carlson Corporation of Massachusetts were chosen. UVM saved thousands of dollars in the planning stages of this new building and had offered a model to institutions all over the country! It was known from the start that the building cost no more than 5.7 million dollars with which to put the building into operation. This
furnishings and interior work as well as the extensive landscaping needed to screen
the center from Main Street.

So, from the choice of eleven sites, two and a half years of planning, a dream is being realized. The hard work of many students, faculty, and administrators involved will become worthwhile when the center is opened August 1, 1973, a memorial to learning from example, and an ideology of being able to live and learn.

IRA Announces

by Jeanne Cook
"Yes, I can!" is the new slogan of IRA (Inter-Residence Association) intended to make students more aware of their dorm government and to involve them in plans to get "things" moving.

In the past two years IRA has attempted to provide the needed unity for all the dorms on campus. It has served as the direct contact to the administrative offices where both grievances and ideas are channeled—if an attempt to better dorm life.

This year Sigmund Heller is IRA's new president. In his words, "IRA is the dorm government concerned with services, social functions and educational facilities. In the past the University ended the academic role in the classroom.
I'd like to see this changed. I'd like to see that education continues into the living quarters. We could have students and professors speak on a variety of topics, show documentary films, set up dark rooms, etc."

This is basically the major concern of IRA this year: to make available in the dorm activities that students want to participate in. Heller is interested in organizing those projects and social activities that will get the kids together.
He says, "IRA is for all students, not to be left for other people. It should be used by the student.

Dorm Activities

Some ideas that are presently in the works are the bicycle repair shop, setting up dark rooms in each dorm complex, a craft shop, and more dances (like Harris-Millis). There is an infinite number of possibilities to be explored and IRA would pay for the funds. Although SA still has some financial responsibility over IRA, there is a new policy being innovated to make it a completely independent organization. This year IRA has available a good budget for the very purpose of carrying out these plans.

IRA will meet every week beginning September 18 in the Harris-Millis conference room. Everyone is welcome to attend these meetings. For IRA can only be as effective as a student government as the students, themselves, make it.

Goal Of McGovern Drive Is Voter Registration

UVM students for McGovern recently launched their campaign with a highly successful organizational meeting at WDW Lounge. At the meeting, over eighty students were enlisted to support Senator McGovern's campaign at UVM.

The students for McGovern plan to blanket the campus in search for McGovern voters.
They are at present canvassing
all university residence halls, fraternities and sorority houses in order to determine how many students are registered and to obtain a reading of what issues are of greatest concern to UVM students.

Co-Chairmen for the student McGovern effort are Scott Mackay and Mark Butterfield.
Mark is a Rutland, VT junior majoring in political science.
Scott is also a junior poli. sci.
major and he has been from Dudley, Mass. Both Mackay and Butterfield served as McGovern delegates to the Vermont State Democratic Convention and worked in McGovern's pre-convention campaign.

Managing the Dormitory canvass drive is Dick Cassidy, a Rutland sophomore, who is in the experimental program. Bill Kline of SAE is directing the McGovern fraternity-sorority effort.

As the main emphasis of the campaign will be that of registering voters, the students for McGovern plan to use student resources to register many students as possible. Sig Wysolmerski, a junior and member of Army ROTC is running this McGovern registration effort.

Any student who wants to work to make Senator McGovern President McGovern should contact Dick Cassidy,

TEACHER-INTENSIVE FOR STUDENTS

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

The University Players' Welcome Scene

Imagine for a moment having just experienced the Broadway musical smash hit HAIR or JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR or LENNY or any exuberant production on Broadway or Off Broadway or Off Off Broadway or any exciting and dramatic performance anywhere in the world, and being so "moved", so captivated, so dazzled that for an instant you were on that stage, you were among the audience with illumination, with transcending reality, with vibrant, magnetic energies until they felt as if you, that they themselves, the very essence of their split-second thoughts and stifled emotions and grating souls had been expressed, at last, communicated and understood, cut and healed, through you, through the production through the "tour de force" presented on that stage!

Imagine then, in the aftermath of the deluge, you stood somewhere on the outside, perhaps on a promenade, the flashing marquee, the enthralled, enthusiastic shoulder to shoulder crowd, and wanting to be back on the inside, this time in costume, in the Green Room, relaxing, exhausted, embraced by the Theater. So you think, where do I begin, who do I turn to, what must I learn to be an actor or actress or director or set-designer or stage technician?

Now you are at U.V.M. Now you have a chance to learn, to check it out, to find your way through the labyrinth. We'll help you. We want to help you! We'll show you how you can make it. We'll welcome you into the art and the craft and rising current of drama, of comedy, of Theater in all its cascading forms. Communication is our way of life, our macro-people diet of relationships. We are the University Players! We exist everywhere once you know us, and when we're on stage, we're on the threshold of your mind. So come and see us, rap with us, discover us and we'll recover you. On Tuesday night, September 26th at 7:00 in the Green Room of the Arena Theater in the bowels of the Fleming Museum, we're having another open meeting, another gathering, and we'd like to have you there with us. It could be the best thing you've done for yourself since imagining you wanted to, for a moment, be anywhere, anytime at all.

These students and members of the Burlington community interested in attending or participating in U.V.M.'s theatre productions should be prepared for an entertaining schedule of events. This semester, the members of the university theatre department will present two major productions.

The opening presentation at the Arena Theater will be a play by Anton Chekhov entitled "The Three Sisters." Directed by Dr. Edward Feidner in 1953, this play will once again be performed under his direction October 26-29. The director described Chekhov's work as a portrait of a provincial town in Russia at the eve of the Revolution of 1905.

Following this Russian drama will be the presentation of Luigi Pasquello's "Right You Are If You Think You Are." Directed by Mr. Christopher Lane, the play will be performed in mid-November.

Both directors are prominent figures in the university theatre community. Dr. Feidner, a graduate of Ohio University, is the director of drama at U.V.M. and the producer-director of the Champlain Shakespeare Festival. For the past two summers, he has also been a guest director at the Monomoy Theatre in Chatham Cape Cod, Mass. Mr. Lane is presently the visiting associate professor of drama at U.V.M. Formerly the director of theatre at Ohio University, he is now executive-director of the Monomoy Theatre.

In addition to these performances, there will be a series of one-act plays presented by the department's directing class during the first week of December. The traditional open house on "Friday at Four" will also continue this year at the Arena Theater. These weekly gatherings are free of admission charge, and allow any person or group to perform or present any theatrical entertainment.

This week's "Friday at Four" will present two films written and produced by Jan Quackenbush. A veteran of U.V.M., Jan has now returned after a three year absence. He spent part of this interim serving in the army, and the remainder in England writing plays and films. Mr. Quackenbush has become a published playwright whose work has been aired over the British Broadcasting Company. Perhaps the most exciting venture this academic year will occur during the spring semester. Dr. Feidner and the other department members have scheduled the premier of a new rock opera titled "The Covenant." Based upon the Jewish folklore of Moses on the mountain, this opera was written and will be directed by Jan. Goldstein, a senior at U.V.M. "The Covenant" will be the final production in the Arena Theater, as the University will open its new theatre in the military science building next fall.

All students, faculty, and Burlington residents are encouraged to audition for these productions. The department also welcomes volunteers to work on the technical or artistic staff involved with each presentation.

While good tickets still remain for the 7:30 Blood, Sweat & Tears performance, the best tickets are available for the second show at 10:30 p.m.

Tickets, priced at $6, $5.25, $4.50, and $3.75, may be purchased in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman.

Blood, Sweat & Tears will appear under Lane Series auspices at Memorial Auditorium on Thursday, Oct. 5, in two performances, 7:30 and 10:30.

Single concert admissions are also available now for the Beryozka Dance Co., on Tuesday, Oct. 5, 8:30 p.m., in Memorial Auditorium. A limited number of tickets, $6, $5.25, $4.50, and $3.75, may be picked up in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman.

The Beryozka Dance Co., is one of the largest and most lavish concert series ever to be presented by the Lane Series. Direct from the Soviet Union, and after two weeks in New York City, the company consists of 100 men and women dancers, singers and musicians—all fully costumed. The critics have hailed the group as one with vitality, discipline, and rhythmic and inventive color.

Series tickets are also available to all the Lane performances on a pick-your-own concert basis, whereby each subscriber may make up his own series of 6, 9, 12, or 15 events. Prices range from $13, $20, $26, and $33 for six concerts to $33, $43, $53 and $60 for all fifteen.

The remaining concerts include the Buenos Aires Ballet, Oct. 12; the Broadway play "Marigolds," Oct. 25; the Fine Arts Quartet, Oct. 28; "An Entertainment for Elizabeth," featuring the New York Pro Musica, Nov. 2; Danny Davis and the Nashville Brass, country music with the big band sound, Nov. 9; comedienne Lily Tomlin of TV's "Laugh-In," Nov. 20; the Chicago Symphony, conducted by Georg Solti; baritone Robert Merrill of the Metropolitan Opera, Feb. 12; "Sleuth," the thriller mystery play still on London's West End and Broadway, March 20; the new musical "Godspell," April 16; pianist Zoltan Kocsis, April 25; the Broadway musical "Applause," May 3; and a major pop artist, to be announced.

WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY

American Language

COMPLETE REFERENCE EDITION

This new, completely revised WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY, based on the same exacting lexicographic standards as the first edition, is the only dictionary specifically designed for Americans in the 1970s.

New with more entries, more pages than any other college dictionary. There are over 157,000 entries in the 1,728 pages of this edition, including over 20,000 new terms and meanings. And it adds important new features no other dictionary can claim:

The only college dictionary that tells you which words and meanings were born in America. Over 12,000 terms or meanings which first became part of the language in the United States.

The only college dictionary with etymologies of American place names. For the first time in any general dictionary of the language, the origin and explanation of the names of American cities, states, rivers, etc. are given.

SECOND COLLEGE EDITION

WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY

of the American Language

COMPLETE REFERENCE EDITION

These unique features in the Second College Edition of WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY are important advances. But equally important is the tradition of excellence which World's large, permanent staff of lexicographers has carried forward.

Every entry is written from a contemporary, American point of view, either prepared afresh or carefully reexamined and reconstructed to bring it in line with the latest findings. Technical definitions were written by or for leading specialists in every discipline. And thousands of usage examples and synonyms help you choose precisely the right word to convey just the right nuance of meaning.

More detailed etymologies than those of any comparable book are included, carried back wherever possible to a hypothetical Indo-European base.

All entries in a single alphabetical listing, with names of people and places, foreign expressions, abbreviations, etc., all right up in the main body of the book rather than in several time-consuming appendices.

Large, easily read type on glare-free white pages—both especially selected to make these pages the most inviting and readable of all dictionary texts.

All these features are part of the first dictionary of the 1970s. They guarantee that, for years to come, this Second College Edition of WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY will be the most useful desk dictionary you can own.

by Tim Lewis

Well, there you sit, enjoying one medium. By the way, how's your wash doing? Or are you just sitting in Cook or Billings hiding your time, cutting classes, or engaging in the past time of observing the opposite sex? Did you know that at least one station of radio type is doing through your body right this moment? That's correct, if your teeth were tuners you could channel us in your head. Who's us? WRUV-AM. We're your radio station. We operate on carrier-current frequency of 580 khs. That's just below 6 on your radio dial.

Carrier-current means that we have a whole bunch of little transmitters scattered about the campus, in the dorms, and in other house locations. We feed our program to them via Ma Bell. Our program originates in a barn (the code name: Fomeroy Hall Annex). Though we were not trained or raised in the building, we have put it to good use.

In terms of equipment, our station houses two of the finest control rooms in the state of Vermont. It houses an extensive record collection, opportunities, and a group of radio nuts who are interested in you.

Now you say "What do these dudes sound like?" And we answer, "They sound like students and individuals interested in delivering good music to the campus." The station has a minimal format to insure uniformity, and plenty of time for freemform programs. WRUV-AM broadcasts 24 hours a day. When none of us are on the air, the boys of CHOM make sure that your speakers do not fall silent.

Hockey games will be an exciting feature this year. With returning veterans and new D.J.s, the staff believes we can offer everyone something, a song, a story, a friendly voice and perhaps a chance to be a D.J. So that's WRUV-AM 580. Briefly, call us at 3220, we'll listen to you, and hope that you'll be listening to us. If the phone is inadequate, stop by (we're located on those little yellow maps). Is it time to put the clothes in the dryer?

Album Review: Airplane's Latest Album Is 'Okay'

by Doug Collette

LONG JOHN SILVER, Jefferson Airplane (Grant FTR-1007)

Even if you love the Airplane as much as I do, you probably wonder sometimes about a collective sense of humor that could be politely termed eccentric. It's one thing to have a photo of a peanut butter and jelly sandwich on the inside cover of an album, but it's quite another to spend between five and ten minutes of an LP's playing time on cuts that are only barely amusing on first listening and from then on dreadfully boring (see "The Farm," "A Song For All Seasons," "Thank," and "Never Argue with a German if You're Tired or European Song"). It wouldn't be such a crime if the Airplane weren't one of America's most fertile and imaginative bands, but when you know the kind of brilliant rock and roll they're capable of, their comedic efforts really can't be judged objectively.

So one of the main strengths of the Airplane's newest opus is the complete absence of novelty, although there are places in which the tongue is firmly in cheek, that's part of the Airplane and each of these nine new selections is a 'serious' composition.

And the trend away from revolutionary distributives suggested by Sgt. Galt has seemingly been completed. Instead of the "upagainst-the-wall" inverting against the government men, we get a one-two punch at Christianity with the provocative "The Son of Jesus" and "Easter(?)". These two tracks, like Grace's "Aerie (Gang of Eagles)" and Paul's "Alexander The Medium" have the languid grandeur of their recent efforts, but because they don't have to overcome the questionable philosophy of their lyrics, they're much superior pieces.

By Kantner's own admission, Jefferson Airplane has of late left the rock and rolling to Hot Tuna, but on this LP, he and Grace provide their share of raucous electricity. His "Twilight Double Leader" has an aggressive energy missing from most of Bark plus that colorful free-association poetry I've always considered one of Paul's strong points. "Twilight double leader/Comin' home to please her/Walkin' on the Water -- Disappearing daughter/Citadel redeemer." "Long John Silver," for which Grace wrote lyrics to Jack Casady's music opens the album auspiciously with the raw slashing sound of early Airplane. The slightly ragged vocals on both are a perfect match for the band's sound which gains much of its strength from the looseness of its playing.

The production has improved seemingly because of Joey Covington's replacement by John Barbata, instead of the curious thinness of the last album, the increased presence of the new drummer's smooth, flowing work makes for a fuller sound which, coupled with a muddy mix, enhances a wash of sound best experienced at high volume.

In fact, Covington's best contribution to Jefferson Airplane may well have been introducing Papa John Creach into the group. The man's violin is now well integrated into the Airplane sound; he coars in "Aerie," gives a funky feel to the saucy "Milk Train" and besides doing some fancy interplay with Jorma, gives a graceful beauty to "Alexander."

The lead guitarist's "Trial by Fire" could've been a Hot Tuna number (in fact, it may be; Sammy Piazza does the drumming and the exquisite acoustic guitar sounds like Kaukonen), but the focus of the song, in an Easy Riderish realm, makes it inappropriate for the Airplane-offshoot. The other Kaukonen song, "Bat Starch Mom" ends the album as it began, with tough fiery rock and roll. It doesn't sound as though recent throat troubles have hampered the Slick voice because here her vocal chords ring rich and resonant and Jorma's lead is absolutely scorching.

Although the departure of Marty Balin and Spencer Dryden destroyed the band that produced After Bathing At Asteria and Crane of Creation, Jefferson Airplane are now wholly reconstituted as a new band. The addition of Barbata, Papa John and most recently former Quicksilver member and an old crony of Kantner's David Freiberg (three-part harmonies may return yet!), this group possesses as much versatile talent as any rock and roll unit I can think of.

And even though I don't hear anything on this record that approaches the high points of those earlier albums, Long John Silver is definitely the most uniformly satisfying Airplane LP literally in years. Moreover the fact that it appears less than a year after their previous effort is a further indication that Jefferson Airplane are well on their way to a full revitalization and if their next release restores them to the hierarchy of American rock and roll groups.

'When You See This, Remember Me'

Tuesday, September 26th, the Fleming Museum is presenting the new and exciting film "Gertrude Stein: When This You See Remember Me." This film is a portrait of a woman and an artist - Gertrude Stein, and a time and a place. Paris in the first quarter of the century. The thoughts, words, and presence of this woman flow richly through this 90 min. portrayal of the author's Paris years (from 1905 to the 1930's). The San Francisco Chronicle has called it "The most fascinating documentary of the year," and last year it was nominated for an Emmy Award as Best Cultural Documentary. "When This You See Remember Me" will begin at 8:00 pm in Johnson Auditorium - 101 S. Valley Science Hall, UVM. Admission is free.

OVP Needs Elementary School Tutors

In previous years through the Office of Volunteer Programs, various tutoring projects have been running in area elementary schools. These projects call for university students to volunteer about two hours per week to help a child with difficulties he may be having in his school subjects. By being in such a program, it affords the university student the chance to work with another person, to become familiar with a school and to use himself as a means for helping another person. What the child gets is the realization that someone cares, and whatever else the tutor puts into it.

Presently there is a

Tutoring-Enrichment Program being offered at Lawrence Barnes School on North Street. In addition to the actual tutoring, the students and tutors plan various field trips. Programs are being set up at the H.O. Wheeler School on Archibald Street, and the Champlain School on Pine Street. Volunteers are needed for all three of these programs. Please contact Cathy Wood, ext. 3086 or OVP, upstairs Billings. INVEST YOURSELF!

WHY WOULD A WOMAN AT UVM WANT TO TAKE ROTC?

She probably wouldn't. But she might be interested in taking some courses with ROTC students. Military affairs are certainly important to all of us, so why shouldn't the UVM coed enroll in one or two of the following courses to be offered in 72/73 by the Department of Military Studies?

MS 1 Introduction to Military Studies. Fall Semester. Relationship of war to society; impact of technology on warfare; role of logistics and administration. Political, social, economic factors making up current military power. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 2 U.S. Defense Establishment. Spring Semester. Organization of Department of Defense. Process of formulating national security policy. Impact of economic factors on the decision making process. Case studies of current issues affecting national security. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 12 Contemporary World Military Scene. Spring Semester. Seminar on current international uses of military forces, viewed against a background of long-range national concerns, especially of U.S., Western European countries, U.S.S.R., China. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

Don't expect to find drill, or marksmanship, or first aid in these courses. Don't expect to be reading Field Manuals. Do expect to find provocative questions raised by the faculty and by the commercial texts to be used, such as Military Power and Possibility by Knorr; How to Control the Military by Gellwag; Defense Strategies for the Seventies by Halperin; and others.

Lars Wallen, Brad Rixford and Larry Allen, with the help of the soccer team will try to bring the championship to UVM once more.

UVM Booters Young But Mature

by Gina Goldberg
"We have a winning tradition and that makes it easier," UVM soccer coach Don Soderberg replied when asked about the upcoming season.
That point manifests itself even further after closer inspection of past records. Seven of the last eight years UVM has either won or tied for the Yankee Conference crown.
For a team to consistently win, there must be talent and UVM is continually supplied from within the state.
"Vermont is a natural soccer bed," said Soderberg. He added, "the soccer programs have improved to the point where the players are equal to those turned out by the traditional soccer states."
This year's team is led by captain Jack Shag, Pete Brown, last year's leading scorer, and Vince Mazzoni. Brown and Mazzoni were All-New England in 1971.
Other leading players are Chris Chappell who returns after being All Yankee Conference as a sophomore, John Hugert and Lars Wallen, both fullbacks and Larry Allen and Brad Rixford who are halfbacks. Promising freshmen include Knute Galbunden, and Paul Austin. There are three candidates for goalie and that might be the only weak spot.
However, Soderberg stated, "Depth will be the key and we should have capable players at all positions."
With only four seniors, it would appear that UVM is in for a prosperous future. There is such depth that Soderberg commented, "We're two deep at every position and could field two equal teams. The line is almost intact and the fullbacks have played together before."
Knowing that everyone will be gunning for UVM makes things even more difficult for the coaching staff. Soderberg feels the team must be prepared and can have no setbacks. "I try not to apply the pressure and the kids are loose. It should be a great season," said Soderberg.
UVM plays a 13-game schedule this year, with Boston U. being the new addition. Soderberg feels URI and UConn will be the tough foes in the conference. Outside, Bridgeport should prove to be the opposition. Vermont will be home to Bridgeport on September 30. "If we can come into that game undefeated, we'll be in great shape," Soderberg concluded.

From The Editor

by Tom Farris
The time of year has come which all of us like: the season when man does his football uniform and plays either actively or from the stands.
This year the UVM Catamounts face an exciting schedule of football, and though a division title is not likely, we should see some fast-action on the field. The following is my outlook for the first two games.
The football team returns to the grid iron with most of last year's players returning. With this experienced group, hopefully the Cats will be able to better their last year's division mark of 2-3-0.
This weekend UVM plays UConn away. Last year we defeated the former conference champs 20-7. It must be remembered though Connecticut was starting with a new team, having graduated most of its first string the year before. With a year of experience beneath their belts, UConn could be tough.
By far the toughest team the Cats face will be the Engineers of Lehigh. This power house from Pennsylvania trounced the Cats last year and we can look forward to the same this year. The only consolation is that it will be an away game.
In conclusion, though it is not my purpose to make predictions, I think UVM will take Connecticut, provided they play smart football and don't have a case of the droopies. Lehigh will be a hopeless game for Vermont with the Engineers walking all over us as they did last year.

Hindaight US - USSR Basketball

by Stuart Dedopoulos
During one of last year's NBA play-off games between the New York Knicks and the Boston Celtics, Bill Russell, the ABC news man, noted that although Boston was trailing by a point with about 5 seconds to go, and although Boston had possession of the basketball, the game would not be won or lost in those last few seconds regardless of the outcome. The game was really won or lost, Russell said, in the first half.
He was right of course. Boston did miss the shot and went on to lose to the inferior New York squad, but the mistakes that had been made earlier in the game cost Boston the victory. The futile last shot got all the headlines while few really understood what happened.
Thus it was in the 1972 Olympics. Although the call at the end of the U.S.-U.S.S.R. gold medal basketball game was questionable, the outcome had been decided much earlier by the execution, or each thereof, of certain plays and assignments. Don't let the controversy cloud the fact that the U.S. took its first and only lead with 3 seconds to go or that the Russians led as many as 12 points in the first half. That is the real story of the game.
Everyone was disturbed because the U.S. win streak was broken on a questionable call. However, regardless of that call it should have been obvious that the U.S. was no longer in a class by itself, and defeat was just a question of time.

State colleges and universities could lose between $250-million and $300-million a year if newly enfranchised students are allowed to use their status as local voters to avoid the higher fees normally charged to out-of-staters.

This is the estimate in a new study of the uncertain future of out-of-state tuition conducted by Robert Carbone, dean of the college education at the University of Maryland. The study was done for the National State - University Land-Grant American Agricultural Colleges included were 362 four-year colleges, the bulk of those from the eastern United States.

Public universities in 15 states - California, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas, and Wisconsin - lost up to 30 percent of the students.

by Jeff Ewen

Early in 1972 the Vermont State Legislature passed a bill requiring, as of July 1, 1972, a tax of four mills on all nonreturnable bottles and cans sold in the state. The law further provided for a complete ban on such containers after July 1, 1973. This means that beverage could be sold in Vermont only if they came in returnable bottles or cans.

Until a few years ago, returnable bottles were quite common, and, the Vermont Public Interest Research Group has learned that a return to usage of bottles of this type would require only slight mechanical adjustments in the bottling process, and would thus cause local bottlers no great hardships. Those who have their beverages shipped from out of state would face no insurmountable difficulties, either, for national bottlers still produce beverages returnable bottles. The on-real problem bottling companies in Vermont would face is that of cans, for none the local beverage companies currently possess the means recycle these containers.

VPIRG has discovered that bottlers in the state are taking steps to comply with the ban on non-alcoholic beverages will go into effect. The reason for the bottling is that nothing is stronger than water, they are convinced. They will be represented in the Legislature by a lobbyist who has hired Henry Blum, a former attorney general, for a representative of the new legislation in January.

The Vermont Research Center for Public Policy, a public policy research center, has been formed to publicize the beverage industry's position. None of the industry's members will be compensated for the VPIRG's statement.

Last week, the industry committed itself to a referendum from the voters on the container ban. The industry formed a referendum committee to repeal of the ban.

The board of the Vermont session at the University of South Buffalo, New York, in September, will discuss the strategy for the referendum. This meeting will discuss both the Vermont and the two meetings in the bottle ban.

Barbara Cochran Supports Nixon, Heads State Youth Campaign

By Barbara Frankel
Barbara Cochran, United States Olympic skier and UVM student, is also the youth representative to the Vermont Committee for the Re-election of the President and nominally in charge of youth in the state.

Ms. Cochran joined the committee, which includes Governor Davis and Congressman Maloney, because, "If I didn't do something like this now, I wouldn't have another chance." Although her main job is supposed to be getting youth involved, Barbara has not been very involved yet. The Committee, however, had told her at the onset that she "could do just as much as she had time for."

The basic objective of the youth organizers for the President, according to Barbara, is to start a youth movement in each high school and college in Vermont. This includes getting speakers, volunteers and voter registration. They plan an active canvassing campaign for voter registration in the near future. At UVM, a booth in Billings Center is going to be opened soon for Nixon supporters.

Barbara Cochran supports President Nixon because he is "much more realistic than McGovern and is seriously trying to end the war." She continued, "McGovern is not very rational. He always makes up his mind and then changes it. It's just like the Eagleton thing - first he supported him 100% and then..." She feels that at least half the youth support Nixon and that the President will probably win the election. "As for the war," stated Ms. Cochran, "I supported the blockade. After all, when you're in a war, if you're going to fight, then fight. We must, however, take care of the POW's before we pull out. But President Nixon is doing as much as he can. Draft deserters, however, should definitely not be given amnesty. If they've broken the law they should be punished. They should not be allowed back in the U.S. with no penalty."

She supports Hackett in the gubernatorial campaign because "I approve of his views on Vermont. I like the idea of keeping the state agricultural; we don't need any more industry."

McGovern's economic policies and particularly his views on taxation have met with some disagreement by Barbara, who feels that an equal distribution of wealth would be fair. "If a person has worked hard or even been lucky, then he shouldn't be taxed to give money to the poor. He should be taxed a little, but shouldn't be punished because he's richer. I definitely don't believe in proportionate taxing."

Barbara's views on other subjects included: federal support to education - "In Vermont colleges are too expensive. There should be something done to lower tuition,"; environment - "Something has to be done soon. There should be stronger support for anti-pollution efforts and for ZPG,"; abortion - "Every woman should be able to choose for herself. It is not a federal issue but of state concern,"; legalization of marijuana - "I don't think it should be legalized because they don't know whether or not it is addicting or leads up to harder drugs. There should, however, be more done on heroin addiction."

Barbara Cochran feels that President Nixon is doing an excellent job and hopes that he will continue to do so for another four years. She plans on becoming more actively involved in the campaign in the future. A Youth for Nixon office will be opening shortly on Church St. and she intends to visit there frequently.

McGovern 43%, Nixon 26%, In First Poll Of UVM Students

Editor's Note: This is the first of three polls on the presidential election to be conducted by the Cynic. The second poll will appear in two weeks and the third will appear two weeks later. Approximately 350 students were sampled in the dormitories, fraternities and sororities and off-campus. Our goal is to reach 1,000 students in each of the succeeding polls. A large percentage of students remain undecided in their choice for president, a fact which should change significantly as the election draws nearer. Of the students polled, the three topics which were considered the main campaign issues were, in order of preference, the war in Viet Nam, the economy and welfare.

Senate Meeting Goes Smoothly, Except...

by Jeri Covey
Although the action on the floor of the SA Senate Tuesday night was relatively quiet, the smoothness of the proceedings was marred by a dispute of parliamentary procedure. The major question concerned the process of determining a quorum, and who makes the decision.

Jeff Cohn, substitute Senator from Buckham, during the debate on S.6, which calls for a regulation of the growth of incoming classes to UVM, asked "is there a quorum?" Bill Sisco, acting as temporary chairman, replied "the chair rules that there is a quorum."

In order to stop the meeting on the basis of quorum, an objection to the chair's ruling must be raised from the floor and passed by two-thirds of the Senators. An objection was raised by Ace Bugbee, but it was defeated. Previously, the procedure has been when quorum is called to take a count of the Senators present, and if a majority is not present the meeting is adjourned immediately.

Several Senators are unhappy with this new procedure. They say that it puts too much power in the hands of the chair and tends to give the "impression" of discrimination against minorities. Bill Sisco contended that the chair ruling on a quorum in this manner could be circumvented by someone making a motion to adjourn. However, according to Robert's Rules of Order Revised, a motion to adjourn, although privileged and undebatable, still requires a majority vote. (Section 17).

A policy statement on the responsibility and the procedures for recognition of student organizations by the SA was passed unanimously. This statement calls for the classification of the organizations dealing with recognized organizations in the SA constitution.

Also passed was a motion recommending that the student body, faculty, and administration have veto power over Board of Trustees decisions concerning significant construction projects or selling of University land. This motion grew out of the controversy over the jughandle case.

The Senate authorized the appointment of a committee chosen by the president to investigate the possibility that some organizations might be using offices, machines and materials in Billings Center and on the campus for political programs and campaigns. The committee is to report in two weeks to the Senate.

A motion was defeated to regulate the size of incoming classes to UVM. A motion recommending to the City of Burlington that it pass an ordinance stating the right of an individual to possess marijuana in their place of residence was tabled.

An announcement was made that the Marx Brothers movie will have a third showing on Sunday afternoon at 2:00 in Life Science Auditorium.

State Colleges Threatened By New Voting Laws

(From the Chronicle of Higher Education)

State colleges and universities could lose between $250-million and $300-million a year if newly enfranchised students are allowed to use their status as local voters to avoid the higher fees normally charged to out-of-staters.

This is the estimate in a new study of the uncertain future of out-of-state tuition conducted by Robert F. Carbone, dean of the college of education at the University of Maryland. The study was done for the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges and the American Association of State Colleges and Universities. Included were responses from 362 four-year institutions, the bulk of those that would suffer from the demise of tuition differentials.

Public colleges and universities in at least seven states - California, Colorado, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Texas, and Wisconsin - could lose $100-million a year if the differential were abolished, Mr. Carbone says.

Among the state institutions hardest hit would be the Universities of Arizona, California, Colorado, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, and Wisconsin, as well as Colorado State, Indiana, Ohio State and Purdue Universities. Among the state colleges, the biggest losses would occur in California, Colorado, Pennsylvania, and Texas.

Naturally, the possibility of these losses has aroused considerable concern among college administrators since the vote was extended last year to 18-year-olds, including some 4-million college students. They are increasingly registering to vote in the cities and towns where they are in school, and college officials fear that they might try to use this new status as proof of state residency.

When Mr. Carbone's study was conducted last spring, half the colleges already had been confronted by registered voters requesting tuition reduction while many other institutions expected requests this fall.

So far several state legislatures - in Georgia, New Mexico, and Washington - as well as individual institutions, have sought to preserve the differentials by drawing a line between residency for voting purposes and residency for tuition purposes. But increasingly the issue is ending up in state and federal courts. The situation there is "confusing," Mr. Carbone says. Cases already have been decided or are being appealed in Arizona, Alabama, California, Colorado, Michigan, Minnesota, New Mexico, and South Dakota, while others are pending in Maryland and Missouri.

VPIRG Will Fight Repeal Of Ban On Bottles

by Jeff Ewen

Early in 1972 the Vermont State Legislature passed a bill requiring, as of July 1, 1972, a tax of four mills on all nonreturnable bottles and cans sold in the state. The law further provided for a complete ban on such containers after July 1, 1973. This means that beverages could be sold in Vermont only if they came in returnable bottles or cans.

Until a few years ago, returnable bottles were quite common, and the Vermont Public Interest Research Group has learned that a return to usage of bottles of this type would require only slight mechanical adjustments in the bottling process, and would thus cause local bottlers no great hardships. Those who have their beverages shipped in from out of state would face no insurmountable difficulties either, for national bottlers still produce beverages in returnable bottles. The only real problem bottling companies in Vermont would face is that of cans, for none of the local beverage companies currently possess the means to produce them. VPIRG has discovered that bottlers in the state are taking no steps to comply with the ban on nonreturnable cans that will go into effect next July.

The reason that these bottling firms are doing nothing is a very simple one - they are confident that the ban will be repealed by the 1973 Legislature. Vermont bottlers have hired two of the state's best lobbyists, former Judge Henry Black and Rutland attorney John Carbine, to fight for a repeal of the ban when the new legislature convenes in January.

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group was the first to publicize the fact that the beverage companies are taking none of the actions necessary to comply with the law. VPIRG also noted, in a statement released to the press last week, that a special committee of representatives from the beverage and glass container industries had been formed to bring about the repeal of the bottle ban.

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group intends to lobby against any repeal of the bottle ban, and against any weakening of the current law's provisions. A considerable amount of research on the subject has been done by persons associated with VPIRG, and this will be used to counter the bottlers' arguments. Some of a sample of a non-returnable container ban in Vermont.

The first Greek Week held at UVM in three years was apparently successful, according to the members of the Greek Week Committee. The events began on Tuesday evening, September 19 with an informal speech by President Andrews in Life Sciences Auditorium. Dr. Andrews spoke for approximately 20 minutes on several topics, among them, expansion of the university, the tenure system, and student activism. Approximately 200 people attended the function, which included a question and answer session. Several questions were raised about the "jughandle" at the intersection of East Avenue and Williston Road. Andrews stated that "there was just no other short-term solution to the traffic congestion in that area."

Friday evening was taken up

Greek Week '72, First In Three Years, Meets With Success

by three fraternity parties. On Saturday afternoon, the Greek Games began with a relay race from Lambda Iota to Phi Beta Phi via South Williams and Summit Streets. The highlight of the afternoon, which included several more events on the Redstone lawn (see picture) was the chariot race, won by Sigma Phi.

On Saturday night George Carlin appeared in Patrick Gymnasium (see reviews, page 7) before 2,000 people. Jim Corcoran, who was also supposed to appear, was prevented from doing so by a case of malaria.

On Sunday several fraternities held open houses. Leslie Bieber, Chairman of the Greek Week Committee, stated that she was pleased by the response to the whole week, especially at the Greek Games, which drew 400-500 students. Another member of the Committee stated: "When we got together last May to plan this thing, many of us had doubts that it would ever come off. We're all quite happy."

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Environmental Fair And Open House

Robinson Hall, the Environmental Dorm, on Redstone Campus is planning on holding another Environmental Fair. The WDW complex lounge will be the gathering place from 4 to 11 on Oct. 14, a Saturday. But a lot of environmentally oriented things are going to be happening before then. The format for the fair will be basically the same thing—with booths by organizations, demonstrations of crafts, and other handiwork, displays of "outlet material-bikes, canoes, snowshoes and a series of speakers, movies and presentations. Organizational meetings are held every Sunday from 7:00 on at Robinson. People wishing to have a booth, demonstrate a craft, or help out are invited to come to one of these meetings. If you have ideas as to what you would like to see presented at the fair please call ext. 3086.

Open House at Robinson
Interested in your Environment? So are we. Robinson Hall, the Environmental dorm on campus is having an open house this Sunday evening at 7:00. To try to co-ordinate the student efforts in environmental affairs on campus Robinsonites have turned one of our lounges into an Ecology workshop, complete with reference files, books, etc. The purpose is to hopefully act as a clearinghouse for student initiated projects like Vermont Public Interest Research Group, Friends of Red Rocks Park, OVP, and Committee for Environmental Action. Brief presentations by these groups will be made to help orient new students as to what sort of projects can work at UVM. This is an informal chance for you to see what our dorm is up to, check out our resource file (may be helpful if you have a term paper coming up!) Try out some free health foods, and tell us what you're up to. Wander out with a smile.

Travel Grants In Graduate Study Available

In May, 1972, the 1973-74 competition for grants for graduate study abroad offered by the U.S. Government under the Fulbright-Hays Act and by foreign donors was officially opened by the Institute of International Education. Now, only a few more weeks remain in which qualified graduate students may apply for one of the estimated 590 awards which are available.

Full Grants, which provide round-trip transportation, tuition and maintenance for one academic year, are available to 29 countries. U.S. Government Travel Grants are offered to 11 countries and foreign donors provide awards to 14 countries.

The week of October 8-14 has been set aside as a fund-raising period for Medical Aid for Indochina. In Burlington, the following events will take place: films, speakers, seminars, a dance, and other fund-raising activities. Silence is complicity with Nixon's policies. Medical Aid for Indochina offers you a way to support the struggle of the Indochinese people.

First Yearbook Staff Meeting

The University of Vermont yearbook staff is looking for new members for the 1972-1973 book. Anyone interested in photography, layout, copy, creative writing or any other facet of yearbook work is welcome to come to the first organizational meeting Thursday, September 28th at 7:30 pm. The meeting will be held in lower Billings in the ARIEL office. This is your chance to express your creativity and channel a working spirit into a meaningful publication representing the University of Vermont.

Saturday Sing Along

The Cunningham-Newman Center fall picnic was held Sunday, September 24th, in the Center lounge. Students helped cook the hamburgers and hotdogs served, and assisted in cleaning up afterwards.

Over one hundred persons attended the picnic, and it may become an annual fall event.

The Cunningham-Newman Center is offering a series of coffee hours for students in different areas of concentration. Sunday, October 1, 7:30 p.m., the coffee hour is for pre-med, med-pre-vet, and pre-dent students! A speaker will be provided.

LaSalette Team to Return
The LaSalette team, so well received at the Cunningham-Newman Center last spring, will return to conduct the services at the Center this weekend. "Fr. Pat," and the other members of the team will be at the Center Saturday and Sunday.

Included in the weekend is "A Celebration of Light Evening" on Saturday evening, September 30, at 8:00 P.M. This evening will include a Sing-a-long with Fr. Pat.

"If you have a chance why not drop by the Newman Center on Saturday evening, with no religious obligations involved. Just come as a person and listen to a really talented folk artist, who just happens to be a priest. If you dig music, and if you're interested in listening to someone who feels deeply about people and about life, then drop by on Saturday night. You might just really enjoy meeting a very unique kind of person, Fr. Pat." Frank Luzzi

Campus Environment Forum

An Environmental Forum will be held on October 2nd at 8 p.m. in Memorial Lounge on the first floor of Waterman. The topic for the forum will be the campus environment. Among the guests invited to speak and answer questions will be Prof. Herb Martin, who is Chairman of the Parking Commission for the University. From the Campus Planning Office will be Larry Synder and Bill Emery. From the Office of Administrative Support Services will be Prof. Lovell. From the Faculty Senate committee on Buildings and Grounds will be Prof. Bob Larson. There also will be present a representative of the President's Office.

The forum was planned by a group of people under the auspices of Dr. Reidel of the Environmental Studies Program. It was the group's hope that this would be the first in a series of forums to discuss various topics. It was thought that this particular topic would be a good start because all people at the University are directly involved in the questions that will be raised. It was hoped that there would be a large turnout of faculty—in that—faculty members often allude to the problems of the campus environment. The forum will offer the opportunity to speak directly with the people who are responsible for the campus environment.

Everyone from the community is welcome and any questions can be asked about the forum by calling either the Environmental Programs Office or the Committee on Environmental Action.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28

4 p.m., Mechanical engineering seminar, Prof. James Paey, political science, "Post-war Industrial and Political Development of Germany," Room 231, Voley Building. Coffee available.

WHY WOULD A WOMAN AT UVM WANT TO TAKE ROTC?

She probably wouldn't. But she might be interested in taking some courses with ROTC students. Military affairs are certainly important to all of us, so why shouldn't the UVM co-ed enroll in one or two of the following courses to be offered in 72/73 by the Department of Military Studies?

MS 1 Introduction to Military Studies. Fall Semester. Relationship of war to society; impact of technology on warfare; role of logistics and administration. Political, social, economic factors making up current military power. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 2 U.S. Defense Establishment. Spring Semester. Organization of Department of Defense. Process of formulating national security policy. Impact of economic factors on the decision making process. Can studies of current issues affecting national security. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 12 Contemporary World Military Scene. Spring Semester. Seminar on current international uses of military force, viewed against a background of long-range national concerns, especially of U.S., Western European countries, U.S.S.R., China. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

Don't expect to find drill, or marksmanship, or first aid in these courses. Don't expect to be reading Field Manuals. Do expect to find provocative questions raised by the faculty and by the commercial texts to be used, such as Military Power and Power and War by Knorr; How to Control the Military by Gellert; Defense Strategies for the Seventies by Halperin; and others.

If you are interested in more information or a complete listing of courses drop by the Department of Military Studies or call 658-2966.

Women, Expand

by Joanne Dorfl

October 18, 17, and 16 are three days which can be influential in the lives of many women around the Burlington area. "She Week" is the title of the program planned especially for those women who wish to expand their life styles. The main purpose of the program is to introduce women to various openings in employment and social work in the area. Women of all ages will profit because it will not only concentrate on job opportunities but will also offer suggestions in volunteer and social work for women already employed. High school and college students may gain ideas for professional fields and will be able to answer questions which can be helpful in the future. Although each night's related, it is not attend each program was designed to interest women in all of the night's speakers. Monday, October 17, College who will be expanding the women: UVM's Schmucker will discuss group Parker's speech participants will voice their reactions.

Puerto Rican Heritage Co

by George Santiago

Plans are being formulated for a Puerto Rican Heritage course at the University of Vermont in September of 1973. The Puerto Rican students along with Professor Lyman G. Gould of the Political Science Department and Professors Timothy Murad and Armando Zarate of the Spanish Department have been meeting since last semester, discussing and planning the course.

The course will be taught mainly in Spanish as most of the Puerto Rican literature is written in that language and hasn't been translated yet. It will deal with the early history, literature, the arts, and how these relate to the culture. It will also focus on how the American government, blacks, and Spaniards have influenced the island and its people. Also included will be the political

by Jeanne Dufel
October 16, 17, and 18 are three days which can be influential in the lives of many women around the Burlington area. "The Week" is the title of the program planned especially for those women who wish to expand their life styles. The main purpose of the program is to introduce women to various openings in employment and social work in the area. Women of all ages will profit because it will not only concentrate on job opportunities but will also offer suggestions in volunteer and social work for women already employed. High school and college students may gain ideas for professional fields and will be able to have questions answered concerning types of jobs that attract them.

Although the subjects of each night's schedule are related, it is not necessary to attend each event. The program was designed to allow interested women to come any or all of the nights.

Monday night's guest speaker will be Dr. Gail Parker, president of Bennington College who will talk about expanding the life styles of women. UVM's Dr. Kay Schmeucker will lead a discussion group following Dr. Parker's speech, and the participants will be able to voice their reactions.

On Tuesday night, leading women from the UVM campus, including Dr. Schmeucker, will discuss ways that women can increase their interests in relation to their current life style. Mothers and career women who are interested in arts and crafts, courses or volunteer work along with younger, unemployed women who are concerned with their future will gain valuable ideas.

The final night of the program will place greater emphasis on the activities currently available for women to join. Dr. Dolores Stocker will be present along with several professional women in the Burlington area, and visitors will be able to discuss the details pertaining to the work in which they have a particular interest.

Debbie Orr, the area co-ordinator for Redstone campus and one of the main organizers of "The Week," commented, "The central purpose is to aim at the women of the Burlington area on an immediate and local level. Rather than getting lost in vague national women's issues, we would like to concentrate on offering concrete alternatives for expanding the life style of local women."

McGovern Campaign Active

The McGovern for President campaign on campus shifted into high gear this week as UVM Students for McGovern held their second meeting at W.D.W. Lounge on Thursday, September 21st.

At the well-attended meeting, the student McGovern workers returned their completed voter registration canvas forms and discussed plans for the upcoming "MCGOVERN WEEK" voter registration drive. UVM students will conduct the week of Oct. 2-6. To date, UVM Students for McGovern have registered over two hundred pro-McGovern voters. The McGovern student organization now has student representatives working in each University residence hall and in every fraternity and sorority working to publicize the McGovern voter registration drive.

Scott MacKay, Co-chairman of UVM Students for McGovern, outlined the McGovern fund raising effort that will be directed at UVM students. "Unlike the Nixon campaign," MacKay stated, "McGovern doesn't have a ten-million dollar secret campaign fund to dig into, so we have to rely upon small donations from average Americans." UVM Students plan to stage a mid-October Fund Raising Keg Party to obtain student donations to the campaign.

Anyone who wants to help in the McGovern campaign should contact Dick Camdy, 316 Mason, ext. 3002.

It is hoped that this course will not only appeal to the blacks or Latin American students, but to all interested students. If the course is successful, plans may possibly begin for an all English or bilingual course. The main goal of the Puerto Ricans is best expressed by saying "We got to keep on pushing."

UVM'S 1972 Greek Week...
A Revival To The Golden 50's

Editorial

When Business
Is Quorum

Parliamentary procedure has its virtues for meetings of governmental bodies, ranging all the way from Washington to the University of Vermont. Used effectively, Robert's Rules of Order can provide a meeting that will accomplish something. Used ineffectively, nothing can be done. And when nothing is done, apathy quickly enters the scene.

SA elections for new representatives are next week. Those who are elected have a duty to perform. They have a $100,000 budget from the mandatory SA fee we pay. Urgently needed now, as with most governmental institutions, is leadership from our representatives. And one way of attaining that goal would be a firm commitment to attend every SA meeting.

A case in point is the University of Vermont's SA Senate. What apparently dominated this week's meeting was a hassle over a quorum. No meeting, it seems, to date has reached a quorum. When this occurs, no business can transpire, unless the governmental body ignores this ruling and goes on with business anyway, as was successfully done Tuesday at the SA meeting.

After all, it does become dull news when the weekly meeting's accomplishment was an unsuccessful debate on whether there were enough representatives to officially conduct business.

Dear Editor:

Dust off Freud's records, clutch your pants, girls, and prepare to hurtle, merrily, into the new Silent Generation. On Saturday of Greek Week, we were ushered into what appears to be a new era of social unconcern, self-indulgent activities and a general revival of the infamous 1950's. Let us examine the evidence.

On Saturday, as I pedaled my ecologically sound bicycle up South Prospect Street, I noticed carloads of merry youths, bearing strange flags, proceeding toward Redstone Campus. I wrote this off as insignificant. As I neared Redstone I saw a large gathering of people in what looked like a potential anti-war demonstration or a marshalling area for freedom riders. As I drew closer the smile was erased from my lips and replaced by the look of astonishment.

There, before my eyes, was the resurrection of something that had all but died in the 1960's after the death of the 1950's. Fraternities and sororities are blazing the comeback trail in the same manner Mr. Nixon arose from the ashes in 1968. The time is right now, as it was then. The backlash to demonstrations, pot-smoking and above-board sex is taking effect and changing it all into LBJ barbecues, raucous beer-drinking and coy little mistresses.

But what's wrong with fraternities, anyway? They are kind enough to let us laugh at the idiocy of "pledges" for weeks on-end, aren't they? (It must be good if you have to go through all of that.) They are intelligent enough to exclude certain individuals from their houses in hopes of purging undesirables from their society. (You'd better sit in the rear of the bus and not eat at that lunch counter.) They give us a place to party on Saturday night. It's a fine proving ground to learn how Uncle Ernie got to wearing lampshades at Mom and Dad's martini parties. If that isn't living and learning, nothing is.

Well, if you (we) don't like fraternities what should be done about them? Should we go to Bennington, where they don't have fraternities, and don't have sororities? (Love it or leave it.) Or should we simply not patronize them and force them to change or go under? I guess its something to think about. Maybe, we really do have something better to do. And if you're still unsure about what to do, remember what Bob Dylan said: "There are no kings inside the gates of Eden."

SA Can Support Student Interests With New Election Rules

To the Editor:

I must admit that your personal attack on me in last week's Cynic Editorial is disheartening. It is regrettable that you have misunderstood my past work in Student Association. I firmly believe that the Student Association can be an important tool in representing and protecting the students' interests in the University Community. I am also painfully aware that the Student Association can never reach that potential if it is "misguided" or dominated by "a select group of persons". If Student Government is to be effective, it must be open and representative. Reaching that goal has been my objective and caused my support for the new election procedures.

The new process, while far from being perfect, is a step in the right direction. It is an attempt to insure that every student has an equal opportunity to be elected to the Senate through an open democratic election. If this causes extra hassles for some people, it seems to me that they are justified.

It is obvious that the old amorphous election procedure would only make more likely the continuation of the "cliqueism" that we both oppose.

Environmental View

Words Of Teddy Roosevelt Ring Today

by Gene Beaudoin

The following document is a very important work from an environmental viewpoint:

"The natural resources of our country are in danger of exhaustion if we permit the old wasteful methods of exploiting them to continue."

"With the rise of people from savagery to civilization, and with the consequent growth in the extent and variety of the needs of the average man, there comes a steadily increasing growth of the amount demanded by this average man from the natural resources of the country. Yet, rather curiously, at the same time the average man is apt to lose his realization of this dependence upon nature."

Neither the primitive man nor the pioneer was aware of any duty to posterity in dealing with renewable resources. The American settler felled the forests, he felt that there was plenty of forest left for the sons who came after him. When he exhausted the soil of his farm he felt that he could go west and take up new land. As with his immediate successors, when the soil-wash from the farmers fields choked the neighboring river he thought only of using the railway rather than boats for moving his produce and supplies.

In Washington's time an article coal was known only as a useless black stone, and the great fields of bituminous coal were undiscovered. As steam was unknown, the use of coal for power production was undreamed of. Water was practically the only source of power, save the labor of men and animals, and this power was only used in the most primitive fashion. But a few small iron deposits had been found in this country, and the use of iron by our countrymen was very small. Wood was practically the only fuel, and what lumber men sawed was consumed locally, while the forests were regarded chiefly as obstructions to settlement and cultivation.

Since then our knowledge and the use of the resources have increased a hundredfold. Indeed, the growth of this nation by leaps and bounds makes one of the most striking and important chapters in the history of the world. Its growth has been due to rapid development, and alas! that it should be said, to the rapid destruction of our natural resources.

Since the days when the constitution was adopted, steam and electricity have revolutionized the industrial world. Nowhere has the revolution been so great as in our country. The discovery and utilization of mineral fuels and alloys have given us the lead over all other nations in the production of steel. The discovery and utilization of coal and iron have given us our great railways, and have led to such industrial developments as has never before been seen. The vast wealth of lumber in our forests, the riches of our soils and mines, the discovery of gold and mineral oils, combined with the efficiency of our transportation, have made the conditions of our life unparalleled in comfort and convenience.

The steadily increasing drain on these natural resources has promoted to an extraordinary degree the complexity of our industrial and social life. Moreover, this unexampled development has had a determining effect upon the character and opinions of our people. The demand for efficiency in the great task has given us vigor, achievement which in its own life has never yet been matched. So great and so rapid has progress been that we are capable of supporting all the people who might care to make their country their home. We resources are in the course of rapid exhaustion.

This nation began with the belief that its landed began with and approached heritage of forests, more than half the timber is gone. We began with coal fields more extensive than those of any other nation and with iron ores regarded as inexhaustible, and many experts now declare that the end of both iron and coal is in sight.

We have become great because of the lavish use of our resources and we have just reason to be proud of our growth. But the time has come to inquire seriously what will happen when our forests are gone, when the coal, the iron, the oil, and the gas are exhausted, when the soil shall have been still been our material growth that there has been a tendency to lag behind in spiritual and moral growth.

Disregarding for the moment the question of moral purpose, it is safe to say that the prosperity of our people depends directly on the energy and intelligence with which our natural resources are used. It is equally clear that these resources are the final basis of national power and perpetuity. Finally, it is ominously evident that these further impoverished and washed into streams, polluting the rivers, denuding the fields, and obstructing navigation. The questions do not relate only to the next century, or to the next generation. It is time for us now as a nation to exercise the same reasonable foresight in dealing without great natural resources that would be shown by any prudent man in conserving and wisely using the property which contains the assurance of well-being for himself and his children.

We are coming to recognize as never before the right of the nation to guard its own future in the essential matter of natural resources. In the past we have admitted the right to the individual to injure the future of the Republic for his own present profit. The time has come for a change. As a people we have the right and the duty, second to none other but the right and doing justice, to protect ourselves and our children against the wasteful development of our natural resources, whether that waste is caused by the actual destruction of such natural resources or by the making them impossible of development hereafter." Theodore Roosevelt—1908—the White House 1908 is sixty four years ago. Some of the exact problems have changed slightly but the nature of the problems of the environment have not changed in the least. In fact his writing is even better exemplified in 1972. It has been time to change for too long. Perhaps it is not time to change at all and perhaps the progression is irreversible. The nature of the American Way is not to change but rather to sound like change. When enough people sound like change then the question is put on a shelf. If our environmental situation is indeed irreversible lets say it that way. Teddy Roosevelt was calling it as he saw it. I hope we are not foolish enough to believe that what we have heard about in the last few years is a new story. On the contrary the devastation of the environment is a logical outgrowth of the American Way. It is also foolishness to believe that "they" are going to take care of it. Unless you are willing to take care of it, it won't be done and the progression is indeed irreversible.

Change does not come easy. Teddy Roosevelt knew that as well as many of us do who will admit it. Each generation has its own rendezvous with the land for despite our feeble titles and claims of ownership, we are all brief tenants on this planet. By choice, or default, we will leave out a land legacy for our heirs. I hope we use our time wisely.

When Vernon Power Plant Operates,

It May Be Too Late To Protest

To Vermont Editors and the Vermont Natural Resources Council:

I am truly dismayed at a statement in the Vermont Environmental Report, Vol. 1 No. 5, June 1972, published by the Environmental Planning Information Center, a project of the Vermont Natural Resources Council, under the heading Land Use Meetings. It reads: "Thus far, there has been little concern expressed either from communities or from environmental groups, who see fit to extend great efforts on such matters as visual qualities of proposed transmission lines, or the radioactive emissions of nuclear plants, which will be less than that emitted by the State House. Why is there not greater concern expressed by public officials and environmental groups?"

Public Service Board Council Donald Rutherford at the opening of hearings concerning the discontinuation of bus service in Burlington.

In answer to the question, I know of no environmental group which is not concerned with land use. But what seems more importantly important is that there may be little or no land fit to use if the present materialize. If the Public Service Board, the Water Resources Board and the Vermont Natural Resources Council did their job of getting us safe reliable power and waste of it, and wholly and truthfully informed the public regarding nuclear plants and the Atomic Energy Commission, the environmental groups now concerned with these problems could tackle other important issues.

I believe that publishing the above quotation, in a paper supposedly dedicated to the protection of our resources, creates a false impression and is a serious breach of responsibility.

Equating emissions from the State House with those of the Vermont nuclear plant is about like saying - it does not matter whether you eat a pound of sugar or a pound of steak, they are both the same amount of food. The State House gives off emissions, but it does not give off radioactive particles as nuclear plants do. Nuclear plants, in operation, give off radioactive strontium and iodine and other radioactive particles that can lodge in body tissue so that even their low level radioactive emissions traveling only a small fraction of an inch can penetrate cells and cause cancer and inheritable birth defects.

The State House is not adding to our inventory of radioactive substances. The Vermont plant, if operating as requested, will, every couple of years it will produce, in its core, more radioactivity than could be produced by 100 Hiroshima bombs. Thus, when the core is high, an accident or sabotage could devastate thousands of square miles. And, bear in mind that, about every two years, in normal operation, this radioactive core material has to be removed, transported and reprocessed, with more escaping radioactive particles, and that no one, no one knows how to dispose of the remaining wastes, radioactive for thousands of years.

Medical Aid For Indochina

by William Bowman and Thomas Cutler

The year is 1972. Any serious university student must be aware, painfully so, of his country's genocidal policies in Vietnam. You know that people are dying under the bombs every day. The question is, how can you help those people? They are the ones who need your help desperately.

Medical Aid for Indochina is our answer. It may be yours. MAI is not sending your dollars to Thieu. They are sending it to the Provisional Revolutionary Government in the South and the Democratic Republic of Vietnam in the North.

The money you contribute is earmarked for medical supplies and hospitals to care for the tens of thousands of refugees and civilian casualties of this war. They are dying under Nixon's bombs. They can live with your help. Show Nixon that you will not tolerate wholesale slaughter, and help people like yourselves who are defenseless against the awesome techno-electronic might of the U.S. and its allies.

"In this year, 1971, more civilians are being killed and wounded in the three countries of Indochina, and more made refugees, than at any time in history. Most of the casualties are caused and people made refugees by American and Allied military activity."

A Cure For Green Death

by Jim Heidenreich

University Food and Green Death. They seem to side by side, don't they?

Well, for those who "sick" of all that vomiting, nausea, diarrhea, and indigestion that Green Death may cause, here are some - inexpensive - and sometimes free - herbal cures that are often better than what you buy at stores:

FOR NAUSEA AND FOR DIARRHEA: Put 15 drops of essence of peppermint in a glass of hot water and drink as hot as can be borne. Repeat every 3 hours until cured. It works miracles. Peppermint tea will also help in cases of indigestion, and even headache. For the latter, drink a cup of hot, strong peppermint tea. Then lie down for a while; your headache will soon be gone.

On the other hand, constipation, eat a lot of salad, have a cup of licorice tea, or drink the juice of a lemon in a glass of hot water about one half hour before breakfast. For vomiting, suck on a lemon as you feel "it" coming. For gas, nibble wild ginger root.

If anything goes wrong in your stomach, chew a piece of dry calamus (sweet flag) root. You'll have to dig your own from the swamps; as far as I know, none is sold in the market.

Calamus is mentioned in the Bible and since then, it has been used for stomach gas, sour stomach, indigestion and that "rotten egg" taste in the throat. However, unlike most herbal remedies, its taste and smell, sweet and spicy, is overpowering, and therefore not pleasant to take.

There is however one compensation for its bad taste: Some people claim that the aroma of calamus has aphrodisiac qualities. So, if you dig some and don't like it as a medicine (as good as it is), put a dried root or two in your clothes drawer. After you put on the clothes, I take no responsibility for your actions - or hers. (Maybe this is the Green Death!)

As for those of you who have trouble sleeping later on, eat 2 or 3 small onions. You'll get trowsy shortly. Or, if onions really turn you off, have some catnip tea sweetened with honey; that's good too.

Another time, I'll see what I can find in herbal medicine for the cold that everyone's catching. Until then, Green Death to all!

Part-Time Jobs

The University Career Planning and Placement Office has recognized the need for a clearing house of part-time employment opportunities for students of the University of Vermont. At the Placement Office in 224 Waterman Building there is a room specially designated to provide listings of temporary and part-time employment. These listings are updated several times a week and filled openings are removed promptly. The jobs available vary widely for both male and female students. A conscious effort is made to match interests with openings, and the service is open to all students. Stop in at the Placement Office between 8:30 am and 5:00 pm on Monday through Friday to see if there is a way that the University can help you meet your financial needs.

Borograd Attacks Proposed Faculty-Senate Constitution

OPEN LETTER TO FACULTY MEMBERS

After thorough discussion last year, the proposed Senate Constitution failed of adoption. Turnover since then (by resignation, non-reappointment, new appointments) warranted at least another discussion meeting. If only to inform new Senate members. There will be no discussion; every must vote in the dark. New appointees who thought that as faculty members they'd be voting Senate members now discover that the proposed Constitution deprives them of membership. Ironically, one of their first votes in the present Senate may be their last as Senate members.

Procedures for establishing membership in the proposed Senate are monstrously, even diabolically, devious. While pretending adherence to greater democracy (anyone with 10 supporting persons can be elected), the procedure fragments faculty unity and produces a non-representative senate. The procedure virtually demands politicking, collusion, and the creation of divisive cliques ("alternative alliances," Mr. Meyer calls them). Now, younger faculty members (now fully franchised Senate members) will have little or no chance for election. Many older, more experienced members will neither seek election nor support others, because they cannot in good conscience represent anyone except themselves or let anyone vote for them in a Faculty Senate.

The argument that the new Constitution eliminates quorum calls that have recently inhibited Senate action is now irrelevant, the present Senate having amended its Constitution to prevent obstructionists from blackmailing us into helplessness. The proposed Constitution provides for such inhibiting action when a quorum call reveals less than half the Senate present. Doubtless the quorum-counting obstructionists will be ever alert!

I sadly contemplate the melancholy possibility of my last vote in the Faculty Senate. Despite a quarter of a century of participation and service on its important committees, the new Constitution (if adopted) will bar me from voting on matters affecting the faculty. I cannot in good conscience such election to the proposed Senate; I can only vote my own views and conscience and cannot be beholden (in Mr. Meyer's suggestion new Senate members must be) to the views of a 10-member constituency. Now can I support another person's candidacy? I would not willingly concede to allow someone else to vote for me. Others may with equal horror view the prospect of the faculty's business being conducted and determined by a small band of individuals, "representative" only in the sense that such has a constituency emphasizing differences rather than common faculty interests. The argument that self-appointed debaters now dominate the Senate is specious; every faculty member can come, and speak, and vote. Despite Mr. Meyer's assertion, it is not too large to conduct its business on the democratic town-meeting basis. And as President Andrews has indicated, faculty size is unlikely to increase. When matters of serious importance are on the agenda, attendance is extraordinarily good and representative. Skilled Senate Chairpersons (as we have seen) conduct meetings fairly and efficiently.

The so-called "workable safeguards" of the proposed Constitution inspire no confidence. Procedures for review and revocation by mail-ballot referendum are awkward and cumbersome and lack provision for discussion of controversial issues. A Senate composed of divided and divisive constituencies and emasculated by isolation from the Faculty at large is reduced to the kind of impotence that gives administration a virtual mandate to make decisions affecting faculty without faculty participation.

If you believe in one person/one vote, if you value your own ideas enough to want a meaningful vote in a Faculty Senate, then VOTE NO on the proposed Constitution.

We invited a few friends for dinner and they helped clean up the Genesee River.

With the aid of a few thousand pounds of microorganisms, we're helping to solve the water pollution problem in Rochester. Maybe the solution can help others.

What we did was to combine two processes in a way that gives us one of the most efficient water-purifying systems private industry has ever developed.

One process is called "activated sludge," developed by man to accelerate nature's microorganism adsorption. What this means is that for the majority of wastes man can produce, there is an organism waiting somewhere that will happily assimilate it. And thrive on it.

The breakthrough came when Kodak scientists found a way to combine the activated sludge process with a trickling filter process and optimized the combination.

We tested our system in a pilot plant for five years.

At Kodak, we were working on environmental improvement long before it made headlines. And the pilot project worked so well, we built a ten-million-dollar plant that can purify 36-million gallons of water a day.

Governor Rockefeller called this "the biggest voluntary project undertaken by private industry in support of New York State's pure-water program."

Why did we do it? Partly because we're in business to make a profit, and clean water is vital to our business. But in furthering our own needs, we have helped further society's. And our business depends on society.

We hope our efforts to cope with water pollution will inspire others to do the same. And, we'd be happy to share our water-purifying information with them. We all need clean water. So we all have to work together.

World Famous Dance Ensemble Creates Theatrical Excitement

The Beryozka Dance Company, one of the largest and most lavish attractions ever to perform in Burlington, will open the 1972-73 Lane Series on Tuesday, Oct. 3, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

A limited number of tickets are available at $3.75, $5.25 and $6.00, and may be purchased in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations, tel. 656-3418. The Beryozka Dance Company, comprising 100 dancers, singers and musicians, appears in Burlington after two weeks of sold-out performances at New York City Center, where they began their lengthy North American tour on Sept. 22, coming directly from the Soviet Union. Lively and colorful, the Beryozka ensemble creates the kind of theatrical excitement that has made them internationally famous. Under the artistic direction of Nadezhda S. Nadezhkina, who also did the choreography, Beryozka takes the audience on a grand tour of Russia.

The company's success on the international scene is closely related to one significant fact: The ensemble is largely composed of graduates of the School of Ballet of Moscow's legendary Bolshoi Theatre. Annually, fresh talents are observed and engaged by the "Beryozka" company. The program will feature not only some beautiful lyrical dancing by the girls, but also the wild leaps, turns in the air and "close-to-the-floor" patterns for which Russian male dancers are justifiably famous.

In terms of dance and song, the company offers glimpses of city life, and country life. There are narrative works as well as dances created for the theatre and based on folklore and history. The hundreds of costumes were also created to reflect the authentic designs of many parts of the Soviet Republics.

"Beryozka" is always on the go. Enormously popular in Moscow, the artists have also danced in more than 300 cities of fifteen Soviet Republics. When the ensemble was but a year old, in 1949, they represented the USSR in an International Festival of Young Artists in Budapest. They won First Prize. Since then the company has danced in 60 countries on five continents.

Nadezhda A. Nadezhkina is a People's Artist of the USSR, and she also holds a state laureate bestowed on her by her country in appreciation of her achievements. She is the founder and permanent artistic director of the "Beryozka" ensemble and the creator of all the dances and all the programs.

A fine connoisseur of folklore, Nadezhkina sees in it the endless possibilities in creating new choreographies. Often her inspirations come from the rich treasury of Russian poetry. She knows how to translate poetic images into movement that may be pure dance or of a narrative nature. Literature, poetry and folklore have thus been her inspirations in such dances as "Troika," "pyralitz," "The Staff or Spinning Wheel," "Kholostyaki" ("Bachelors"), "Yamshchiki" ("The Coach Drivers"), "Glosha" ("The Flea"), "Northern Lights," "The Siberian Suite," etc.

What is the meaning of the ensemble's name? For Russians, the birch tree is a symbol of the beauty of their native land. That is why, when Nadezhda Nadezhkina founded her first company twenty-nine years ago, it was decided to call it "Beryozka"—birch tree. And it is the dance called "Beryozka" which traditionally opens the program, the dance which gave life and the name to this world-famous ensemble.

Twenty young girls in long dresses—"saryphans"—seem to make slow, almost floating entrances onto the stage, and each bears branches of young birch trees. The dance is based on the stately khorovod (round dance), and one gets the impression that the Russian countryside with its spacious fields, and majestic forests is entering the auditorium. One sees the sweeping beauty of the land; one hears the heartbeat of the artists' homeland.

The next Lane concert will be Blood, Sweat & Tears on Thurs., Oct. 5, in two performances: 7:30 and 10:30.

The Marx Brothers in The Cocoanuts by Mina Carson

I would warn you the reader that this is my first film review ever, if it weren't my strong suspicion that the Marx Brothers offered no such apology for The Cocoanuts, their first film ever.

Now the inability of this venture is potentially fourfold, in view of the fact that at both shows Friday night the rule was virtually tip-toe-room only. If I were to write a good, literate, favorable review, you'd be impressed, I'd be impressed, and we'd both finish knowing nothing we didn't know in the first place. If I wrote a bad review, you'd laugh at me. Finally, if I wrote a concise, convincing, unfavorable review I'd laugh at you, because then I'd be able to breathe next Friday night. This just isn't going to happen, though. You see what I mean?

It must be said in all fairness (to me), however, that many seasoned journalists have been left with his pen hanging apace at the prospect of trying to write cogently—in fact rationally—about this team. Past reviews which I've been able to get my hungry little hands on fall easily into two categories. One trend is to lionize the Marxes to the point of absurdity; the other to remark more objectively—but surely sympathetically—that their films run, at least chronologically, from bad to awful. And me? I sink with the first group, every time. No matter how bad the films themselves admittedly can be.

The Cocoanuts is a case in point. You couldn't ever hope to see a worse movie. You also had better not hope ever to see a funnier one. Its history reveals part of the reason. The play was a hit on Broadway in 1929, and it literally was on stage in the evening and on film the next morning. The camerawork is awful, I believe, although I know as little about film history as I do about camerawork, that these were the early days of sound, and the new emphasis on the microphone sadly diverted attention from the crucial visual aspect of film comedy. Several later films were better, if only in that the camera was bold and perceptive enough to tap in on, say, Groucho's leering eyebrows (?), Harpo's inimitable physical genius, or Chico's six shooter piano technique.

At the best nauseating romantic plot on which the movie shakily rests its bulk throws a curious light on the importance of the comedy. It is, in effect, the best testimony to the Brothers' skill that can be found. As amusing as the trappings of the twenties may be to us now, and as credible as they may have been to audiences then, the fact is that were it not for the (dare I say) unique and timeless genius of the Marxes, the film would have died a quiet, unmourned death long ago. The "cuteness" of the overdrawn production numbers only barely offsets our boredom, and our admiration for the music of the period (an testimony to which I am leaving in and out of his seat and exclaiming—ad nauseum—"I love that music! I love that music!") All right already) does not contain our laughter at the yucky singing of the principals. So what do we have left? Well, for starters, what would you do if a red-headed demon-angel honked his way into the lobby of your hotel (followed by a phony Italian with an empty suitcase which, however, he promises to fill before he leaves) and proceeded to terrorize the women, drink the ink and rip up the letters in every postbox? Would you, as proprietor of the hotel, apologize for the lateness of the afternoon delivery? Ah, the Marxes, the Marxes...

Groucho, the youngest of the three most famous brothers, has always been the celebrity, strictly speaking, continuing in the media of radio and TV long after the other two had retired to a more peaceful existence. I would challenge you, however, to find anywhere in his long and very funny career any verbal exchanges as densely packed and consistently hilarious as the ones in The Cocoanuts. They may not have had cameramen for this show, but they certainly had writers. This also is a young Groucho, long predating the days when the screenwriters, alas, started allowing the uncanny control of every situation to slip, occasionally, from his grasp. Sure he came to Florida without a nickel in his pocket—but by God he's got one there now!

There is one man, however, right from the start, who just as uncannily can demote Groucho from his usual role as emcee to the demeaning one of straight man, at the drop of a vial. This ability is not to be underrated, and yet Chico, the very culprit, is sadly underrated in the context of the team. For it is precisely in this context that he shines the brightest (or the dullest, if you prefer). Whereas Groucho can get it on with anybody, anytime, just by opening his mouth and letting the words pop out seemingly of their own accord, and Harpo's home, barren, and playground is nothing short of the whole world, Chico is, first and foremost, a member of the family. Chico is the only human ever to be honored as the recipient of one of Harpo's frantic, manic, mimed messages. Chico is, as I have mentioned, the only man who can single-wordedly get the best of Groucho in a verbal bout. In short, Chico is indispensable and organic to the unity and thus the overwhelming power of the Marxes' comedy. Harpo and Chico in this film are apparently constant traveling companions ("I do anything for money. I would kill you for money. Nah—you my friend—I kill you for nothing.")

And who knows, Groucho might even have said something at that auction if it hadn't been for Chico's ever-unfolding non-comprehension ("Why a duck?"). And then, there's Harpo. What can one say about Harpo? It is almost unfair and certainly frustrating to attempt in words to describe his beautifully wordless world, in its essence somehow so much more enviable than any of our verbally-entrenched ones. He is an artist par excellence, a genius (and incidentally, my favorite). A preference I would never attempt to claim as mine alone.)

But then, what can you say about any of them, all of them? Aren't they great? Aren't they incredible?

I assume I'll be seeing you again Friday night. Till then...

Don Cooper To Kick Off

B, S, & T Concert

The opening act of the Lane Series presentation of Blood, Sweat, & Tears on Thurs., Oct. 5, will be the rising young folk singer Don Cooper.

Cooper has three albums to his credit, "Don Cooper," "Bless the Children," and "The Ballad of C.P. Jones," with a fourth recording to appear in October. A single, "Special Day," has been on the charts for several weeks.

Cooper, who writes most of his songs, accompanies himself on the guitar and has a bass player with him. In addition to playing with Blood, Sweat & Tears, he has toured with Ames Taylor, the Jay Gileband, and Chicago. He has given performances in New York's Carnegie Hall and London's Royal Albert Hall, and also appeared on the Mike Douglas and Johnny Carson TV shows.

The Miami Herald critic commented that Cooper seems to be a single reincarnation of all four Beatles. Another reviewer describes his style as "soft and free flowing."

There will be two performances of Blood, Sweat & Tears on Oct. 5 at Memorial Auditorium: 7:30 and 10:30. Tickets, priced at $3.75, $4.50, $5.25 and $6.00, are still available and may be purchased in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman.

In addition to a good selection of other people's material, Rod contributes four originals. Each of which exhibits a unique sensitivity to human emotion and a precious ability to capture the essence of the relationships between people. I'm sure I'm going to love "You Wear It Well" as much as "Mandolin Wind." It has the same kind of wistful melody and lyrics like these:

"I'm gonna write about the birthday gown I bought in town/You sat down and tied on the stairs/You knew it didn't cost the earth but for what it's worth/You made me feel just like a millionaire."—An uncomplicated as they are, these words sing in a tone of voice that captures a moment of truth, a moment of truth, a moment of truth (or that matter). Rod Stewart's New Album Is For Keeps

by Doug Coletta

Never a Dull Moment Rod Stewart (Mercury SRM-1-046) Rod Stewart albums are like visits from an old friend whom you haven't seen in many a month; you get together to become reacquainted with each other, and swap stories about all that's happened while you've been apart. And even though you see some changes in him (which help you to see the changes in yourself, it's still reassuring to know he's the same fellow you're proud to call your friend).

Warmth and genuine affection virtually glow from Rod Stewart's records. The good-natured joviality that pervades each of them does nothing to destroy the seriousness of the endeavor, but rather in conveying so much of the Stewart personality, lends the albums a deeply personal authenticity that very few records achieve.

Of course, the music is the thing that creates the intimacy between Rod and the listener, and the music on his new LP is as exquisitely crafted as on his three previous efforts. The only fault I could find with Every Picture Tells A Story, a poor choice of material, is nowhere in evidence here and, in fact, every cut displays such generous portions of excellence in all respects that the album couldn't have received a more apt title.

The main tool with which Rod personifies the songs is that voice of his. He can shout like Delaney; his voice has the flexibility of Nash, the grace of Winwood, the funk of Cocker and the depth of emotion of Van Morrison. His phrasing is as unorthodox as Dylan's and as unpredictable as Rod Stewart's. So when he sings "I'd rather go blind," he doesn't just sing the lyrics, he makes them such a true expression of a feeling that you really believe he means it.

Aided by this magnificent voice, Stewart is one of those rare artists who can take another person's song and make it wholly his own, completely communicating the tune from the original artist. "Angel" demonstrates this skill to perfection. Jimi Hendrix's version comes off as a surreal fairy tale while Rod, with a touching tenderness, reveals the true worth of a beautiful love song.

Rod Stewart's New Album Is For Keeps

by Doug Calvert
Never a Dull Moment Rod Stewart (Mercury 8RM-1-646) Rod Stewart albums are like vents from an old friend whom you haven't even in many a month, you get together to become reacquainted with each other, and swap stories about all that's happened while you've been apart. And even though you see some changes in him (which help you to see the changes in yourself), it's still reassuring to know he's the same fellow you're proud to call your friend.

Warmth and genuine affection virtually glow from Rod Stewart's records. The good-natured joviality that pervades each of them does nothing to destroy the seriousness of the endeavor, but rather in conveying so much of the Stewart personality, lends the albums a deeply personal authenticity that very few records achieve.

Of course, the music is the thing that creates the intimacy between Rod and the listener, and the music on his new LP is as exquisitely crafted as on his three previous efforts. The only fault I could find with Every Picture Tells A Story, a poor choice of material, is nowhere in evidence here and, in fact, every cut displays such generous portions of excellence in all respects that the album couldn't have received a more apt title.

The main tool with which Rod personalizes the songs is that voice of his. He can shout like Daltry; his voice has the flexibility of Nash, the grace of Winwood, the funk of Cocker and the depth of emotion of Van Morrison. His phrasing is as unorthodox as Dylan's and as unpredictable as Rod Stewart's. So when he sings "I'd rather go blind," he doesn't just sing the lyrics, he makes them such a true expression of a feeling that you really believe he means it.

Aided by this magnificent asset, Stewart is one of those rare artists who can take another person's song and make it wholly his own, completely transcending the tune from the original artist. "Angel" demonstrates this skill to perfection. Jimi Hendrix version comes off as a surreal fairy tale while Rod, with a touching tenderness, reveals the true worth of a beautiful love song.

In addition to a good selection of other people's material, Rod contributes four originals, each of which exhibits a unique sensitivity to human emotion and a precious ability to capture the essence of the relationships between people. I'm sure I'm going to love "You Wear It Well" as much as "Mandolin Wind." It has the same kind of wistful melody and lyrics like these:

"I'm gonna write about the birthday you bought in town/You sat down and cried on the stairs/You knew it didn't cost the earth but for what it's worth/You made me feel just like a millionaire." As uncomplicated as they are, these words sing in a tone of voice that captures a moment not often communicated as truthfully (or communicated at all, for that matter). The three other originals don't fall far behind, especially "Lost Paradise." In treating these new songs, Rod has at his service an accomplished group of musicians, all of whom are completely sympathetic to what he's trying to do. Dick Powell's single violin on "You Wear It Well" and the reticent "Italian Girl" does more for me than the downpour of strings on any Elton John record; I can't understand why Mich Weller doesn't get more work, he hammers those drums so splendidly and Ron Wood? Well he never seems to make any mistakes when he's playing for his buddy Rod. Listen to the way his solo rides the rhythm of "Twistin' the Night Away," Stewart's tribute to his self-acknowledged idol, Sam Cooke.

And the arrangements played by this host of musicians (I mentioned only three) are ideally suited to the mood Rod wishes to create and at the same time, are completely refreshing when you might think you've heard every combination of instruments imaginable on rock and roll record. For instance, the intimacy of Dylan's "Mam You Been On My Mind" is bolstered by a straight forward grouping of Chest piano, acoustic guitar, upright bass, hush pedal steel and a light touch of drums. And a number of tracks feature what's by now become a Rod Stewart trademark: the simultaneous use of acoustic and electric guitars, mixed at an equal level creating a richness of texture that belies the simplicity of the technique. What Greil Marcus said about The Rod Stewart Album is true of Never A Dull Moment: "this one is a lot flashier, but damn few are any better."

Admittedly, Stewart is one of those rare artists who can take another person's song and make it wholly his own, completely transcending the tune from the original artist. "Angel" demonstrates this skill to perfection. Jimi Hendrix version comes off as a surreal fairy tale while Rod, with a touching tenderness, reveals the true worth of a beautiful love song.

'Slaughter House Five' Proves Fascinating Puzzle

by Lisa Charles
Most people who have read Kurt Vonnegut's "Slaughter House Five," and have not viewed the movie, claim the transition from a novel to a film would be impossible. It seems most difficult for anyone who is familiar with the author's writing style to imagine the production of a coherent, sequential film. Vonnegut's writing should understand that his presentation of events and characters is not often in chronological or coherent order. Thus, to fully comprehend one of Vonnegut's works, one must read it in its entirety and then proceed to assemble the fascinating puzzle he has created.

Perhaps it is now easier to question the possibility of successfully producing a film based on a novel of this nature without losing the profundity. Well, the producers did not take that chance. The movie version of "Slaughter House Five" is just as much of a puzzle as the novel.

Centering the theme on man's effort to evade inevitable self-destruction, Vonnegut concentrates on the mental "time trips" of Billy Pilgrim, played by Michael Sacks. A veteran of World War II, Billy mentally fluctuates from his childhood, to the war days in Dresden, Germany, to the present, future, and finally to another life on the planet Tralfamadore. However, the order of these events is not chronologically presented. The viewer may find himself totally immersed in a disturbing scene in Dresden where Billy witnesses the execution of his best and only friend. Then following this, Vonnegut chooses to bring the viewer along with Billy to the peaceful world of Tralfamadore. Obviously, it is difficult to avoid the emotional conflicts created by such a sequence. However, this increases the viewer's perception of Billy's complex character, and the attitudes he has developed from society's persecution and oppression. We begin to sympathize with Billy's mental condition after viewing him witness the death of 100,000 people in Dresden. Perhaps this film allows us the closest exposure to man's inner

While dark colors and a deadening silence frequently accompany the negative events, Billy's home in Ilium is a dream-like shade of white, signifying the "security and positive events in his life."

However, the most positive time trips Billy Pilgrim experiences are those to the planet Tralfamadore. The mental and physical pain, caused by a fatal plane crash and the death of Billy's wife, are alleviated by the pleasure and tranquility he finds on this planet. All is forgotten when Billy simply enjoys the present moment. The Tralfamadorians allow Billy a soothing atmosphere, peace of mind, and the opportunity to time travel whenever he pleases. However, the most valuable gift from the inhabitants of this planet is their theory of time, thus life.

"There is no now, there is no why; the moment simply is. The world is a collection of moments. To survive, one must concentrate on the good, positive moments."

Perhaps this is Vonnegut's message. Perhaps it is not. Both the novel and the film allow one to utilize his imagination and creativity in an effort to assemble the puzzle according to his personal interpretation. This is Vonnegut's greatest contribution to the literary and cinematic world.

Comedian Carlin Fails To Equal Reputation 'George Tried To Relate'

by Peter Campbell
Dogs and cats cannot laugh, and just a few humans claim that plants can. Laughter belongs to man... that elusive pram sipping from God to our navels via our senses.

Comedy, the delight in confusion, a human luxury which is a humane necessity. In a world that we like to think of as cold, cruel, and unrelenting, a sense of humor might be the only thing that keeps us sane. Comedy we may get from a variety of places, from our kin, our friends, and hopefully from our everyday perspective, our personal view of the world.

Every once in a while though, it is nice to have the source pumped a little by someone who really knows the art of laughter, by someone who can jest on a broader plane and can touch sensitive areas at a distance that is safe. For these occasions we have the specialist, that Shaman of the vicera, the "professional comic." America has had many comers, ranging from better or worse from Bob Hope to Alice Cooper. Their approach and style may be totally different. Yet they all have one simple measure for success: laughter.

A comic is only as good as the laughter he can elicit from his audience. George Carlin is such a specialist. But whatever makes comedy good certainly did not make it for him last Saturday night in the Gym. The laughter came, but it was thin.

Carlin is a monologist. He does not shoot off one-liners, or try to make a caricature out of himself. He just raps to you. He is a "cool" comedian in the McLuhanesque sense. So George Carlin came out, he roamed around the stage and mumbled about "warming up."

He played with the microphone, and managed to transform the feedback into Tibetan funeral hymns. This was funny and the audience laughed. He talked about the "job," being a comedian. Ah, so this is going to be an organic trip. No pre-set routines, no traveling salesmen and farmer's daughters or instant spasms, we are going to see an artist evolve his artistry. Total creation before our ears and eyes. He began by talking about how one learns to make people laugh when you are young. It seems that this involved a lot of burping, swallowing, and farting under the arms. Carlin sure got into making a lot of noises through the microphone. Who does not enjoy this indulgence? It is a lot of fun. But if one closed his eyes he could hear Bill Cosby everywhere. There was a difference though. Cosby's noises are built into a whole story, they heighten the dramatic buildup. ("Noah!" "Yes God?") But Carlin built a story around the noise and had nowhere to go thereafter. He rambled on. Parts about his Catholic education were funny ("six sins to one feel"). Then he tries to imitate a blackman; then he got political. Shades of Lenny Bruce creep in. He jumps from President Thieu to Puerto Ricans. He talks about his old hated night-club days. But here he was not funny, just earnest. Suddenly he sang a tune about drugs, "supermarket junkie." Then on to a thing about this. It was funny but went down. Then into "revolution" and "values" - Abbie Hoffman here - then back into shit - only it is dog shit this time. So it went.

George Carlin had an acute idea of what he wanted to do. Obviously, he hoped to interact with his audience, to have the audience participate, and not just passively accept his humor. He hinted this, and bled his heart to us on how he hated being the old sort of comic, when he was actually getting severely stoned, and all he did get it on with the audience, a few times by using the audience, for example, when the audience was led out of the aisles by the ever-ready campus security, or when one particular girl's laugh illuminated the gym. But participation is hard with two thousand people, and George could not pull it off. Realizing this, he'd slip back into the old comedy routine he was supposed to hate. (I bet he was terrible at the Coca-Cola.)

A lot of the audience left as George tried to relate. He could not pull it off. Maybe he was too stoned to be funny; maybe the things he would really liked to have expressed just did not seem funny to him. Has the world reached this state? But supposedly a comic could make your best friend's death hysterical. Anything for a laugh.

P.S. Jim Croce, the other attraction, did not appear. Jeff Wilson, the M.C. and head of the Concert Bureau said he would appear at a later concert. Instead two guys from Burlington, Tim Mackenzie and Charlie Gibb sang a few songs to guitar accompaniment. The reception was lukewarm, with half of the audience listening, and half talking right through. So we got thirty minutes of Muzak to talk over, even though they were decent. Typical. Typical.

It was bad enough going to the concert last Saturday night and being told "Jim Croce would not be there (although I for one had not gone to see him anyway), but insult was added to injury by the star of the show himself, no less, George Carlin.

Croce had a reoccurring case of malaria he probably did. No one would use such an excuse if it weren't true. If it was a lie and he just didn't show and

'The Wrong Guy Got Malaria'

by Stuart Desobry

It was bad enough going to the concert last Saturday night and being told "Jim Croce would not be there (although I for one had not gone to see him anyway), but insult was added to injury by the star of the show himself, no less, George Carlin.

Croce had a reoccurring case of malaria he probably did. No one would use such an excuse if it weren't true. If it was a lie and he just didn't show and that excuse was the best excuse the sponsors could come up with then you can begin to understand why the show went as it did with those people running things. Anyway, two local yokels were found to replace Croce, although replace seems to be the wrong word. It is more accurate to say that they showed and Croce didn't, but they were in a rough spot and you did have to feel a little for them, although you had to feel for the audience a little more. The duo did try to play a few Bob Dylan numbers during their performance but chose all the Dylan tunes that never really made it. If you're going to play Dylan, play good Dylan. Perhaps the highlight of their show... was... the announcement that their next song would be their last. The audience responded to this particularly well.

The worst was yet to come, though. George Carlin came on and spent a good deal of his time mumbling and tugging his hair on the stage. He said he would talk louder and more distinctly when he had something important to say, but he fortunately never kept that promise. If he had, those of us in the back row would have heard or understood a thing he said. It seemed that he was there to preach, not to make people laugh. It must have been my fault, though. I never should have gone to see him during an election year. Carlin refused to do any of his old routines and sang to himself a good deal of the time whenever he wished to change the subject. It helped to put him in the mood he claimed. There were flashes of brilliance like the Supermarket Junkie poem and the takeoff of America the Beautiful, but they were few and far between.

He was a man chastising businessmen for not caring what they produce while he was guilty of the same thing. To those of us who have seen and heard him on the other media, and regard him as one of the brightest of the young comics, the show was a bitter disappointment. The wrong guy got malaria.

SECOND COLLEGE EDITION
WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY of the American Language
COMPLETE REFERENCE EDITION
This new, completely revised WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY, based on the same exacting lexicographic standards as the first edition, is the only dictionary specifically designed for Americans in the 1970s.
Now with more entries, more pages than any other college dictionary. There are over 157,000 entries in the 1,728 pages of this edition, including over 20,000 new terms and meanings. And it adds important new features no other dictionary can claim:
The only college dictionary that tells you which words and meanings were born in America. Over 12,000 terms are identified as Americanisms, those words or meanings which first became part of the language in the United States.
The only college dictionary with etymologies of American place names. For the first time in any general dictionary of the language, the origins and explanations of the names of American cities, states, rivers, etc. are given.

These unique features in the Second College Edition of WEBSTER'S NEW WORLD DICTIONARY are important advances. But equally important is the tradition of excellence which Webster's large, permanent staff of lexicographers has carried forward.
Every entry is written from a contemporary American's point of view, either prepared afresh or carefully reexamined and reconstructed to bring it in line with the latest findings. Technical definitions were written by, or in consultation with, leading specialists in every discipline.
Words from obsolete to today's examples, and more, help you choose precisely the right word to convey just the right nuance of meaning.
More detailed etymologies than those of any comparable book are included, carried back, wherever possible, to a hypothetical Indo-European base.
All entries in a single alphabetical listing—with names of people and places, foreign expressions, abbreviations, etc., all appear in the main body of the book rather than in several time-consuming appendices.
Large, easily read type on glass-free white paper—both especially selected to make these pages the most inviting and readable of all dictionary texts.

And who knows, Groucho might even have said something at that auction if it hadn't been for Chico's over-obliging non-comprehension ("Why a duck?").

And then, there's Harpo. What can one say about Harpo? It is almost unfair and certainly frustrating to attempt in words to describe his beautifully wordless world, in its essence somehow so much more evocative than any of our verbally-entrenched ones. He is an artist par excellence, a genius (and incidentally, my favorite—a preference I would never attempt to claim as mine alone.)

But then, what can you say about any of them, all of them? Aren't they great? Aren't they incredible?

I assume I'll be seeing you again Friday night. Till then...

The Miami Herald critic commented that Cooper seems to be a single reincarnation of all four Beatles. Another reviewer describes his style as "soft and free flowing."

out side servings of mashed potatoes, peas, and corn until begged to stop. Slowly we munched and winced our way through the enormous meal. We took a brief rest (time-out) before dessert, which is offered at an optional cost of twenty-five cents (if you can get through the meal). We took a deep breath and delved into a large serving of creamy lemon, sherbert coated with a sweet wine sauce, a consensual way of ending the meal. After dessert, armed with our doggie bags which the management has pre-anticipated, we waddled out to start on the thirty minute drive back to UVM.

Price-wise, the Dog Team is very affordable to any student who wishes to eat well. Full course dinners start at $3.50 for chicken and rice to a $6.50 for steak. Our entire meal, including cocktails and tip cost about fifteen dollars for two persons.

Since only good things seem to be said about the Dog Team, it is understandable that they are so busy. 80% of business comes from tourists, states Jon Joy, manager, and much of that and the other 20% is by word-of-mouth to other students. The Dog Team will be open this fall from September 28, 1972 until 4:00 p.m. Luncheon is served on weekdays from 12:00 until 1:30 and on Sundays from 12:00 until 2:00. Next year the Dog Team will reopen in February should you miss your chance at it this year. Reservations are accepted only on Easter and Mother's Day.

Today's homey atmosphere is appreciated more because it is found less. If you have an unhurried evening ahead of you and are willing to wait for your dinner, try the Dog Team. All good things are worth waiting for.

Marx Brothers Films

Beginning Sunday, October 1, and every Sunday thereafter SA Films will give repeat showings of the Marx Brothers films that were shown the previous Friday evening in Cook Hall. There will be one showing of the film at 2:00 p.m. in the Benedict Hall Life Sciences Building and it will be free to all students. For further information, call 656-2597.

During the past two showings of Marx Brothers films in the Cook Science Hall, the audiences have left debris consisting of cans, paper, cigarette ashes, and so on. SAFilms wishes to make clear that 1) there is no drinking during any of our series offerings, and 2) that there is absolutely no smoking. If the type of debris continues that we have had so far, the films will be cancelled for the rest of the semester.

How Many Down, How Many To Go? As Elm Trees Disappear

given to anyone who asks is simply that the trees are diseased and therefore dead or dying and so they must be removed. Dutch elm disease is the culprit and it is as threatening to American Elms as cancer is to mankind. Research, money and an informed and careful community are what's needed to mitigate the devastating effects of this disease for it moves swiftly - like cancer, which used to gracefully frame the campus walk where the SA signs are now hung. Unlike what we think we know about Cancer, the Dutch elm disease is highly transmittable from one diseased victim to another. Sick or dead trees must be removed from an area as quickly as possible so that the remaining trees stand a better chance of survival - hence the cutting and felling of trees on the UVM green. Every year we observe similar precautionary measures enacted on campus but we still are losing our elms. The problem is that we are not getting the diseased trees out fast enough and some trees haven't been removed at all because they are technically the university's responsibility.

members of the community is also essential. Many private home owners and businesses contributing to the inevitable extinction of all of our city's elms by negligence and/or ineffective removal of diseased and/or beetle-bred trees. Very little is being done to protect healthy elms through fertilization programs and necessary pruning of dead wood. Our University and community re-planting programs can hardly keep up with the effects of the disease. Dr. Gordon Nielson of the UVM Entomology Department has devoted years of research and personal effort to the problem of the Dutch elm disease. While he feels that certain spraying programs and treatments (such as Benlate and the pesticide methoxychlor now being used at Dartmouth College) can be successful, they are not to be confused as a panacea or used as an easy way out for the community at large. Dr. Nielson feels quite strongly that a combination of measures, such as mentioned above, should become our goals immediately if we want to save our remaining elms. If the natural beauty and serenity of our environment is one of our priorities we must combine our efforts, time and money in order to create the kind of informed program which presently does not exist. It is the feeling of the UVM "Environmental Program" that such a campaign is an excellent example of how students and community members can get together in order to address themselves to the multitude of complex problems and priorities we must face now in order to improve and maintain the kind of environment we really want and need. All interested students and staff members are therefore urged to be invited to leave your name address and phone number c/o "Project Elm" at the SA desk in Billings Center during the week of Monday, Oct. 2 to Friday October 6th in order to determine how you can help. Fund raising slide shows, musical concerts, public meetings and the distribution of informative pamphlets throughout the Burlington community are just some of the ideas we have in mind. Additional suggestions are needed. It is our last chance to preserve these elms and all that they have contributed to our environment. Such a campaign can be an effective and constructive opportunity for all of us to truly discover what "progress" can mean - both in relation to the preservation of the qualities of our community, as well as the development of new qualities.

Students and staff returning to the UVM campus after the summer break undoubtedly noticed the jughandle massacre which now dominates the Main and Spear Street intersection near our campus. Many of us were outraged. But then what did we expect? "Progress" is an industrious force indeed. God knows we do need that extra road room and auto-age organization. It makes it easier for two-car families to cruise out to Route 7 and all of its modern driving conveniences so as to shop for that third car maybe - you know, "the fun car." Really, how could we survive if we couldn't race through town to any one of our many wonderful shopping plazas all located on top of each other and us? And what of the students who can't manage the walk from their dorms or apartments to Waterman? So, in spite of a desperate effort on the part of some old fashioned fanatics on campus last spring most of us didn't give the "choice" much thought. Once again the noisy priorities of the "silent majority" have become reality. The Burlington Free Press used the phrase "Many Down, More to Go" to accompany a photograph of the marvelously efficient work of a team of tree surgeons. The picture depicted an impressive row of elm stumps on Main Street, the "first step in construction of the new jughandle." Indeed, in one day of serious and careful labour those expendable trees fell and they were followed by more later. It was as simple as that. But the moaning sound of chain saws has kept bringing Elms down, now on the UVM campus green. This introduces the subject of this article. To the best of anyone's knowledge they're not planning for another "cement-wonder" on the green so why all the cutting? The obvious answer

Presently, neither the University nor the Burlington communities at large has enough money to effectively control the disease and save our remaining elms. Distribution of information about the nature of the disease in order to properly educate

U.V.M. SPORTS

COMMENTARY

by Rich Halpern

The Canadian-Russian series, which was originally billed as a type of mismatch between the professional NHL Canadian All Stars and the Russian Amateur All Stars has undoubtedly not lived up to its advance billing. The mismatch which had been predicted has never materialized and much to this writer's chagrin. I too was disillusioned by the hockey media into believing that, at worst, Team Canada would win six out of the eight encounters with the Russians outright. The series stands 3-2-1 and one must wonder if the Soviet fans should be allowed to view the inferior brand of stickhandling, passing and goaltending, which has characterized the Canadians play. Russia's excellent positional play, ability to forecheck and backcheck and the acrobatic saves of goaltender Vladimir Tretiak have certainly overshadowed the performance of the supposedly invincible Canadian All Stars.

Of course one may present the theories that key individuals such as Bobby Orr, Derek Sanderson and Bobby Hull have not played; that some Canadian players are not playing at full tilt in order to avoid injuries which could curtail their playing time with their respective team. This writer feels the answer does not lie here, but rather in the realization that the Russians, in this series, are playing a more disciplined and an overall superior game of hockey. The Russian's performance has been marked by crisp passing, tenacious checking and most importantly, Russia has exhibited the ability to come from behind.

Canadian coach, Harry Sinden, has certainly left himself open to criticism with moves such as the benching of Montreal's Peter Mahovlich, after his superb play in game two as well as displaying a reluctance to bench Ranger stars Rod Seiling and Rod Gilbert, who have not contributed much to the games so far.

At this time one must wonder what the eventual affect this second rate performance will have on the die-hard NHL fans. I submit that the next time one walks into the tradition laden halls of the Boston Garden or Montreal Forum, the question should arise, "Am I about to witness another display of expansion diluted hockey which is inferior to that played in other parts of the world?" At this juncture viewing the Russian performance, the answer appears quite obvious.

Vermont Falls To UConn 0-7

This past weekend, I took the road with a moderate expense account and journeyed the 250 odd miles to Storrs, Connecticut, with the hope of viewing an exciting game of football. I am glad to report my expectations were fulfilled.

After losing the Tom and kicking off to the Huskies, the Cats held them and were able to take over on their own 48 following the punt.

UVM marched the ball down to the Huskies 4 yard line with the help of an interference call.

With the ball on the four and the fourth down coming up many expected the Cats to try for a field goal, instead UVM went for the whole pile of beans as Olson threw a pass to Wegis that was just out of reach.

This was pretty much the way things went for the first two quarters. UVM's defense was able to hold UConn, but our offense was not able to generate enough momentum to break through at the crucial moments. Vermont's only other chance to score in the first half was in the second quarter when Jakubinski missed a 40-yard field-goal attempt by a few feet.

UConn's lone tally came with 4:20 left in the third quarter. It came on the first play after Karl Daikin's punt, which Brian Herosian fielded and returned 8 yards to the 20. Ray Teller then hit Greg Andrews on the first play from scrimmage with a pass just inside the midfield stripe. After avoiding one tackler successfully, nothing stood between him and the goal line.

Steve Coon received UConn's kickoff on the 13 and stormed up to the 45, before he was tackled. The Cat's then marched to the 16 only to have an Olson to Billy Looker pass intercepted by Dick Lincoln.

Vermont got the ball twice after that but failed to score. Although we lost, this was an exciting game. Vermont hit hard and had a tremendous defense. The offense was there also but not at the right times. Once the offense starts moving, Vermont can look forward to one of its best seasons in recent years.

In the statistics column, Vermont was held to 77 yards rushing while the Huskies themselves were only able to gain 71. The biggest difference in the passing department between the two teams was the 81 yard touchdown pass in the third quarter. The rest of the statistics are listed below.

Film highlights of one of the most physical games in recent Vermont football history will be shown by the coaching staff at the second weekly University of Vermont Booster luncheon, Thursday (Sept. 28), at the Hi-Hat Restaurant, beginning at 12 noon.

The public is welcome to the luncheon to meet the football staff and watch highlights of the Vermont-Connecticut game of last Saturday, which UConn won, 7-0.

Tickets ($2 each) for the meeting may be purchased at the door the day of the luncheon.

Following the hard-nosed defensive game against the University of Connecticut, the Vermont Catamounts appear to be physically set for Lehigh. Only minor injuries plague some of the Catamounts.

UVM Bows To Husky Booters

This past weekend UVM sports was doubly dismal as the UVM soccer team met with defeat at the hands of the UConn Huskies. This was the first time in our team's history that UConn has beaten us. When asked why, coach Don Soderberg said it was a case of being beaten to the ball, and not one of being out of condition.

Vermont held sway in the early first half, but fell prey to the Huskies later in the half and were never able to regain their momentum. The Huskies played with extreme dexterity with little fault to be found in their ball handling.

UVM scored its first goal with 17:02 left in the first half. It came on a set up by John Hubbard when he passed to the left side of goalie Jon Demeter and Jack Connelly put a perfect head shot into the lower left corner while Demeter was on the ground after knocking Hubbard's shot away.

Nine minutes later, at 8:09 the Huskies scored on a play by Ron Fedus and an assist by Frantz Innocent.

Last year's high scorer for the Cats Peter Breen, scored the second goal of the game for UVM 30 minutes into the second half, with a head shot that just succeeded in eluding Demeter's grasp. Bob Buzzell got the assist for that score.

Connecticut scored with 4:47 left in the game to tie up the score and send the game into overtime. The tying score came on Tim Hunter's boot past goalie Brad Gregory; Innocent got the assist.

The winning goal came at 2:10 in the first two overtime periods. Bill Cooke took a pass from Innocent and drilled it into the left side of the net.

If it hadn't been for Frantz Innocent, things might have gone different for the Cats. Innocent had three assists and was moving the ball like a pro. The UVM defenders were hard pressed to keep up with him.

All in all the game was not lopsided. The statistics prove it was a close game. UVM had 28 shots on goal to Connecticut's 25; both had 6 corner kicks. Gregory, the Vermont goalie, had 11 saves while Demeter and Young, the two UConn goalies, tallied up 8 saves.

This weekend Vermont plays host to Bridgeport at Post Field, at 11 on Saturday. Try to show up and cheer the Cats on to victory.

Wayne Hulman, Co-captain and outstanding player in last weekends game with the Huskies.

Lehigh Game Seen As Important

If last week's game with Connecticut was classified as crucial, then this Saturday's game with Lehigh University has to be labeled as a game of vital importance for the University of Vermont football team, as they move into the second week of the season.

Vermont, despite an outstanding game by the defense, lost a heart-breaker to Connecticut last Saturday, 7-0, as an 81-yard routine "over the middle pass route" developed into a game-winning "bomb" for the host Huskies before over 10,000 fans.

The Catamount defense, led by their three linebackers, co-captain Rich Rostowsky (seven unassisted tackles), Doug Bull (broke up three passes and recovered one fumble) and Stu Jones (in on nine tackles), kept the Connecticut offense to an average of 6.9 yards per offensive series, not counting the 81-yard scoring play. "There isn't any doubt but that one play was the difference in the game, but it was also our failure to capitalize on scoring opportunities when we had them early," said head coach Carl Falivene. One or two key penalties (Vermont only had three in the entire game) in critical situations hurt.

Offensively, with all 11 starters back from last year, along with some key junior college transfers, Vermont is expected to rebound this Saturday, but it will have to be against a veteran Lehigh defensive contingent which returns 13 lettermen, 11 of which saw considerable playing time. Earl Olson will again be at the helm for the Yankee Conference - Catamounts, looking for their first win over Lehigh. Last year's meeting (Lehigh won, 49-8) was the first between the two schools.

'Concerned Students' Present Nine-Point Platform In Senate Election

by Jen Covey

Calling themselves a group of Concerned Students, several candidates for the SA Senate have joined together under a nine-point platform. Their statement of purpose is that UVM should exist "to serve the needs of both students and the community. It should be a liberating force through which students may realize their true creative potentials and through which the community can draw vital resources needed to build a humane society for all of its members."

Their platform is mainly concerned with more student-faculty-employee control of all aspects of the University. "The relevant constituencies in the University community, namely the students, faculty, and non-faculty staff have little power in the decision making process which greatly affects their lives, such as allocation of financial resources, admissions and hiring procedures, curriculum, etc. All decisions should be open to the students-faculty-workers and the Burlington community. The desires of all mentioned should be significant factor in all decision making." They mention the present Spear Street jog-handle project which "has irreparably destroyed the natural landscape of the campus and the Burlington community" as an action that forces them to "demand the right to know what the priorities of this University are."

Two other planks in the platform demand an increase in the minority enrollment proportionate to the national population and more relevant minority studies open to all students. This policy would also affect an increase in the minority proportion of the faculty and non-academic employees. "As of now it is reported that the enrollment is proportionate to the state of Vermont population which has an almost invisible minority population. We would like to bring this proportion on the national level." They are also asking that the courses on minorities "be led by instructors of the same minority which their courses are based upon."

Another plank is concerned with equal treatment for women in the University community. "We feel treatment of women should be furthered in the areas of employment, studies and health care. In regard to health care, we wish to expand the present health facilities to include more precise information on birth control, abortions, and diseases strictly related to those of the female sex, and to make this information and care more readily attainable."

In another area of concern

the students state: "We deplore the monopoly of the University store over school supplies, and thus, actively encourage and support all efforts aimed at creating a student co-operative which would give real monetary relief to the entire university community. We also deplore SAGA's monopoly of campus dining facilities and therefore call for an end to the coupling of the housing and meal contracts." The coalition also supports efforts to lower in-state tuition and give aid to out-of-state students. They explain that even though "Vermont is one of the poorest states in the union, the state

Shortest S.A. Senate Meeting In Years

The meeting of the SA Senate ran an unprecedented fifteen minutes. There was no old business on the floor, two major motions had already been tabled until next week when the newly-elected Senate will convene. These motions deal with a proposed financial policy SA recognized organizations and a recommendation to the city of Burlington to pass an ordinance that would state the right of an individual to possess marijuana, as a regulated drug.

A representative of the Shaker Mountain School, an unstructured private school on South Prospect Street, came to ask why permission for their students to swim in the University pool had not been renewed. Last year they had been granted the permission to do so. President Bill Sisco said that it was a matter of presidential discretion; he has not granted permission to any outside group with the

by Jeff Ewen

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group charged that the State Department of Labor and Industry has given industrial lobbyists preferential treatment in the release of a statewide health and safety plan. VPIRG director Scott Skinner said that the plan had been given to the Associated Industries of Vermont "well before its release to labor unions and the general public."

On Friday, September 22, Skinner went to the office of Labor & Industry Commissioner Louis Lavin and requested a copy of the plan. While he was allowed to inspect the proposal in the Commissioner's office, Skinner was denied a copy by Lavin, who stated that the plan was still in draft form and had not been published in the Federal Register yet. According to the Commissioner, the plan had not yet been given out to anyone.

However, a check with J.R. Mereness, Associated Industries of Vermont's executive director, revealed that the industry group had received a copy of the plan about a week before Skinner was told that it was not yet available. Mereness would not disclose who had given him the plan, saying merely, "It was someone in the Department, but I forget who."

In a statement released to the press, VPIRG Director Skinner stated, "If the Department of Labor and Industry's policy is to give special favors, one wonders how impartial they will be in administering these vital occupational laws."

The job health and safety plan was drawn up by the Department at the direction of the state legislature. The authority to devise and enforce such a plan was included in a bill containing guidelines set down by the federal government in 1970.

The Vermont Legislature assigned the task to the Department of Labor and Industry instead of submitting to the jurisdiction of the federal law, which would have included inspection of business and industry in the state by federal officials. The AIV opposed such actions, preferring rules and inspections by the state agency.

Congresswoman Chisholm Cites Racism As Country's Enemy

by Dan Haslam

Mrs. Shirley Chisholm, a handsome black Congresswoman from New York, spoke appealingly to a full Ira Allen Chapel here on Friday night.

Mrs. Chisholm shed her views on a variety of issues which she feels are foremost in American politics. The first was a forceful condemnation of the war in Viet Nam, which she attacked the Nixon administration of financing a "corrupt regime" in South Viet Nam. She further stated that nothing can effectively be done domestically as long as our country is operating

Her domestic appeal enlightened and captured the audience which included proportionately many blacks and women.

"There is a crisis of a lack of self-confidence in this land," Mrs. Chisholm explained that crime, consumer problems, public education, and public health care are the most prevalent issues today. She called for "total slum clearance by 1976," and a compulsory health insurance program, explaining that "Medical care in a democratic country should not be a privilege, it should be a right." She added a need for more low-income housing and day-care centers for working mothers. She would finance such programs by closing loopholes in corporate taxes and the ending of unnecessary government subsidies. The final point Mrs. Chisholm made was that of the inequalities which she feels exist within this country, stating, "The enemy of our country is within our country. RACISM - the bugaboo of our country!" She allayed the fears of the white community who feel that black people are trying to take over, saying, "There's enough in this country for everybody." She added, "God help the poor Indian. At least the blacks are rising and getting a piece of the pie."

An impressed audience rose to compliment Mrs. Chisholm with a standing ovation, after which she placed the floor open for question.

When queried about the black woman's role, she replied by saying that black women are "at the bottom of the heap," and that they "are a very strong individual, we've had to be strong."

She was then asked about the Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution (which many states have yet to ratify) which she supports. She responded with, "This country is hung up psychologically, physically, and intellectually with sex. Equal employment opportunities do not exist for non-whites and women in this country."

Mrs. Chisholm was introduced as a woman "unbought and unbossed." Near the end of the program she was asked what she felt her role was in American politics. She ended by saying that she was "a shaper-upper of this system within this system. I'm a pricker of conscience."

Overcrowding Being Remedied In Dorms

by Linda Goodspeed,

Jeanne Cook

The problem of overcrowding at UVM is still a problem. But at the beginning of the semester there were 231 girls and 92 boys who did not have a room assignment. Emergency housing set up triples and used floor lounges and suite lounges to house these freshmen. In an attempt to be as fair as possible, Housing selected alphabetically every seventh girl and every fifteenth boy to live in these temporary assignments. The lowest numbers were then given out to the least desirable rooms and high numbers to the more accommodating conditions.

Now, according to Dr. Keith Miser, director of Housing, 66 girls and 57 boys have thus far been transferred to permanent rooms. Housing will continue moving freshmen as soon as the space is made available by those students leaving the university.

The freshmen will be given a weekend notice to make necessary moving arrangements. There is a station wagon available at Housing to assist in their transportation and many RA's have been most cooperative.

Housing has decided to empty all lounges first since it is an inconvenience to everyone on the floor. (At present, they are working on the lounges in Harris-Millis.)

October 16 is the date set by Housing to give a refund of $67 to all students still living in triples. This figure was arrived at by taking 1/3 of the total cost of a double room, adding an extra $10 (approximately the cost to UVM for converting double rooms into triples and then subtracting this from their original payment. They have not decided if the refund will be in the form of a check or as credit towards next semester. There is no indication that any serious problems have been created due to the overcrowding either academic or personal.

According to Dr. Miser, the majority of students and parents feel they have been treated fairly and have been very cooperative.

No new housing contracts will be accepted for next semester, although Dr. Miser feels that the situation should be back to normal by second semester.

Trustees To Meet Saturday Morning

The October meeting of the University Board of Trustees will be held Saturday morning, October 7 at 8:30 AM in Memorial Lounge of Waterman. The agenda for the meeting includes reports by the Audit, Executive, Investment, Student Activities, Development, Educational Policy and Finance-Budget Committees.

Eugene Beaudoin, Chairman of the Student Representatives to the Board, told the Cynic that the most important committee report will be that of the Student Activities Committee. "The Student Activities report will cover the overcrowding problems in the dorms - why it happened. There should also be some news about the health fee situation," Beaudoin said.

Fackler To Resign As Director Of E.P.

The following memorandum was issued to teachers and students in the Experimental Program by Jon Fackler, Director.

This past Friday, I informed President Andrews and Dean Weiger of my intention to resign as Director of the Experimental Program, effective, at the latest, May 15, 1973. I have worked in the EP in one capacity or other since the fall of 1969, and this spring I will see the first class of Experimental Program students graduate from the University. My announcement at this time is not the result of some early autumn madness, but is made now to give whatever search apparatus the University sets up ample time between now and spring to find my successor.

I have really enjoyed the time I have had in the Experimental Program. As I told the President, "The good support I have had from many of our teachers and students has made a difficult job a good deal easier. It is mainly through their efforts that the Experimental Program is becoming something of which the University community, by and large, can be proud."

Mr. Fackler could not be reached for comment.

Proposed New S.A. Financial Policy For Student Organizations, To Be Approved By Senate

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

- The Student Association (S.A.) of the University of Vermont (UVM) shall be financially responsible only for University accounts appropriately designated as "S.A. Accounts."
- The S.A. and any officer of the S.A., shall not hereafter be responsible for the accounting procedures or the signature procedures of any University account other than those appropriately designated as "S.A. Accounts."

FINANCIAL PROCEDURES OF THE S.A. TREASURER, FINANCE COMMITTEE, AND SENATE

- S.A. MONIES
 - S.A. monies are those funds:
 - Paid by each member of the S.A. for the "Student Activity Fee."
 - Earned by any S.A. recognized organization
 - Earned by investments of the S.A.
 - The S.A. Senate is the only authorized body to appropriate S.A. monies.
 - Monies appropriated by the S.A. Senate shall only be allocated to S.A. Accounts.

II REQUEST FOR APPROPRIATION OF S.A. MONIES

- An appropriation shall be the designation of use or application of allocated funds.
- The S.A. Senate, Finance Committee and Treasurer shall restrict all reviews, recommendations and appropriations of S.A. monies to S.A. recognized organizations, and the S.A. recognized organizations' respective S.A. accounts.
- The S.A. Treasurer shall receive all requests for the appropriation of S.A. monies.
- The S.A. Treasurer or his respective delegate shall review each request for appropriation of S.A. monies.
 - Review shall be limited to the following:

- Examination of the organization's "Statement of Purpose."
 - Consideration of the organization's history of performance and management;
 - Evaluation of the S.A.'s "Balanced Budget."
- E. The S.A. Treasurer or his respective delegate shall report the request for appropriation, accompanied by his recommended action, to the S.A. Finance Committee within one week of receiving the said request.

- F. One week is appropriate to seven academic days. The S.A. Finance Committee shall review each request for the appropriation of S.A. monies and present the request accompanied by a recommended action to the S.A. Senate.

- Review shall be limited to the following:
 - Examination of the organization's "Statement of Purpose."
 - Consideration of the organization's history of performance and management;
 - Evaluation of the S.A.'s "Balanced Budget."
- Presentation shall be at first S.A. Senate meeting to be held once the Finance Committee's review is complete and recommended action determined.
- S.A. recognized organizations requesting appropriation of S.A. monies shall maintain availability to the S.A. Finance Committee for interview during review procedures of said request.

- G. The S.A. Senate shall receive each appropriation request from the S.A. Finance Committee and place said request on the S.A. Senate agenda for further action.
- H. The S.A. Treasurer shall allocate appropriated S.A. monies to the requesting S.A. recognized organization's designated S.A. account within one week, seven academic days, of S.A. Senate action of approval on said appropriation request.

III EXPENDITURE OF S.A. MONIES

- A. Expenditure of S.A. monies by S.A. recognized organization shall occur only after following appropriation through budgeting by established S.A. procedures, as outlined above, and allocation of said monies to the organization's designated S.A. Account.

- B. Expenditure of S.A. monies shall only be from S.A. accounts.

- C. Purchase procedures by an S.A. recognized organization

- Purchases shall only be made by the utilization of an S.A. Purchase Order Voucher (S.A. POV.)
- Items to be purchased by the expenditure of S.A. monies shall be listed in the designated area of the S.A. POV.
- The S.A. POV shall be presented to the S.A. Treasurer or his respective delegate for review of the signatures of the organization's treasurer and faculty advisor, the organization's "Statement of Purpose," and, if applicable, the records of budget hearings conducted for the appropriation of said S.A. monies to be expended. Following the reviews procedure, the S.A. Treasurer, or his respective delegate, shall affix his initials to the S.A. POV in the designated area.

- Prior to release of the S.A. POV, the S.A. Treasurer shall note on said S.A. POV in the designated area:
 - The "Budget Balance" in the respective account of the said organization;
 - The initials of the S.A. Treasurer;
 - The number of the POV.

- The S.A. Treasurer shall release the S.A. POV to the organization for purchasing.
- Withdrawal procedures from S.A. accounts shall be conducted in the following manner:

Mrs. J. Thompson Co-Authors Article

UVM's new specialist in Canadian literature, Instructor J. Lee Thompson of the English Department, is co-author of an article, "Ralph Connor and the Canadian Identity," which was published in Queen's Quarterly last spring.

Her fellow author is her husband, John H. Thompson, lecturer in Canadian history at McGill University in Montreal. The subject of the article, Connor, was one of the most popular Canadian novelists in the first third of this century. Readers will remember his "Black Rock," "Sky Pilot," and "The Great North."

Mrs. Thompson is a member of the "recently organized" Writers' Co-op of Montreal, a group which attempts to give able beginning writers an opportunity to be read, especially by major publishers through a program which features the actual publication of members' writings when they are deemed ready for publication.

Two novels have already been issued by this group, which invites interested writers in the United States as well as in Canada to consider becoming members.

Student Advisory Committee

The Student Advisory Committee to the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences will meet Wednesday, October 11 at 7:00 PM in Marsh Lounge, Billings. The what committee?

The Student Advisory Committee is made up of about 15-20 representatives who are juniors and seniors (one from each of the major disciplines in Arts and Sciences). The committee meets with the Dean to discuss matters of mutual interest to students and the Arts college administration. In addition, the Student Advisory Committee has representatives on most of the standing faculty committees (for example, Admissions, Academic Standing, Curriculum, etc.). In this way the committee can be an instrument of communication between students and the Dean.

Student Advisory Committee To Meet

The Student Advisory Committee to the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences will meet Wednesday, October 11 at 7:00 PM in Marsh Lounge, Billings. The what committee?

The Student Advisory Committee is made up of about 15-20 representatives who are juniors and seniors (one from each of the major disciplines in Arts and Sciences). The committee meets with the Dean to discuss matters of mutual interest to students and the Arts college administration. In addition, the Student Advisory Committee has representatives on most of the standing faculty committees (for example: Admissions, Academic Standing, Curriculum, etc.). In this way the committee can be an instrument of communication between students and faculty and between students and the Dean.

However, many students don't know that the committee exists, or don't know who their representative is. In fact, several departments simply have not elected representatives.

If anyone is concerned about such things as the grading system, course quality/content, college rules, and the like, he should find out who his major is represented by and tell him what his opinions are. If a department isn't represented and a student is interested in working on the committee, he can come to the meeting next Wednesday, October 11.

There are eight positions open for members-at-large from the classes of 1975 and 1976 (four from each class). All freshmen and sophomores interested in membership on the committee are especially invited to attend next Wednesday's meeting.

Current Activities At Newman Center

There will be an INFORMATIONAL EVENING for those wishing to learn about the Leap Program, at the Cunningham Newman Center, Oct. 8, 7:30 p.m. The Leap is a spiritual formation and renewal program for young men and women, 18-25 years old. A Leap weekend attempts to provide a taste of Christian community. The next Leap is scheduled for Oct. 27-29 in West Burke, Vt. Former "leapers" will be present during the informational evening to help describe the Leap Program.

questions will be provided. The speakers are to be announced.

Bishop Robert F. Joyce, UVM alumnus will celebrate the 11:30 Eucharist Sunday, Oct. 8 and give the sermon. Bishop Joyce has recently retired as head of the Burlington Diocese. Students will prepare breakfast for Bishop Joyce and the Center's Board of Trustees.

The Course in Basic Catholicism continues into its fourth week. Future topics will stress "Various forms of prayer in Roman Catholicism," "Jesus and the moral life," "History of Church Structure." The course meets every Wednesday, 7:00-8:00 pm. No Charge. Students may come to individual lectures.

MARRIAGE PREPARATION Course to begin at Cunningham Newman Center, Oct. 9, 7:30 pm. A six week series to prepare couples for marriage begins Monday evening. The series includes a variety of speakers and topics: church and civil requirements, physiology of marriage, sexuality, economics. Discussion is encouraged. No charge.

ETV Special On Venereal Disease

Two programs hit hard at venereal disease on Vermont ETV this week. "VD Blues," a special launching a far-reaching campaign to combat a nationwide epidemic of venereal disease, will be seen Monday (Oct. 9) at 8 p.m. Music, comedy, and dramatic vignettes containing medical and social information about VD are featured. Broadway and film stars James Coco and Robert Driscoll play a disagreeable pair of VD germs in a parable written and directed by Israel Horowitz; a ghetto doctor's commitment to his community is seen in a filmed report, all a part of "Special of the Week."

Tuesday (Oct. 10) at 7:30 p.m., "What, In My House?" will be Vermont ETV's portion of the VD plug. Dr. Charles Houston will host authorities from the field of communicable diseases in a discussion of the problems of venereal disease -- and some level-headed solutions. Guests include: Sandy Olin and Dr. Geoffrey Smith from the Vermont Department of Health. Repeats Wednesday (Oct. 11) at 1 p.m. in the "Learning Block."

Wednesday at 7:30 p.m., coordinators of the 12th annual Vermont Teachers' Convention will discuss the highlights of the session which begins in Burlington Oct. 19 on Vermont School Report."

M. Frits Lang's thrilling story of crime and pursuit will be featured on "Film Odyssey" Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. The 1934 production first thrust Peter Lorre into prominence.

French comic opera stars Florence Faunal and Jean Aubert sing the roles of Eurydice and Orpheus in "Orpheus in Hell" on Thursday (Oct. 12) nights 9 p.m. "International Performance" The modern French television production is a lively opera parody of the ancient Greek legend.

Sailing Club Begins First Year At UVM

by Susan Oberheimer

Each fall many UVM students wish they could go sailing but can't simply because they don't know anyone in the area with a boat. This fall things changed! A group of land locked UVM students got together and formed the University of Vermont Sailing Club (U.V.M.S.C.). The Club is composed of students with a wide range of sailing abilities. Some members have sailed their whole life while others have never sailed before but would like to learn.

Members of the U.V.M.S.C. are entitled to go sailing afternoons and weekends and are able to attend lectures given by the Club. The lectures will be given on a variety of topics ranging from basic sailing knowledge to advanced naval architecture and celestial navigation.

The University of Vermont Sailing Team, a subsidiary of the Sailing Club, is in the process of being formed. This team hopes to race competitively against Lake Champlain sailors as well as the sailing teams of other New England Colleges and Universities.

The U.V.M.S.C. is not just an early fall, late spring club. The Sailing Club has plans for ice boating in the winter and there is talk of building a small motorboat when the snow flies. Of course, lectures will be given and meetings held throughout the winter.

So, if you or any of your friends are sailors or even if you wish you were a sailor come to our meetings which are held at 8:00 PM in B106 Cook on Mondays and keep your eyes on the Campus Bulletin Boards for announcements of our Club functions. If you have any questions about the Sailing Club phone Susan Oberheimer (Secretary of U.V.M.S.C.) at 862-1483.

Exotic Dishes To Delight You

Those wild rumors you've been hearing about there being an Anthropology Club on campus are true. To prove it, we are sponsoring an Ethnic Dinner on Sunday, October 22. If you've been hungering for a taste of the exotic or have some of your own to contribute make plans to attend. For $5.00 you can sample dishes you'll never find in the SAGA lunch line. You'll also have a chance to find out what anthropology at UVM is like and what they are really doing up there under the eaves of William Science. So leave your name, address, and phone number at the Anthro Department ext. 3884, or contact Brian Mooney, 658-3846, or Cecily Orr, 656-3806, for more information.

Letters To The Editor

UVM's Greek System Employs Ideal Of Serving Others Daily

September 30, 1972

Dear Sir:

I noted with interest and amusement Ken Textor's letter of September 26th, which appeared in the last issue of the Cynic. In my seven year association with the University of Vermont, I recollect no letter appearing in your pages which has been so well constructed yet so far off base.

Initially, one has to feel a certain amount of sympathy for Mr. Textor, that his small world has no room in it for manners of thought or lifestyles to which he does not personally subscribe. It is this type of very narrow perspective that must be a great responsibility for our nation's present disregard for individual lives and modes of living, as demonstrated in our handling of the affairs of South-East Asia. It is also this lack of tolerance that has resulted in the racial and religious bigotry that so degrades what America could and should be.

In addition to his gross narrowmindedness, his letter indicates a quite total ignorance on his part of the fundamental ideals and workings of the Greek system. He implies that fraternity men are simply and solely "saucey beer drinkers" and that sorority women are "coy little mistresses". He might note that right out of the last ten S.A.

Presidents were Greeks. Seven out of the last ten CYNIC Editors were Greek (including the present one). Greek cumulative averages are consistently higher than all-campus averages. In fact, the great majority of campus leadership (academic and social) has come from the Greek sector. This is an interesting fact, Ken, when one considers your assumption that Greeks are "self-indulgent" and "socially-unconscious".

It must be admitted that your criticism of the Fraternities of the '50's is somewhat apt and just. Things were that way then, but the Greek system, along with most campus institutions, has evolved into something quite different today. Unfortunately, you seem to have no conception of what the Greeks of the '70's do or stand for. Quite simply, Ken, you're out of touch. Fraternities no longer practice the demeaning pledging rituals they were once noted for. (All that went out when you were wearing your letter sweater and sipping malts in high school, Ken.) And Saturday night parties are a very small part of the picture. You seem totally oblivious of the fact that the Greeks, perhaps more than any other group on campus, participate actively in local charitable drives, parties for underprivileged children, and a myriad of additional activities from which they elicit and receive very little publicity. Greek participation in Varsity and intramural athletics is another factor that cannot be understated. All of this leaves very little time for "saucey beer-drinking". Your reasoning, Ken, and acquaintance with the facts are apparently less sound than your "ecologically sound bicycle."

The one aspect of being a Greek that I cannot express is, perhaps, the most significant one. And it is, apparently, one that, sadly enough, you will never be able to understand. It is the bond of living and working together and being a part of something that has to be experienced to be understood, and its significance extends far beyond the small group of which one is a member. I don't suggest that this is particular to the Greek system, but it is certainly something of which you could ever have been a part. It is a sad commentary of our generation that people such as yourself seem so firmly to believe that genuine concern for the direction we as a people are taking, and involvement in the great social causes of our time, preclude the validity of a few hours of just "merry youth". In this sense, I am most sorry for you.

Yours very truly,
Steve Waltien, '70

A Bicycle Burr

Dear Editor:

Poor Mr. Textor. One can only suppose that there was a burr on the seat of his "ecologically sound" bicycle. I can think of nothing else that would make him so bitter about observing several hundred people enjoying themselves.

Women's Abortion Right Theirs, Not Legislature's

Dear Sir,

We are a group of women who have exchanged experiences about abortions we have had either legally or illegally. We now know that there is a great difference between the two, both emotionally and medically. We support all women who have had an abortion or will decide to have one. All women should have the right not only to make this decision but to have an abortion in a legal and medically safe facility which provides emotional support and education about their bodies.

Legislation against abortion does not suppress abortions or the need for them. It simply makes them dangerous and costly. The need for abortion is inevitable given the dangers and inadequacies of existing birth control methods. Until priority is given to improving birth control methods and to educating women about their bodies, the need for abortion will not decrease. Women bear the brunt of these inadequacies and should be in control of their bodies and their lives. The right to decide whether or not a woman will bear a child should not be determined by legislators and not in those of the legislature. We call on all women and men who support legalized abortion to get in touch with us, P.O. Box 81, Essex, Vt. We also urge you to write letters to newspapers and legislators.

'Mindless Cogs In A Machine?'

To the Editor of the Cynic:

Are you bored with classes? Are they only a place to sleep? Well, it's your life. Why not demand what you want to be pushed.

Once a professor has tenure, it's hard for him to be fired. And, there's no worry about off campus. What a sinure! It is up to you to make a dull class interesting. Take an active part and flex your muscles a little. It might feel good. The failure of the American Dream is epitomized in the way students fail to take control of their own life at the University of Vermont.

Are we all mindless cogs in a machine? I believe so. Name Withheld.

Textor's Letter On Greeks Too Metaphorical

October 2, 1972

Dear Editor:

In regard to Mr. Textor's letter of Sept. 26 referring to Greek Week, I find that his letter should have concentrated on being less metaphorical and more factual. His anti-Greek feelings caused his letter to suffer from emotionality and false stereotypes rather than logic. It is absurd to try to equate having fun, which was approved by the University's Administration with social conscience, or the lack of it. The purpose of Greek Week was for healthy competition between the Greek Houses for fun. It did just that: I fail to see how it ushered in the 1950's unless fun has suddenly been made illegal for the duration of the '70's.

Mr. Textor's alleged "saucey beer drinkers" and "coy little mistresses" hold many positions of leadership on campus presently: Editor in Chief of the Ariel, The Cynic, members on the Billings Center Governing Board, Student Representatives to the Board of Trustees, and Athletic teams, Cynic Business Manager as well as many other posts. If that is not enough for you they run their own living units, which includes the responsibility for their own meals, maintenance, and financial matters. That is hardly what I call "the New Silent Generation."

To correct his misinformation, the pledge status is a period of probation for both the pledge and the fraternity. It is at this time that the pledge learns about the inner workings of the Fraternity or Sorority as well as the time to get to know each other better. Pledges are people, not pawns!

Mr. Textor's letter makes him to be right out of the fifties because he seems to have no tolerance for people who choose a different life style from his. It is too bad that a person who values social conscience and equality is so narrow minded that he condemns the Greeks out of ignorance, stereotypes and worst yet, for having fun together.

Jughandle Will Be $2.5 Million Bandaid

To the Editor:

The Jughandle highway confusion is presently surmounting to a critical citizen frustration. Why? Because the construction will be a monument to the highway department's inability to listen to their constituents or because of the annoying traffic delays. I suspect it is a combination of both of them rooted by the prior. This local construction is in many ways symbolic of the ways our democratic system is being abused.

The futility of the citizens efforts to try to communicate on the construction can be exemplified by the following: (1) Citizens testimony at the required public hearings were virtually ignored by the highway department. (Dr. Sproston, plant pathology specialist, testified that the landscaping plans were biologically impossible; the highway department continued to present their contradictory plan.) (2) Burlington citizens petitioned for a referendum vote on the issue, because their representatives had voted very closely showing it was a controversial issue. Did they receive it? No. It was brushed aside with discouraging agenda changes and other run-around tactics. (3) UVM students feeling the financial crush by the heavy tuition increase appealed to the Board of Trustees and President Andrews to reconsider UVM's agreement to give away such a valuable piece of property. The appeal received no response or even a recognition of their input.

This could go on forever—but where would it bring us? It leaves us with a $2.5 million bandaid highway project that will cater to the individual heavily polluting car and will the traffic bottleneck up 500 feet.

Frustrated.

SA 'Overreacting' In Its Quest For Financial Soundness

by Jeffrey Yacker

Governing bodies, officials and people in general have exhibited tendencies throughout history to overreact to events, both home and abroad. We had the "Red Scare" following the Bolshevik Revolution in 1917 and McCarthyism in the late '40's and early '50's. The Berrigan and Chicago 7 trials are more recent examples of the government playing "overkill" and making a fool of itself in the end. Universities, and the people who operate them, are no exception to the overreactive syndrome which here at UVM we saw Kake Walk abolished in 1969 and the FBI Scare one year later. Looking back at all of these, one can see that overzealousness can easily lead a group or person in the wrong direction, and produce lasting effects which are detrimental.

This is precisely what the Student Association at UVM is headed for if its proposed new Financial Policy is passed as it stands now. In their efforts to establish a reasonable degree of fiscal soundness, Messrs. Sisco and Grant (S.A. President and Treasurer, respectively) have come up with a program which could wind up costing the S.A. more money.

The sections which have a potential of boomeranging are those dealing with money earned by student organizations. To be specific, Section I, Part A, numbers three and four; Section III, Part C, number one; Section IV, Parts A and C; Section V, Part A. Take the Cynic as an example: the Cynic received an appropriation of $18,000 from the Student Association for the present year's budget. The following cost of operations appears: Editor, $10,000; Cynic from the advertising profits. These profits are deposited in a University Consolidated Funds Account, as opposed to the S.A. Account, where the appropriations are kept. If the new financial policy passes as it stands, the Cynic's consolidated funds would be merged into the S.A. account. What is the difference? The Cynic has considerably more control and independence in spending its profits than its appropriations. That freedom would be lost if the new policy passes.

Editorial Homecoming, R.I.P.?

In case you didn't notice, there is not much news about Homecoming in this week's Cynic, despite the fact that homecoming Weekend begins tomorrow. A snake dance on Friday night, a fire-on on Saturday at noon, a football game Saturday afternoon. That's it. So will pass another "Weekend", one more addition to a list which includes Kake Walk and its short-lived successor, Spring Weekend (yes, there once was such a thing) and several more.

Many students probably are not mourning Homecoming's impending death just as they sat by and let the most unique Winter Carnival in America pass away. After all, having fun is now passe, for it reeks of the infamous '50's. Right, Mr. Textor? Wrong. Levity is not a mark of academic inferiority, and a campus which gets psyched for a weekend is not to be condemned as un-intellectual. On the contrary, an organized weekend compliments the academic life and offers people various outlets for creativity and athletics and the like.

Homecoming is practically lost at least for this year. But it is not too late to organize a Winter Carnival along the general lines of Kake Walk, i.e., with a few varied events, one of which must be some form of athletic competition open to students, all scheduled into a three or four day weekend. Hopefully, the people with the potential to organize such a weekend — the Greeks and the I.R.A. — can get together soon and channel their efforts toward that end.

Senior Begins Fourth Year In Shoebox

by Stuart Dedopoulos

Showing a complete and utter disregard for his own physical and mental well-being, and a unique capacity to tolerate miserable conditions, a senior at the University of Vermont has begun his fourth year of dormitory life in the same shoebox. Incredible as that may seem, this same person has managed to defy all odds and has remained on the same floor!

This reporter was able to obtain an exclusive interview with this mysterious senior, but only under certain conditions. Neither the name of the dorm nor the senior in question could be mentioned. He preferred to be called The White Antelope. The rest of this story is true. Only his name has been changed to protect the innocent.

He blindfolded me and took me up to his room. It was still painted in institutional green. The walls were bare except for a poster of Humphrey Bogart. "You like Bogart, huh?" I asked. "That's right, sweetheart," he replied in one of the worst Bogart impressions I had ever heard. It was obvious the four years had taken their toll. I changed the subject.

"Why have you lived here for four years, antelope?" I asked.

"Call me TWA," he replied. I originally was put in these dorms during orientation. Then when I was informed that this would be my residence for my freshman year I was overjoyed. That was in the summer of '69. Every one should have their summer of '69. After the first year I was hooked. I had to have more. So I signed on for another year in the same room. The rest is history. I just had to have my yearly fix of this place."

"What about next year?"

"I haven't decided what to do yet. I might try to come here as a grad student and try to become the resident advisor of the hall. But that would create gross problems. "Now's that?"

"Well, that would mean I would have to move down to the first floor. I don't know if I could do that."

He was obviously hallucinating. Withdrawal symptoms are always a bad scene.

"Then again," he continued, "I have heard that when I leave they plan to make this the White Antelope Memorial Floor."

He was going fast. "What are those lists on your bulletin board?"

"Those are my meal and mail lists."

"You mean you keep track of all the mail you receive and every meal you eat?"

"Sure. That way I can determine whether or not Sage is making any money off of me."

It just seemed to be a matter of time. "Who are you voting for this year?" I asked.

"Well, I was going to vote for Nixon. But then I found out he only wanted Olympic skiers who were part-time students. I'm only a full-time student and I don't ski. Then I went to the Dartmouth football game over the weekend and saw McGovern apples selling for 10 cents while Nixon apples were going for $1.00. That convinced me McGovern was the man."

"Why go to the Dartmouth game? Why not see UVM play football?"

"I'd rather see collegiate football," he replied. His mind was still functioning. "Anyway, Nixon got me mad when he stole my slogan to use as his own without giving me due credit."

"You mean Now-More-Than-Ever is your idea?"

"Hell no!" he said. He suddenly jumped up and grabbed his towel and soap dish.

"Problem?" I asked.

"Sage Must LOOOOAAAAP," he cried as he ran out of the room, towards the John. The Antelope was gone in a flash, but his presence still permeated the room. He must have had a severe case

Blonde, attractive Karen Wedge is the new director of UVM Student Activities. Serving as advisor to SA, Karen hopes to "increase the activities sponsored by the Student Association on campus."

Karen comes to UVM from the University of Arizona where she was assistant Dean of Students. Her main function here is to serve as an organizer for SA and to "help them realize their goals." These goals include Homecoming activities, future concerts and long-range plans for the UVM student body.

She feels that the Student Association "meets the needs of this particular campus at this particular time. There is a sincere interest on the part of student leaders and the student body for improvement." Karen hopes that after the new senate is elected, more things will be accomplished, because there is a "great sincerity in the student body."

Karen Wedge Views SA Future Optimistically

by Barbara Frankel

Wedge, attractive, Karen Wedge is the new director of UVM Student Activities. Serving as advisor to SA, Karen hopes to "increase the activities sponsored by the Student Association so as to involve just as many off-campus students as residents."

Karen comes to UVM from the University of Arizona where she was assistant Dean of Students. Her main function here is to serve as an organizer for SA and to "help them realize their goals." These goals include Homecoming activities, future concerts and long-range plans for the UVM student body.

She feels that the Student Association "meets the needs of this particular campus at this particular time. There is a sincere interest on the part of student leaders and the student senate. There is still, of course, a need for improvement." Karen hopes that after the new senate is elected, more things will be accomplished, because there is "great sincerity in the student leaders, but they need the help of their constituents."

New to Vermont, Karen is impressed by UVM and especially by the students. She does not think students here are particularly apathetic. She stated, "There is a readjustment of campus activities across the nation now. We aren't involved so much in traditional activities. There is now a dynamic interest in things like volunteer programs. There is much more interest in self-involvement, in projects such as craft fairs and outing activities, hobbies and the arts. There is also now a nation wide increasing political involvement, due to students being given the vote. This should increase as the years go on."

Karen is optimistic for the future of campus involvement and for organizations like UVM's Student Association. She believes that through the sincere interest of student leaders and the help of the members of the student body, the Student Association will accomplish a great deal this year and in the future.

Cure Colds Unconventionally

by Jim Heidenreich

Colds are hell. They make you feel lousy, and tussler still for all the money you spend trying to cure them. Here then, are some inexpensive herbal cures that work as well as conventional medicines, and they are a lot cheaper too. Why not try them? The UVM bookstore has a limited supply of most of the herbs mentioned here.

For a congested nose, chew some bees wax. It somehow is able to shrink nasal tissues and keep your nose dry.

On the other hand, for a runny nose, you may dip a slice of fresh raw onion into hot water for a moment or two, and then sip this liquid throughout the day. The faucet in your nose will turn itself "off" shortly.

Sore throats are a pain in the neck, and herbal remedies are many to ease the pain. My favorite is to chew on a pinch of grated dry licorice root. It is 50 times as sweet as sugar, and unlike other sugars, it always thins rather than thickens it. (Licorice is equally as good as a cough remedy, where it eases the cough and facilitates the expectoration of mucus, which is why we cough in the first place.)

Also for sore throats, hot liquids, especially hot lemonade and tea made with horehound and slippery elm bark are good too. (Incidentally, slippery elm is the finest intestinal demulcent in the plant kingdom. Chew some for acid stomach or heartburn.) You may of course ease sore throats by gargling with salt water. But, here is the native Vermont remedy for sore throats: Gargle one teaspoon apple-cider vinegar to a glass of water, and then swallow it. Repeat every 2 hours.

For coughs, licorice by itself or in tea is good. Or you may make a tea out of any of the following: red clover blossoms, horehound, slippery elm or mullein. Dried mullein may be smoked to make that tickly sensation in the throat disappear. Draw the smoke into the lungs.

Also, you can try garlic. It's one of the most versatile plants in herbal medicine, and it may be used as a remedy for colds, in addition to its use for constipation, diarrhea, headache, earache, diabetes. Its said colds in their first stages may be halted in a few hours to a day by keeping a clove of garlic in each side of the mouth.

An experiment has shown that in 71 cases of clogged and runny noses, all conditions are cleared up in 13 to 20 minutes without further complications when oil of garlic was given by nose and mouth.

Well, as good as it sounds, I would not use it because of its smell. It is the way to lose friends and alienate yourself. Nothing is worse than garlic breath, but what is worse is that you cannot handle the stuff for long, before someone smells it on your breath. The smell goes through anything and gets in everything.

It seems all horrid medicines, at one time or another, have been labelled sexually stimulating, and this of course is true of garlic. Aristophanes, in all sincerity, regarded garlic as a restorer of "masculine vigor," knowing this makes the medicine go down easier, doesn't it?

Music Major To Give Recital

A recital of works for soprano voice in English, French and German will be presented Friday (Oct. 6) by Miss Beverly A. Bellenger at the University of Vermont, in partial fulfillment of the requirements for state certification as a teacher of music.

Miss Bellenger's senior recital at 8 p.m. in Ira Allen Chapel will open with three U.S. Bach selections, including a recitative and aria from the St. Matthew Passion.

Works by Mozart, Schubert, Faure, Hahn, Richard Strauss, and Rachmaninoff will follow. The final group in the recital will feature the dramatic "Il est doux, il est bon" from Jules Massenet's "Herodias." Rounding out the program will be the energetic "Love's Philosophy" by Quilter.

Miss Bellenger earned the B.A. in mathematics from the University of New Hampshire, where she also studied music. She has sung with the University of Vermont Choral Union, and in the musical productions "South Pacific" and "Music Man."

She is a computer programmer and technical writer with IBM in Essex Junction, and is a student of Miss Shari Fleming of the UVM music faculty. Her accompanist Friday will be Mrs. Carol Cranston.

'Right To Dissent Is Denied'

by William Bowman

The University administration and Sage Food Service have gotten together in the latest attempt to squelch dissent on campus.

Sage and the administration have denied the proponents of Medical Aid for Indochina the right to hold a fund raising fast in the dining hall. The fast would have been like the one held last year, except that proceeds would have gone to Medical Aid for Indochina.

Their stated reason for denial was that "the University cannot and will not act in a partisan political manner." Either they are lying or are hypocrites. The firing of radical professors, which the University engages in at will, is certainly a partisan political act (b). What the University is saying, provided they are not outright liars is that they can engage in what political acts they choose, and can deny others similar activity.

With the University policy as it is certain facts are obvious. Firstly, students are denied the right to act in a collective political manner, i.e. Medical Aid for Indochina. Secondly, their education is being compromised by the political nature of faculty selection. The University faculty is also being confronted with a basic issue: job security. The attitude among the faculty is "if you value your job, keep your mouth shut."

An answer to the mutual problems of the faculty and students is apparent. Since there is strength in numbers, and since a university does not function without both faculty and students, a student-faculty union seems to be the answer. When this becomes a reality we will no longer be subject to the repressive will of the University administration and Board of Trustees.

It's the real thing. Coke.

Environmental Issues Carry Weight In Presidential Election

by Gene Beaudoin

"The 1970's absolutely must be the years when America pays its debt to the past by reclaiming the purity of its air, its waters, and our living environment. It is literally now or never."—President Richard M. Nixon upon signing of the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA).

The date was January 1, 1970 and it was his first official act of the new decade. Later that year he called for a "total mobilization of all of us for the face the prospect of ecological disaster." On January 22, 1972, in his State of the Union Address, President Nixon pledged that the environment would be the "Third Great Goal" of the "New American Revolution."

Seven short months after this State of the Union Address the President attached a message to the Council on Environmental Quality's report which warned the country "not to expect environmental miracles." One month after that, he spoke in Detroit and said that caution had forced him to a complete reappraisal of his environmental policies. Also in Detroit he said that he would "not permit environmental issues to become a distraction from the nation's economic problems."

He also added that his administration would be looking for approaches less revolutionary than he had earlier led the nation to expect.

The environmental and associated agencies that a President sets up are the key to his personal commitment. The agencies of importance in this case are the Council on Environmental Quality (CEQ), Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), and the Offices of Management and Budget (OMB). These are of equal importance in the consideration of President Nixon's policies concerning the environment.

During the next four weeks in the CYNIC, I hope to bring out the strong points and the weak points of the Nixon administration and of the McGovern camp.

The next four years are very important ones with regard to the environment. They will and must be the beginning of a rethinking of the basic goals of the United States. It is our duty to inform ourselves as best we can in this election year. Whatever we get in the way of a President, we deserve. I hope that this column can become a part of our educational process.

Film Review:

Woody Allen Successfully Adapts Dr. Reuben's Best-selling Sex* Book To Slapstick Comedy

by Lisa Charley
If you're attracted to slapstick, sophisticated, or simply raw humor, "Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Sex*," But Were Afraid to Ask" offers an entertaining mélange of all three types.

It is difficult to deny that any person, regardless of his sexual experience or taste, would enjoy Woody Allen's comical film adaptation of Dr. David Reuben's best-selling book. Actually the film has little in common with the book except for the title and the subject matter. Woody Allen wrote the screenplay, directed and starred in a film which attempts to answer some of Dr. Reuben's most provocative questions about sex. Supplying his own answers to these questions, Woody Allen treats a rather touchy subject quite bluntly yet with a sophistication which one could easily conclude to be "in good taste." Allen applies his superior ingenuity in creating a series of comical vignettes dealing with such matters as homosexuality, frigidity, infidelity, and the validity of research by sexual clinics.

Every sketch has something comical to offer, yet it seems that the better episodes in the film are those which are clever parodies of other filmmakers. For example, the third vignette entitled "Why Do Some Women Have Trouble Reaching Orgasm?" is presented with a definite Fellini technique. This portion of the film is spoken in Italian with English subtitles. The Fellini spatial design, accented by his stark black and white color scheme, creates a surrealistic, desolate atmosphere. Allen employs this film technique while integrating his own ideas concerning the subject of frigidity.

Two other, outstanding episodes are also clever adaptations of previous films. The fifth vignette entitled "What Are Sex Perverts?" parodies the old TV quiz program "What's My Line?" and titles it "What's My Pervert?" Complete with parodied commercials, this sketch is guaranteed to amuse the viewer. The concluding vignette, perhaps we may call Allen's masterpiece. The physiological procedure of ejaculation is illustrated from within the body and the brain. A "3001" inspired mission control faces the anticipation and actual mechanical operation of intercourse. "Prepare for launching, attention all sperm, attention sperm." No one but Woody Allen could conceive of such a parody.

Thus, it seems that the most successful episodes are those in which sex itself is not the overriding comic vehicle, but the huge breast that terrorizes a populous. Nevertheless, this film can not be evaluated as anything less than outstandingly inventive. The quality of acting equally rates with the content and affection of Allen's film. Not only does "Sex*" execute skillfully, but it integrates all aspects of film technique placing the acting, directing, and content on the same level of performance. While the cast includes such reputed talents as Lynn Redgrave, John Carradine, Tony Randall, and Burt Reynolds, no one character surpasses the other, rather contributes to the whole of the production. This excludes Woody Allen, of course, whose proficiency and expertise in the comic art is indeed exceptional. However, this is not to say that Allen's performance dominates the entire film. Regardless of the role, Allen's unique composure can gracefully separate him from a crowd, or allow him to successfully assume a total nonentity.

Much of the comedian's humor originates from personal experience. But it is difficult to pinpoint the exact nature of this humor. One critic states that it is based on an old root, while another says his humor is very contemporary. Vincent Canby of the New York Times calls Woody Allen "the premier comic at work in America today."

Perhaps "Sex*" may not answer all of Dr. Reuben's or your personal questions, but it certainly substantiates Woody Allen's position as one of the most important living comics.

Lane Series Boston Ballet To Replace Originally Scheduled Buenos Aires Ensemble

The prestigious Ballet Company, New England's premier ballet ensemble, dances on the Lane Series on Thursday, Oct. 12, at 8:30 p.m., in Memorial Auditorium.

The Boston Ballet replaces the Buenos Aires Ballet, which cancelled its extensive North American tour, including two weeks at New York's City Center, when it failed to receive a subsidy from the Argentine government. The date remains the same - Oct. 12.

Tickets, priced at $3.75, $4.50, $5.25, and $6, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations, tel. 656-3418.

The program includes "Allegro. Brillante," with choreography by George Balanchine and music by Tchaikovsky; "The Dolly Suite," with choreography by Principal dancers with the company, are Edna Toth and Anthony Williams. Miss Toth has been partnered by Rudolf Nureyev in many appearances throughout the U.S. and Canada. The artistic director of the company is E. Virginia Williams.

The Boston Ballet Company began its existence in 1959 as the New England Civic Ballet, when it danced in the first Northeast Regional Ballet Festival. Miss Williams has been its artistic director for the past seven years. In 1963, when the Ford Foundation announced its first grants to ballet companies, the Boston Ballet was one of only six recipients to receive a grant. This grant enabled Miss Williams to establish a professional ballet company in Boston, the first in New England's history. Over the last seven years the company has received additional grants from the Ford Foundation.

Clive Barnes, tough critic of the New York Times, has this to say of the Boston Ballet: "The Bostonians danced with a blithe zest, with musicality and a vibrant vitality. They were, and I use the word advisedly, tremendous." And critic Glenna Syse of the Chicago Sun Times wrote that the group's performance "showed the Boston Ballet to be a skilled and finely honed company."

Free Concert
Think ahead to next week! There will be a free concert next Thursday, October 12th from 8 to 11 P.M. "O" will be playing in North Lounge, Billings Center. The group, which is rock-jazz oriented, is composed of Mickey Earnshaw (drums), Chuck Eller (piano, organ), and Peter Persechino (bass).

for people who walk on this earth...
If you've walked barefoot on sand or soil you know how great it is. Your heels sink low and your feet embrace the earth. Then you put on your shoes, return to the city, and become another concrete fighter... but the concrete always wins. You yearn for the earth that lies buried beneath the city.
The Earth Shoe is the first shoe in history with the heel lower than the sole... this helps return you to nature though you are forced to live in a cement-coated world. The Earth Shoe's patented design gently guides you to a more erect and graceful walk, and reduces fatigue and the aches and pains caused by our hard-surfaced city.

Tickets Required For Films

Beginning this week with the showing of MONKEE BUSINESS, tickets will be required for admittance to the Marx Brothers Films. These tickets will, beginning October 11, be distributed free to SA Members at the Billings Center Information Desk beginning each Monday preceding the Friday and Sunday showings of the films. SA Members will be given first shot at the tickets from Monday to Wednesday of each week. From 12 Noon Wednesday to the showings, the remaining tickets will be distributed to UVM faculty and staff. All tickets are free with UVM ID.

For MONKEE BUSINESS, (October 6 and 8) tickets will be available in Billings beginning Friday morning at 10:00 p.m. for Friday and Sunday showings this week.

There will be two showings at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. on Friday night in Cook Hall and two showings at 2:00 and 4:00 p.m. in Life Sciences Hall. Further showings will be scheduled if ticket distribution warrants.

Ticket sellers and takers for both Friday and Sunday showings are needed. Please contact SA Films at 656-2597 if you want a job.

The Marx Brothers

by Mina Carson

For a Marx fanatic, at least, Animal Crackers can be either total joy or total frustration, depending on how acute his hearing is (if all the copies floating around are as bad as the one we hooked, the world has sustained a grave loss.) And if he is not a fanatic, he had better stay home. The plot, which revolves around a valuable painting and its criminal wanderings through the Rittenhouse mansion, although more sharply defined than that of The Cocoanuts, still falters and finally crumbles to pieces near the end. Before I go any further, though, I have to admit that I've beaten my own challenge—I did find this film funnier than The Cocoanuts.

For you see we not only get more Marx in this one, but consistently better Marx as well. The routines by now are predictable in form, but hardly in content. Example:

In the Course of Groucho's perennial wooing of Margaret

Dumont, another society matron enters, whereupon Groucho, totally unruffled, begins to describe the joys in store when they all three are married. Not content with this, however, he decides to take a Strange Interlude and makes an incredibly funny stab at both the women and the oblique O'Neillesque drama of the day.

Harpo and Chico are again interlopers, totally out of place in no outward sign of prosperity, one gets the feeling that Chico, an itinerant musician, must be raking in a pile, receiving as he claims more money for not playing than for playing, even more for rehearsing, and as for not rehearsing, well, "You couldn't afford it. If a we don't rehearse, we don't play, and if a we don't play, well, that runs into money." Harpo is, The Professor of what we never are told, which is probably just as well.

And now for a Strange Interlude: Harpo numbered among his strangely assorted friends the artist Salvador Dali, who once presented him with a barbed wire harp, which Harpo cherished mightily. This is, in fact, a useful indication of the type of comedian Harpo was. It is not fair to his art to be shocked when he shoots the trilling canary in Animal Crackers. Although later screenwriters, through either neglect or lack of perception, allowed Harpo's peculiar set of ethics to degenerate into an essence of sweetness but total predictability, in these early films he is almost studiously inconsistent. He lives for whatever takes his weird fancy in the Moment. Whereas Groucho plays to us all that Harpo allows us to do is tag along in appropriately silent, and really inexplicable, adoration.

Horsefeathers I would place a little farther (further Father? Farther further?) down on my personal scale of preference, but I wouldn't be surprised if I were alone in this. It is a tighter, better, over-all film than either of the first two, but a little along seems to have gone out of the humor. It does speak directly to our silent but far-from-contented generation of students, in its rapid jabs at boring convocation speeches, know-nothing trustees, crooked football recruiting practices, and tiresome professor types. (Prof.: "I will now go on with my lecture." Groucho: "I wish you'd go on without your lecture.")

Aside from these topical references, though, the jokes, minimally, don't seem quite up to par. There is, however, a lot of good visual humor. We have the joy of seeing Harpo "get tough," his touching weeping when he is finally foiled by the "bad guys," and he and Chico being stripped to their underwear and then escaping in a garbage-truck-turned-chariot, pulled by two white horses.

Plus we get a free lesson in football signals made easy, a la Chico. Uno, duo, tre, vendi, this a time we go left end.

SA CONCERT

Edgar Winter's Previous Albums

by Doug Collette

EDGAR WINTER'S WHITE TRASH

Although Entrance was Edgar Winter's first LP, it isn't until he recorded White Trash that he had assembled a band for himself. The second album added a strong shot of R&B (courtesy of Jerry LaCroix, doubt) to a more economical jazz approach and, prettily on a few cuts, most notably "Dying to Live," a string arrangement which serves only to capsize the entire performance.

The rockers come off better probably because the band is more comfortable in that groove, but even something like "Keep Playing That Rock'n'Roll" suffers from a sterility sometimes unavoidable in studio recordings. It's thoroughly professional in every way, but the musicians don't sound like they're enjoying it.

Thus it would seem that live recording would present the group in a more favorable light. But Roadwork suffers from problems of its own, not the least of which is a heavy reliance on by-now-clichéd R&B ("Can't Turn You Loose," "Turn On Your Lovelight") and a curious stiffness in the band's playing. The latter is a result of a sluggish horn section that prevents the music from really catching fire. Rick Derringer tries valiantly, but nothing really gets genuinely exciting except when Johnny Winter joins for a savage "Rock and Roll Hootchie Koo." Just as on the studio record, everything is competent, but the technical brilliance on much of this double album can't quite overcome a lack of spirit in the playing.

But White Trash is no longer Edgar's group. He's assembled a more compact band which will be accompanying him when he plays here. And because any music with which a talent like Edgar Winter is involved is bound to be interesting, that concert is worth looking forward to.

Seven Athletes

The athletic highlight of Homecoming - 1972 at the University of Vermont will be the fourth annual UVM Athletic Hall of Fame Dinner, set for Oct. 6 at the Redstone Dining Hall on Redstone Campus.

Seven UVM athletes of the past will be honored that evening. The dinner is scheduled for 7 p.m. Tickets for the event, opened to the public, are now available at the University's Athletic Ticket Office, Room 206, Roy L. Patrick Gymnasium and the Alumni House, c/o the Alumni Director, 50 Prospect St., Burlington, Vermont.

Gov. Deane C. Davis and UVM's President, Dr. Edward C. Andrews, Jr., will honor seven names from UVM's athletic past, including the late Clarence H. DeMar, '11; Frederick S. Harris, '22; Dr. Fred S. Kent, '19; Theodore P. Budzyns, '38; Wesley T. Allen, '16; Gordon "Mickey" Cochran, '48; and John J. Spasyk, '42.

Over 200 University and alumni and friends will be in attendance at the special athletic dinner designed to honor those whose contribution to Vermont athletics deserves the recognition of UVM, its alumni and friends.

DeMar, who passed away in 1958, was known as "Mr. Marathon." The former University cross country ace won the prestigious Boston A.A. Marathon seven of the 34 times he entered. He participated in over 1,000 meets during his 44 years associated with track and field. He was a three-time competitor in the Olympic Games.

Harris is considered one of the top scholar-athletes ever to wear the green and gold. The winner of the Alumni Distinguished Service Award (1960) captained the basketball and baseball teams while at the University. In addition to basketball and baseball, he quarterbacked the 1920 football team. Harris graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Vermont and is a successful

Contrary To Belief...

Note Time Change

Because of the conflict with the football game Saturday (Oct. 7), the key Yankee Conference cross country meet between the University of Vermont and the University of Connecticut will begin at 11 a.m., and not 1 p.m.

Both teams are undefeated in dual competition, with Vermont recently bombing New Hampshire, 15-4, while Connecticut recently ran toughed over Holy Cross.

Vermont is 3-0 in dual competition, in addition to the team title in the A.T. Post five-mile run, back in early September.

Following the Connecticut meet, the Catamount harriers will travel to Middlebury for the annual State Cross Country Meet.

What the profits of advertising do pay for are the commissions which the ad salesman earn, the Bugre's Manager's salary, the honorariums for the editors, and salaries for typesetters. University Without Walls Gives Students Chance To Integrate Varied Studies

New York, N.Y. (I.P.)—A University Without Walls that integrates work, internships and independent study is being inaugurated at New York University this fall, according to a recent announcement by Dr. Herbert London, director of the program.

The new program in actuality is a consortium of 20 participating institutions across the country. "Students in the program can take courses for credit in any of these schools," Dr. London said, "without any of the usual bureaucratic tape."

"The University Without Walls is principally concerned with the learning process, above and beyond the accumulation of course credits," says Dr. London. "Degree eligibility is to be determined by such things as works of art, recorded materials, logs and work experience and performance outside the academic environment, as well as any other method deemed appropriate."

"What's also important is that a student can plan a course of study to suit his individual needs and interests," Dr. London continues. "There are no major subjects to dictate selection."

To receive a degree, a student still would have to negotiate 120 credits, conventionally thought of as semester hours. But only 40 credits need actually be for participation in classroom courses.

The other 80 credits are divided between independent study and field work, which includes internships and other experience consistent with a student's program. Work toward the B.A. can be accelerated into a three-year program or decelerated into a six-year one.

"This is an alternative degree track for those who are disenchanted with conventional ones. We're not trying to compete with other undergraduate schools," Dr. London emphasized, "which all have their own proper missions."

Letter: 'Health Insurance Fee Unfair'

September 28, 1972

Dear Students of UVM:

This fall on our bill there was an item entitled The Health Insurance Fee. This was included without any prior knowledge to me and practically the entire student body. This item was waivable if you didn't want it, but if you automatically received and paid for it. You may argue that this is waivable, but the time to refuse it is not. If you don't want it you must take time to refuse it. Unfair, isn't it? I have written to Chairman O'Brien and he passed it on to Dean Powers. I have received an answer from Dr. Amidon, Director of Health Services, and all he said was that he and others (Dean Powers, etc.) thought it was a good item, beneficial to the students, etc., so it was put on the bill. This is an item which benefits a private profit making insurance company and has no reason for being on the bills of students of a public university. If you feel as I and many others, please contact me to assist in the removal of this fee from all future bills.

To the Editor of the Cynic:

I think that Rich Halpern's thoughts on the Russian-Team Canada hockey series in his "Commentary" of Sept. 28 deserve some consideration. The majority of that column was devoted to his disappointment in the performance of those National Hockey League players the western public has come to view as "superstars." I'm afraid that Mr. Halpern has short-changed those athletes or at least made some premature judgments.

It should be pointed out that ice hockey is one of the greatest team sports we know. The job of putting together a group of excellent hockey players, and having them play as a unit, takes time. Far more time than putting together an all-star baseball or basketball team.

The sixth and seventh games of the set has shown that the squad is starting to gel. I don't knock the Soviets. They're very talented, and a well-composed, well-drilled outfit. They ought to be. They play together twelve months of the year.

No matter the outcome of the final game, I think everyone can be proud of Team-Canada. Those stars have set aside their time to turn in credible performances in one of the most exciting spectacles in modern sports.

Sincerely,
Christopher B. Wallace

Insurance Fee Unfair

1972 If you didn't want it, but if you didn't want it, you automatically received and paid for it. You may argue that this is unfair, but the time to refuse it is not. If you don't want it you must take time to refuse it. "Unfair, isn't it?" I have written to Chairman O'Brien and he passed it on to Dean Powers. I have received an answer from Dr. Amidon, Director of Health Services, and all he said was that he and others (Dean Powers, etc.) thought it was a good item, beneficial to the students, etc., so it was put on the bill. This is an item which benefits a private profit making insurance company and has no reason for being on the bills of students of a public university. Seven Athletes To Be Honored

The athletic highlight of Homecoming, 1972 at the University of Vermont will be the fourth annual UVM Athletic Hall of Fame Dinner, set for Oct. 6 at the Simpson Dining Hall on Redstone Campus.

Seven UVM athletes of the past will be honored that evening. The dinner is scheduled for 7 p.m., preceded by a reception at 6 p.m. Tickets for the event, opened to the public, are now available at the University's Athletic Ticket Office, Room 206, Roy L. Patrick Gymnasium and the Alumni House, c/o the Alumni Director, 50, Prospect St., Burlington, Vermont.

Gov. Deane C. Davis and UVM's President, Dr. Edward C. Andrews, Jr., will honor seven names from UVM's athletic past, including the late Clarence H. DeMar, 11; Frederick S. Harris, 22; Dr. Fred S. Kent, 19; Theodore P. Budzyna, 38; Wesley T. Abell, 16; Gordon "Mickey" Cochran, 48; and John J. Spasyk, 42.

Over 200 University and alumni and friends will be in attendance at the special athletic dinner, designed to honor those whose contribution to Vermont athletics "deserves the recognition of UVM, its alumni and friends."

DeMar, who passed away in 1958, was known as "Mr. Marathon." The former University cross country ace won the prestigious Boston A.A. Marathon seven of the 34 times he entered. He participated in over 1,000 meets during his 44 years associated with track and field. He was a three-time competitor in the Olympic Games.

Harris is considered one of the top scholar-athletes ever to wear the green and gold. The winner of the Alumni Distinguished Service Award (1960) captained the basketball and baseball teams while at the University. In addition to basketball and baseball, he quarterbacked the 1920 football team. Harris graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Vermont and is a successful

Time Change

Because of the conflict with the football game Saturday (Oct. 7), the key Yankee Conference cross country meet between the University of Vermont and the University of Connecticut will begin at 11 a.m., and not 1 p.m.

Both teams are undefeated in dual competition, with Vermont recently bombing New Hampshire, 15-48, while Connecticut recently ran roughshod over Holy Cross.

Vermont is 3-0 in dual competition, in addition to the team title in the A.T. Post five-mile run, back in early September.

Following the Connecticut meet, the Catamount barriers will travel to Middlebury for the annual State Cross Country Meet.

attorney in Meriden, Conn.

Dr. Kent served as the University's Medical Director for many years and was the head physician for the athletic teams. A graduate of the University's Medical College '19, he is now retired and living in Barre, Vt.

Budzyna was considered one of the most versatile athletes during his tenure (1935-38) at Vermont, competing in football, baseball and track. In addition to his three varsity sports, he was the only UVM student ever to qualify as a freshman in the National Sigma Delta Psi Honorary athletic fraternity. Budzyna is now living in Worcester, Mass.

Abell, one of the great friends of the University's athletic program, was one of the top linemen ever to play football at Vermont. A trophy awarded to the top UVM lineman after each season, Abell, the City Clerk of Burlington for 25 years, also served as the director and clerk of the old Northern Baseball League.

Cochran, the father of the famous "Skiing Cochrans," Bobby, Lindy, Marilyn, and Barbara Ann, was an outstanding athlete at UVM. The Richmond, Vt. resident was the quarterback on the football team and was a top-notch pitcher on the baseball team from 1946-47. In addition to being a standout athlete, Cochran was an honor student in engineering.

Spasyk, currently a principal in Cabot, Vt., performed in baseball and football, and was one of the top intramural trackmen at the University during the late 30's and early 40's. The 1942 UVM graduate captained the baseball team and served as the president of his senior class. Spasyk was the recipient of the Sunderland Trophy following his senior year at Vermont. The trophy is presented to the senior who has "best exemplified those qualities of character, leadership and persistence in overcoming obstacles."

The University of Vermont's Athletic Hall of Fame is in its fourth year and has honored such athletes as Boston Red Sox teammates, Ray Collins, '09, and Larry Gardner, '09; former major league and Vermont baseball coach Ralph Lapointe, '51; Gold Medal Olympic recipient (broad jump), Albert Gutierrez, '12; basketball stars, Dr. Claire G. Gayward, '25, and Larry Killick, '47; football performers Frank Taylor, '41, and George "Red" Cook, '35; former major league pitcher, Bert Abbey, '91; one of New England's most popular track coaches, Archie Post, '27; baseball performers, Dr. Lyman Allen, '93 and "Rusty" Yarnall, '26; football stars Eddie Beck, '34 and Dr. Edward Winant, '32; versatile athletes, John Beckley, '34 and Howard Prentice, '28 and former Vermont tennis coach, Fred D. Carpenter.

The biggest crowd of the year is expected for the weekly University of Vermont Boosters Club luncheon at the Hi-Hat Restaurant, Thursday (Oct.), beginning at 12 noon, as Vermont gears up for the crucial meeting with the University of Massachusetts Minutemen this Saturday (Oct. 7) at 1:30 p.m.

Films of last Saturday's heart-breaking loss to Lehigh University will be shown following a question-answer period with the head coach, Carl Falvene.

In addition to the Lehigh-Vermont films, a scouting report will be presented on Massachusetts. The public is welcome to attend.

Preview Vermont Versus UMass

One of the top football contests in New England is slated for Centennial Field in Burlington, Vt. as undefeated Massachusetts meets a surprisingly strong Vermont eleven this Saturday (Oct. 7) beginning at 1:30 p.m.

Currently, Massachusetts is ranked No. 1 in New England, while Vermont, although 0-2, has come close to two upsets in its first two games, losing to Connecticut 7-0, although dominating the game offensively and defensively. Last Saturday, Vermont was edged 26-20 by Lehigh, one of the top small college clubs in the East.

Massachusetts waltzed over Maine in its first home opener 37-0 and edged Harvard last Saturday, 28-17.

Over 8,500 fans are expected for Vermont's home opener which is also Homecoming Weekend for the Catamounts, and fans should be in store for an exciting offensive show.

Both clubs return most of the offense from a year ago. Vermont has all 11 starters back from last fall, including some key junior college transfers who have worked their way into the starting lineup. Earl Olson, who established a career mark last Saturday for most TDs thrown (14) will be at quarterback and he'll have a strong contingent of receivers to throw to, including wide receivers Tony Jones, Dan Leber and Billy Looker. JC transfer Wil Wegis, a 6-4, 235 lb. tight end, might again get the nod over All-Yankee Conference tight end, Tim Sullivan. Sullivan is still hampered by a painful rib injury.

UMass has an outstanding quarterback in Phil Pennington, a speedy halfback in Paul Metallo and outstanding receivers in Steve Schubert and Tim Berra.

Tickets for the Vermont-Massachusetts contest will be sold at the gates at Centennial Field. The gates will open at 10:30 a.m.

Good Defense Sparks Hockey Victory

by Joan Mollica

The UVM field hockey team began its 1972 season with a well earned 3-2 victory over Plymouth State College.

Fifty women tried out for the team which was cut to thirty-eight members. With only six returning seniors and sixteen freshmen on this year's team, hockey coach Marilyn Chase commented, "we have good depth and the basis of strong future teams."

After practicing together for only two weeks, the hockey team putplayed Plymouth the second half and won in the final minutes of the game. According to Chase, Plymouth was "the type of team you'd much rather play at the end of the season."

The UVM team scored their first goal of the game on their second penetration into Plymouth territory. Combining good offensive teamwork and a diving shot by Marty Fain, UVM jumped to an early lead two minutes into the game. After several turnovers and numerous fouls by both teams, Plymouth came back late in the first half with a clean, hard-driven goal to tie the score.

Seconds into the second half, Plymouth went ahead with another solid goal. During the remainder of the second half UVM "came to life and their tempo increased," said Chase. Left wing, Judy Blanchard, turned her speed to UVM's advantage when she assisted Marty Fain in a second spectacular shot which tied the score, again. With barely three minutes left to play, Ann Margulies scored the winning goal with an assist from center Murphy. Five saves by UVM goalie Val Gardner and good defensive plays helped make this a UVM victory.

The next home game is October 5th against Green Mountain at 4 p.m. on Southwick Field.

The Sensuous Stereo.

Tech Hifi's great "Back to School Sale" and other reasons, for and against, having stereo at school.

Reasons for:

1. It plays music. And music is great any time - at home in bed or on a Greyhound bus rolling down the Interstate.
2. It provides a physical and emotional release - a means of easing tension.
3. It is available to all, whatever their physical appearance or personality problems - the most democratic and egalitarian entertainment source.
4. It requires no other party. No reservations, no table settings - you don't even need furniture.
5. It is easily listened to standing up.
6. It is quick - no complicated and time consuming warming up is required - and afterwards there is no need to pass a half hour or so in social amenities.

Reasons against:

1. You've read those newspaper articles about how listening to too much loud music is bad for your ears.
2. You believe that Spartan living promotes good character.
3. You can listen to your neighbor's through the wall.
4. You have elevated your level of consciousness to such a high degree that you can recall in complete detail the music of your choice without the aid of artificial devices.
5. None of the above.

"THE STARTER"
Buying your first stereo system is a lot like buying your first car. You're not sure how much you want to spend yet you want to be sure you're getting something worthwhile. If you're a new comer to component sound we'd like you to listen to "the starter" music system. It's made up of a BSR 310X record changer, a Sansui 210 AM/FM stereo control section and two TDC II loudspeakers. It's as easy to set up as a "compact" and offers extra performance and flexibility. And its backed by the 5 service plans, experience and selection of New England's largest component specialist - Tech Hifi. Save $91 off list at Tech Hifi.

"NEW AND IMPROVED"
This system shows you can push from the manufacturers constant push to "make something better" (for the cynical "to beat out the competition"). It features new TDC IV loudspeakers with 10 cycle lower bass response than its predecessor. They're powered by the Pioneer 424 AM/FM receiver with more power and better looks than the 440 it replaces. Our turntable choice, the BSR 510AX, is an updating of last year's model and includes a $20 more expensive phono cartridge. And here's the best part - you can get this year's performance at exactly last year's price. Save $110 off list at Tech Hifi.

"CONCERN"
Only the correct proportions of direct/reflected sound can give you a realistic sound. To fill your own concert hall, we're using the Sony 6055 receiver with 100 rms watts of power, more than enough to achieve realistic sound levels. The Dual 1215's record changer is an especially good complement to this system. It introduces no unpleasant sounds of its own and operates with famous Dual precision. An ADC90E cartridge, base and cover, completes the package. Save $129 off list at Tech Hifi.

UVM Victim Of Stout Bridgeport Booters

by Ricky Steinberg
This past weekend the UVM soccer team took on the highly rated - booters - from the University of Bridgeport on a rain soaked field. The dark overcast sky above may have been a sign of what was to come. The Cats fell prey to the excellent passing and dribbling of Bridgeport in losing their third straight game, 4-1.

The game was closer than the 4-1 score indicates. As a matter of fact the Cats outshot their opponents 27-21. But the Cats did most of their shooting and playing in the second half after falling behind 3-0.

The game started off fairly evenly with neither team able to put the ball into the net. Finally with 18:53 gone in the first half, Bridgeport broke the scoreless duel. On an excellent pass from Fran Emmanuel, Kevin Welch put the ball in the net on a weak shot that UVM goalie Brad Gregory watched slide by.

At this point Bridgeport started to dominate the play and put on an excellent Fran Emmanuel who ended up with one goal and two assists. Their fine play led to a second score seven minutes later. Once again Emmanuel set up the score on a fine pass and Marhue Richards booted it into the net. This put the Cats two goals down.

The Cats continued to fight back, but the offense couldn't click. They had the ball down in Bridgeport's zone many times but couldn't seem to get off any threatening shots. The UVM athletic tickets have taken a new form this year. Booklets costing twenty dollars and covering all the athletic events can be seen - or can they?

The sales so far have reflected the student attitude. According to UVM officials, "Sales have gone well." They also readily admit, however, that many ticket books remain. This is easily understood. The students just don't want to pay $20 for the eight or ten home hockey games they plan to attend.

Football and basketball just aren't accepted by the majority of UVM students. This is unfortunate but the fact still remains.

Another stab in the back is the rise in individual game tickets this year from $7.50 to $15.00. The effects from this are yet to be seen.

Hopefully the athletic department won't suffer from a shortage of intake. Ultimately the students will decide that. If they are willing to spend the extra money for the individual game tickets, then things should be okay. However, if the students decide that the increase is too much then there will be cause for worry.

As it stands now, only time will tell!

straight game. UVM's second half domination (a 14-4 edge in shots on goal) and overall fine play gives the team high hopes from here on in.

UVM then seemed to come alive. They continued to press the Bridgeport defense but each time they were somehow thwarted. With a little more luck the Cats could have had a few more goals and possibly a win. But as it turned out UVM never scored again and Bridgeport won its fourth

Lehigh Stops UVM Comeback 26-20

by Tom Cacci
A gambling Vermont team came to Bethlehem, Pa. to harass the Engineers of Lehigh this past weekend but a tough defense thwarted their aims. The Engineers came through with their defense in the closing seconds to hold on to their six point lead.

The Cats were hoping to rebound from their 7-0 loss the week before to UConn, but saw their last-ditch scoring drive stall within the nine yard line.

Anyone who saw the game must attest to the fact that it was an exciting game. Vermont had three fourth-down gambles pay off for them, two of which scored.

The first of the two was a 65 yard touchdown run off a fake punt by Karl Duka, the second was in the fourth quarter after Lehigh had taken a 26-13 lead. Quarterback Earl Olson hit split end Tony Jones with a 35 yard touchdown pass.

The third fourth-down play came with only 1:30 left in the game. Vermont was on Lehigh's 39 with 8 yards to go. Olson rolled to the right and completed a pass down the sideline to Dan Leher at the 11 yard line.

After that play the Lehigh defense held and dropped Olson twice for a loss of 24 yards. On the fourth-and-35 at the Lehigh-36, Olson tried a long pass down the left sideline only to have the Engineer defenseman Mike Flowers pull the ball in out of bounds to end the game.

Lehigh's first score came late in the first quarter after they got the ball on the 20 when Duka's punt went into the endzone.

Lehigh's tailback Jim Farrell circled left end and cut back for 21 yards on the sixth play off, and Vermont went into the locker room with a one point lead 13-12.

In the second half, with the wind at its back, Lehigh got good field position in the third and fourth quarters and was able to score twice.

In the third quarter, a bad punt put Lehigh on the Vermont 33 and the Engineers took it in six plays later, when McQuiken hit Schlegel for 19 and fullback Tom McDough for 12 before he sneaked over to score.

Another bad punt in the final quarter gave Lehigh the ball on its 44. McQuiken hit Liedtke on the first play and Stewart hit the left side on the line for the score. A pass from McQuiken to Howard made the score 26-13.

Final statistics are listed below.

Lehigh scored just minutes later when Farrell fought his way around the left side and raced 33 yards for the score. It was just after this that the first of Vermont's gambles paid off, and Vermont went into the locker room with a one point lead 13-12.

In the second half, with the wind at its back, Lehigh got good field position in the third and fourth quarters and was able to score twice.

In the third quarter, a bad punt put Lehigh on the Vermont 33 and the Engineers took it in six plays later, when McQuiken hit Schlegel for 19 and fullback Tom McDough for 12 before he sneaked over to score.

DAOUST... FOR THE ROUGH GOING!

In the course of a game, your skate is punished by sticks, skate blades and pucks. So you need a skate that can take it - a skate made by Daoust.

Daoust protection The famous Daoust boot is made of high quality materials - like finest Kangaroo leather - chosen for strength and durability. Inter-lined with ballistic nylon mesh and lined with English kip leather provides all-round foot protection.

The rigid box toe is guaranteed. And on top of all this... the Daoust fit - the ultimate in skate comfort.

Daoust performance Just as a player must perform under pressure, a skate must perform under punishment... and Daoust skates do just that. An example is the Daoust National 300 - illustrated above. Before the skate leaves the plant in Montreal, the blade is tested for strength and resistance on the Rockwell scale. It must register a reading of 58 to 65 - guaranteeing the DAOUST standards of excellence.

With over 75 years of experience, DAOUST has created an impressive line of skates - ranging from the superb National 300 to the rugged Junior Pro... the skate for the future superstar.

VPIRG Cites L In Land Deve

by Jeff Ewen
The Vermont Public Interest Research Group has criticized proposed regulations on ski area development on state-owned land as being too weak. At a Montpelier hearing last Wednesday, a VPIRG spokesman, Fred Jagels, said there are "certain loopholes" that if not corrected, could strip the state of its ability to effectively review and plan for development on public lands.

The regulations, proposed by the State Environmental Conservation Agency, would require ski areas to furnish long-range plans for development on lands owned by the State of Vermont and leased to the individual areas. The regulations would require, for any development proposed after January 1, 1973, a long range development plan, which would have to be submitted and approved before any particular development was okayed. These regulations have been supported by the Environmental Conservation Secretary, Robert Williams.

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group is arguing that the proposed regulations do not adequately provide for the protection of areas above 2,500 feet. VPIRG submitted a report by Professor Hubert Vogelmann of the UVM Botany Department which detailed the delicate nature of lands above the 2,500 foot level.

VPIRG also recommended that a specific minimum time limit be set for the time period that the long range development plans will cover. Jagels suggested that the state should require at least a five year projection from those ski areas that wish to develop state land.

Ski industry spokesmen were also present at the hearing and they objected to the Environmental Conservation Agency's regulations on the grounds that they are unnecessary. It was argued that these regulations

Franco Reveals Ideals Of Concerned Students

by Jeff Yacker

A group calling themselves to vote as a bloc on those "Concerned Students" have points which we agreed upon, apparently won a large number and we may vote as a bloc on of votes in the Student other issues which arise from Association Senate. Elections time to time.

for new SA Senators were held. Several publications were last week in the dorms and in the election Billings. The Senators took in reference to the platform of office at the weekly Senate of the Concerned Students. One meeting on Tuesday. The Concerned Students who were elected were: Jim Judd (Conover), Janet Gow (Tupper), Steve Karl (Redstone), and townspeople John Franco, Steve Goodkind, Ron McKel, David Mahan, Thomas McMillan, William Pearson, Pam Reeves, Jim Simon, Susan Taylor and Chris Oot.

John Franco, unsuccessful candidate for SA President last spring, stated that "The Concerned Students are not a monolithic bloc. We all agree on some basic points, and we hope to carry them out as much as possible. We will try

VPIRG Cites Loophole
In Land Development

by Jeff Ewen

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group has criticized proposed regulations on ski area development on state-owned land as being too weak. At a Montpelier hearing last Wednesday, a VPIRG spokesman, Fred Jagels, said there are "certain loopholes, that if not corrected, could strip the state of its ability to effectively review and plan for development on public lands."

The regulations, proposed by the State Environmental Conservation Agency, would require ski areas to furnish long-range plans for development on lands owned by the State of Vermont and leased to the individual areas. The regulations would require, for any development proposed after January 1, 1973, a long range development plan, which would have to be submitted and approved before any particular development was okayed. These regulations have been supported by the Environmental Conservation Secretary, Robert Williams.

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group is arguing that the proposed regulations do not adequately provide for the protection of areas above 2,500 feet. VPIRG submitted a report by Professor Hubert Vogtman of the UVM Botany Department, which detailed the delicate nature of lands above the 2,500 foot level.

VPIRG also recommended that a specific minimum time limit be set for the time period that the long range development plans will cover. Jagels suggested that the state should require at least a five year projection from those ski areas that wish to develop state land.

Ski industry spokesmen were also present at the hearing, and they objected to the Environmental Conservation Agency's regulations in the grounds that they are unnecessary. It was argued that these regulations the Board of Trustees has failed to fulfill its pledge to increase the percentage of blacks and Third World peoples so that their enrollment is consistent with their proportion in the national population.

the University has conspired in environmental destruction by allowing the Spear St. fiasco to be initiated.

The student association has refused to respond to these issues with anything but timidity. Students have looked to the SA for leadership, and the SA has failed to provide it.

We, the following, are running for the SA Senate. We are students from the town and are asking you, the townspeople, for support in the SA election. WE want to involve you.

Another publication was issued by students in Conference Room C of Billings Center, entitled, "Platform of Concerned Students." It reads as follows:

Trustees Confronted By Problem Of In-State, Out-Of-State Tuition

by Jeffrey Yacker

The October meeting of the Board of Trustees of the University of Vermont was held last Saturday at 8:30 AM in Memorial Lounge of Waterman Building. The meeting, which attracted few non-Board members, was conducted smoothly and quietly by Dr. Robert O'Brien, Chairman.

One of the more important items of business which the Board considered was that of presumably out-of-state students seeking in-state tuition. This was illustrated by the appeal of Robert Stearns. Mr. Stearns is a native of Connecticut, yet he is registered to vote in Vermont. In addition, he maintains a full-time job in Burlington and pays taxes to the State of Vermont. Mr. Stearns' parents still reside in Connecticut, but he is footing the bill for his college education. His request for in-state tuition was rejected by the Trustees in a unanimous vote, on the grounds that Stearns left Vermont this summer to visit his parents in Connecticut. In the eyes of the Trustees, this was not indicative of a resident of Vermont. Following the vote, Trustee Francis Peisch of Burlington emphasized the seriousness of the problem which Stearns' case represented. Peisch stated, "This entire issue could really explode someday." An Ad-Hoc Committee on Residence has been established to examine the entire situation. The Committee includes Dean of Students, Richard Powers, Mr. Peisch, and Dr. Paul Low, a recently elected Trustee. Dean Powers stated that one of the problems confronting the committee is that there is very little case law on which they can decide appeals.

The Committee on Development reported that to date this year, UVM has received $1,441,000 in gifts. President Andrews noted with concern that there has been a noticeable lack of interest in the fine arts by contributors to the University.

As a part of the report of the Committee on Finance, a representative of Goldman Sachs, a New York investment bank, spoke on the financing of the new Living-Learning Center. The gentleman stated that UVM will issue long-term bonds of 40 years duration to finance the new complex. Grants from the Federal departments of HEW and HUD will enable the University to reduce the interest rates on these bonds to 3.60%, a very favorable rate.

The Finance Committee has also established a committee, chaired by Dr. Paul Low, to examine the structure of student fees and recommend new procedures. The committee will report at the December meeting of the Board. The Finance Committee also included in its report a recommendation that the University employ a collection agency where debts are overdue 120 days or more.

On October 26 at 4 PM a Memorial Service will be held in Ira Allen Chapel for John Dewey, renowned educator and UVM alumnus. Dewey's ashes will be entombed in the Ira Allen Chapel at that time. The meeting concluded at approximately 10:30 AM.

New SA Senate Convenes

by Dan Haslam

October tenth was the first meeting with the newly-elected representatives from the UVM community for the Student Association. President D. William Sisco welcomed the new senators, whereupon attendance was taken resulting in the fullest Senate thus far this year. Sisco announced that at the beginning of each meeting a raffle will be conducted for two tickets to a local movie theater to be given to two senators in attendance. He further stated that he hoped this raffle will be an added incentive for Senate attendance as well as the new policy of publishing a list of absentee Senators each week in the Cynic.

New business before the Senate was brisk and controversial. Four organizations requested recognition by the Student Association. They are the Sailing Club, the Women's Centennial Club, the Photographic Interaction Club, and the Committee Against the War. The Committee Against the War's request was discussed and debated at length. Many questions were raised as to the financial status of the organization, both as to their assets and to their financial liabilities. A great amount of concern was raised over the liability of the S.A. to meet any financial responsibilities that a recognized organization might incur. Dean Richard Powers spoke at length of the S.A.'s responsibility for debts of UVM organizations, as well as that of the University of Vermont. Further points were raised as to the clarity of the statement-of-purpose for this organization as well as the question of the legal presence of any organization not recognized by the S.A. but occupying S.A. property. President Sisco announced that he is currently investigating all organizations for any illegal use of S.A. property.

The Concert Bureau reported a $1,500-2,000 profit from the Edgar Winter concert. A motion for the nomination to the Concert Bureau of Chip Towers as assistant passed with one dissenting vote. Jeff Wilson announced that the next concert will be Chicago to appear November 4. Tickets for this event will go on sale October 17 at $5.00 per ticket. For the first week of sales, tickets will be sold only to UVM students, one ticket per I.D. card.

Terrance Demas, a town senator, announced that the Billings Governing Board needs volunteers to help determine the different and varied uses for the Billings Student Center.

The meeting, a puzzle for new senators unfamiliar with parliamentary jargon, adjourned in a little more than an hour; all new business being automatically held over until next week for action.

"She Week" Scheduled For October 16-20

October 16 thru 20 will be designated "she week" at the University of Vermont. The idea was originated last year as part of the festivities for the celebration of the one hundredth year of women attending the University. The Women's Centennial Committee decided that they would not have enough time to implement it last year and scheduled the week long seminar for this fall. According to Jackie Gibbons, Dean of Women, it's just a matter of "stretching our imagination a bit."

In an interview with Dean Gibbons earlier this fall, she said that the purpose of the week would be to "provide for styles."

The week will kick-off with a lecture Monday night at 8:00 pm in 106B Cook entitled (continued on page five)

Liberty Union Candidates Hold Press Conference

by Barbara Frankel

On Friday, October 6, five members of the Liberty Union Party who are running for state legislature held a press conference in the Methodist Church on South Winoski

Street. The five candidates, who feel that "the people who own this state, and this country, are not interested in the people but are only interested in themselves," consist of two UVM students, two women and a welfare recipient.

The first candidate to speak was Blaine Pierce Sargent, a UVM student and a member of the Committee Against the War. He graduated from South Burlington High School in 1968 and has been at UVM since 1969. Running for election in District 1-2 in Burlington, Sargent's main concerns are with the quality of the environment in Vermont. He is deeply concerned with the plight of the deer herds, which he claims are starving because of legislature regulating the deer season. Sargent wants to take the matter out of the hands of the legislators and give it to professional wildlife managers.

He is also worried about the problem of solid waste disposal and wants to begin studies on trash disposal and a solution to complete recycling. Sargent also advocates the opening of public parks on Lake Champlain and in other areas throughout the state. In the words of the Liberty Union party, "The earth and the state of Vermont are limited in resources, and have got to be preserved if life is to survive."

Jackie Wohl, running for election in Burlington's District 1-4 has lived here since May and is presently the proprietor of a bookstore. She is primarily campaigning for women's rights and for an end to increased taxes. Ms. Wohl supports a taxpayer's rebellion as there is a "necessity to reduce priorities." She feels that the state legislature should provide for low and middle income housing projects in order to prevent excessive rent increases. Members of utility agencies should be elected directly by the constituents, according to her, and not appointed candidates who claim to reduce taxes and then raise them after being elected. Her plan is to tax the large corporations, who should pay their full share.

The third candidate to speak was David Mahan, a UVM student originally from Massachusetts, who is campaigning in District 1-3 in Burlington. He claims that the state could use money sent to the Pentagon for better purposes. This money according to Mahan, instead of going into the defense budget, should be used for hospitals for those who cannot afford medical care. Mahan state that (continued on page seven)

Pershing Rifles
'Blood Drawing' Soon

by Javi Covey

Next week the Ethan Allen Rifles and the Pershing Rifles are cosponsoring a blood drawing at Billings Center. The drawing will take place from 10:00 am to 4:00 pm on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and is open to anyone. The Ethan Allen Rifles and the Pershing Rifles hold a drive twice a year in October and March. Last March, 16,000th pint of blood was donated at University of Vermont drawings since the first one held on December 18, 1950.

Rotating trophies will be awarded to the two top dorms, and the top fraternity and sorority for their participation. Originally, the dorm trophies were awarded to one male dorm and one female dorm, but co-ed dorms have made this system difficult. In order to participate, all you have to do is donate one (very small) pint of blood or volunteer to work for two hours.

The volunteers, including 150 to 200 UVM students, supplement the paid staff of six nurses (the ones who actually perform the venipunctures, not the ones who take your temperature, blood pressure, and ask you the questions) and one driver. Many of the volunteers are nursing or medical technology students, but any one can work by showing up at the registration desk and expressing an interest. According to Edward R. Stearn, administrator of the Red Cross Blood-Center in (continued on page five)

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

DEADLINE

The official deadline for material for the Cynic is Monday at 12:00 noon. Any announcement received after this time will be published only if space is available. Remember: the publication of any material that is submitted late is uncertain.

'T-Sessions' Welcome You!

A series of weekly sensitivity training - encounter groups is now being organized for UVM students and faculty. Several groups are already meeting on a weekly basis, and other groups will be formed as participants enroll. Trained student leaders 'co-lead' each group, under the supervision of John Perry.

The Next Thing, Drug Alternatives project. Most of the group leaders have received their training under both The Next Thing sponsored programs and previous participation in Campus Ministry Encounter Groups.

Each Monday night an "Open" encounter group meets at 389 College Street, the basement of Hillier Building. There prospective participants can join in an introductory session to see if they are interested in pursuing sensitivity training further. Those who elect to do so are then assigned to one of the existing groups, or into a new group.

The project is jointly sponsored by the UVM Campus Ministry Center and Catholic Center Announces

Third World Awareness Program

The Cunningham Newman Center will sponsor a Global Awareness Program October 20-22. The program is devised to help participants experience what life is like in the Third World. The program includes self-evaluation, simulation games, exploration of economic myths and films on the Third World. The program is conducted by two Maryknoll priests who have worked for 15 years developing countries. The program is divided into four sessions: Oct. 20, 7:30 p.m., at the Newman Center; Oct. 21, 1:00 p.m., Champlain College; Oct. 21, 6:00 p.m., Trinity College; Oct. 22, 12:00 p.m., St. Michael's College. Two meals are included in the program. The deadline for registration is Sunday night, Oct. 15. Charge: $5.00.

The program is part of a three-week theme being developed at the Center. This weekend, Oct. 14-15, Sr. Landora, campus minister, will address the congregation at the Newman Center on the topic of peace and justice.

The speakers have been announced for the political evening at the Cunningham Newman Center, Sunday, Oct. 15, 7:30 p.m. Greg Craig and Scott McKay will represent the McGovern platform; Ted Dudley and Tom Calkins will speak for the Nixon campaign; David Mahan and Martha Abbott will represent the Liberty Union Party. The evening will provide an opportunity for the participants to hear issues and ask questions. NOTARIES WILL BE PRESENT TO REGISTER VOTERS.

Car Wash

The UVM Marching Band will hold a car wash on Saturday, October 14, from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. in the Carrigan Dairy Science parking lot. The proceeds will go to the band treasury for travel and banquet funds.

So bring in your car and come clean for fall and the band.

U.N. Club

To Meet

The Warren Austin Model United Nations Club is to hold an organizational and recruiting meeting. It will take place Wednesday, October 18, at 4 p.m., in the Poli Sci Seminar Room (210 Old Mill).

Student Activities Office

Coordinates Bulletin Boards

This year the Office of Student Activities is once again trying to co-ordinate use of the student bulletin boards in both Billings Center and Waterman. This effort is being made because many people have complained about information about apartments, goods, or services, which are no longer available.

In an attempt to consolidate information of use to students you will familiarize yourself with the following guides to bulletin board use.

I. Personal notices other than for "rides" are to be dated and posted on those boards marked STUDENT NOTICES.

II. All notices of requests for rides are to be posted on the ride board in the Den in Billings. Please make use of the cards provided.

III. Posters and notices announcing Activities and Events are to be stamped at the Student Activities Office in Billings, and posted on those boards marked STUDENT ACTIVITIES AND EVENTS.

Roundhouse Returns!

If you were in Billings two weeks ago Friday you might have noticed some strange but interesting happenings. The Roundhouse is back this semester but seems to have taken over Billings Center. In the Roundhouse "proper" one could hear some fine folk and blues; across the Den, another group was jamming folk-jazz. Still in North Lounge, people were square dancing to a country blues group. This Friday? Who knows...

Roundhouse will be open this Friday night 9 to 12. If you're interested in playing, drop by the Student Activities desk in Billings Center, leave your name and where we can reach you. If you're interested in listening, see you there...

God Talks At St. Anselm's

Is God for real? Was an unclear, plastic belief part of the baggage you packed to come here? Does the God you were told about in Sunday School seem a little bit unreal? The Gospel - garbage or good news? Can God, or religion, or Jesus say anything in helping you make decisions and live today?

If you have questions like these in your mind, or if these questions get you thinking, why not join us at St. Anselm's Chapel for God Talks. It's a series of informal discussions about God, Jesus, the Church, and today beginning Monday, Oct. 16, at 7:00 p.m. Please feel free to join with this meeting or any of the subsequent ones, the agenda will be basically whatever is on the minds of those who attend.

Gymnastic Club Warmup

Friday October 13, is the day for the Gymnastic Club's pre-season intrasquad meet. This is a warmup for the first clash of the season, which is November 11 against Plattsburgh. Some of the competitors are Chris Kent, Fred Lee, John Kenney, and Jake Foley. Specialists in floor exercise: Dave Hossington and Terry Raymond, Doug Mackey and Dennis Sakurain on side horse and parallel bars, Bruce Schulman on the parallel bars and Jim Russell in vaulting will also be performing. There will be no admission charge. The event will be held on Friday the 13th at 4 PM in Patrick Gym.

A Magazine Is Born

"Exercise Exchange: A Journal for English Teachers in High School and College," published at the University of Vermont, is having a successful subscription campaign according to its co-editors, Prof. Paul A. Eschholz and Alfred F. Rosa of the English department.

The magazine, which was previously published without charge at the University of Connecticut, has been put on a self-sustaining basis at UVM and will be published twice a year. The editors hope to have the first issue out late this year.

Already subscriptions have been received from all but one or two states, and from Canada, England, Australia, and the Union of South Africa. Some 50 manuscripts have been submitted by teachers representing 20 states. The magazine offers short practical articles on devices that have "worked" in the classroom to smooth the way for students struggling with the mysteries of language and literature.

Prof. Arthur W. Biddle as managing editor will exercise editorial supervision of the magazine. Profs. Rosa and Eschholz are in charge of business details.

Medical Grant Received

A grant from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation of Princeton, N.J., to the University of Vermont College of Medicine is aimed at increasing the number of future doctors likely to enter practice in the state.

Assistant Dean David M. Tormey announced that UVM received $81,185.80, its share of the nationwide grant program which is distributing $10 million to all of the nation's 108 schools of medicine and seven schools of osteopathy.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13

Indian Mystic Visits UVM

Master Kirpal Singh of India, spiritual leader of the world-wide Ruhani Satsangh, will speak at Ira Allen Chapel, October 21 at eight in the evening. His subject is "Self-Knowledge and the New Education." His visit is sponsored by the religion department of the university. Singh has made previous world tours in 1955 and 1963. He is the author of eleven books in English and numerous articles in Punjabi, and is the president of the World Fellowship of Religions representing 250 religious groups.

Kirpal Singh, perhaps the greatest living mystic, was born 1894, in Sayyad Kauran in the Punjab area of what is now Pakistan. A lifelong search for God led him to investigate the claims of many saints and of various religious traditions, culminating in his initiation at the hands of Hazur Baba Sawan Singh Ji, the great saint of Beas, in 1924. For twenty-four years he sat at the feet of his Master, under whose direction he completed his inner spiritual growth, while living the life of a householder and rising to a high position in the Indian Government. At his Master's death in 1948, he retired to the Himalayan Mountains, where he spent three months in almost continuous Samadhi, or absorption in God. On returning to the world he took up the mission of his Master, to impart spirituality to sincere seekers after truth and to give them a conscious contact with their own souls and with God. For this purpose he founded Ruhani Satsangh, which he describes as: "a common forum of platform at which all persons, though professing different faiths and religious beliefs, would be given the principles of spirituality and encouraged to practice spiritual disciplines; and so gain salvation and peace." Since that time Kirpal Singh has initiated many thousands of seekers into the practice of Surat Shabd Yoga: the science of self and God realization. For the past 15 years he has also served as the President of the World Fellowship of Religions, an international organization represented by about 250 different religious groups from all parts of the world. The aim of the true unity of mankind is presently being furthered by Kirpal Singh through the construction of a Center for Man, Manav Kendra near Dehra Dun, India. The purpose of Manav Kendra is to revive man's conscious contact with God, to bring about oneness among the followers of various faiths, and to generate universal well-being. These objectives are being achieved through "man-making, man-service, and man-education." This in turn is being realized by the construction of a "hall of universal worship," hospitals, homes for the aged, and language schools, and through extensive agricultural development.

His complete schedule at UVM includes a private reception in Memorial Lounge, Waterman Building October 21 at 4:00 p.m., the public address that night at 8:00 p.m., a service of meditation and spiritual talks Sunday morning at 10:00 a.m. in the John Dewey Lounge of the Old Mill, and an open meeting in North Lounge of Billings Student Center Sunday evening at 7:30 p.m.

Fleming Hosts Allyn Lite

"Critics' Blackboards—Photodocuments, Drawings, and Videotapes by Allyn Lite"—is the new exhibit opening this week at the Robert Hall Fleming Museum. Allyn Lite, Professor of Art at Fairleigh Dickinson University, is a pioneer in the exploration of lasers and holograms (three-dimensional illusions created with laser beams) as art media. Lite's current exhibition at the Fleming consists of photographs of art critics as their blackboards, drawings done from TV screens, and videotapes stemming from his most recent experiences in Canada, Detroit, and New York City.

Lite will be in Burlington October 19th through the 21st. Thursday night, October 19th, he will speak on his current exhibit in the Fleming Museum Main Gallery. Then, Friday and Saturday, he will supervise a series of workshops on videotape techniques, along with Phoebe Kaylor of the Alternative Media Center, New York University. Further information on the times and locations of the workshops will be forthcoming, but in the meantime, those interested in attending should contact Bill Davison at the new Art Building (656-2014).

At some point during his stay, Allyn Lite will execute a print which will subsequently be for sale at the Fleming. "Critics' Blackboards—Photodocuments, Drawings, and Videotapes" will be on view through November 5th.

Series Of Field Trips Comprise Geologic Conference

The 64th annual meeting of the New England Intercollegiate Geologic Conference, sponsored by the University of Vermont, Middlebury College, Norwich University, and the Vermont Geological Survey will be held October 13-15 in Burlington.

The "conference" is not a conference in the usual sense of the word, but is composed of a series of field trips led by geologists from throughout the United States who have done work in Vermont. A variety of special interest field trips have been planned in the areas of bedrock, glacial geology, paleontology, and environmental geology.

Trip leaders and authors for the conference come from a host of institutions including Middlebury, Norwich and Vermont, California Institute of Technology, the State University of New York at Buffalo, Queens College, Hamilton, Boston College, Bryn Mawr, UCLA, Lehman College, Johns Hopkins, Rutgers, Harvard, the University of Wisconsin, Penn State, and the Amoco Research Center at Tulsa, Okla.

Registrations are still open to all interested persons. Final registration will be held Friday, October 13th at 6:00 p.m. in Perkins Geology Building, UVM. Address all correspondence concerning registration to: Rolf S. Stanley NEIGC '72 Department of Geology University of Vermont Burlington, Vermont 05401

Agenda:
Friday, October 13:
6:00 p.m.—Late registration at Perkins Geology Building.
Social hour at Fleming Museum.

East Asian Exchange

Approximately twenty students met on October 4th in the Old Mill to begin the organization of a new club, now called the East Asian Cultural Exchange. As reflected in this name, the central purpose of the group is the promotion of a better knowledge and appreciation of the culture and peoples of East Asia. Some of the possible activities that were proposed at this meeting include: bringing speakers and films on campus, sponsoring seminars on current topics of interest; taking outings to nearby cities or colleges for cultural events; helping to organize student exchanges between UVM and colleges of Japan and China, serving the UVM and Burlington community by providing friendship and tutors for culturally isolated persons of East Asia or East Asian descent.

Several individuals are now working on a club charter to be discussed and ratified at the second meeting. All interested students are invited to this meeting which will be held on Wednesday, October 18th at 7:30 in Marsh Lounge Billings Center.

What "New" Nixon?

Four years ago, when Richard Nixon was making his second attempt at the Presidency, people began to speak of the "new" Nixon. The "new" Nixon was a dignified statesman, above the modulations of politics; nothing like the old communist-baiting, charge leveling hatchet man of the Eisenhower Administration.

The "old" Nixon was the man who grossly distorted Jerry Voorhis's record back in 1946. This Nixon was the man who questioned the patriotism and courage of members of the Truman Administration because they "lost" China and allowed thousands of imaginary communists into the Federal government. The "old" Nixon won his Senate seat in 1950 by smearing the character of Helen Gahagan Douglas. And this was the Nixon who, as a Vice-Presidential candidate in 1952, was the beneficiary of a $18,000 campaign fund whose origins Nixon tried to hide.

But why bring this up again? After all, people change, and we all know the "old" Nixon is no more. Or is he?

Consider, if you will, Vice President Agnew, the man who has leveled attack after intimidating attack at the press, because much of the news they report is unfavorable to the Administration (could it be that the facts don't always coincide with Mr. Nixon's view of the world?). Agnew is also the man who suggested that James Rhodes should not have been on the commission investigating the Kent State tragedy, merely because he refused to close his mind to the possibility that statements by members of the Administration had contributed to the atmosphere which finally resulted in the deaths of four students. The Vice President is also the man who stated that the Watergate incident was a trap set by the Democrats, and then failed to produce a single scrap of evidence to support his accusation.

Consider the Watergate incident itself. Two former White House aides were among those arrested on the premises of the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee. One of those involved in the bugging attempt had money which was traced back to contributions made to the Committee to Re-Elect the President. A former F.B.I. agent, hired as a guard for Martha Mitchell, has reportedly told the grand jury that he had been assigned to listen to conversations on the tapped phones in the Democrats' offices.

Look if you will at H.R. Haldeman, a top White House aide, who said, on nationwide television, that Senator Edmund Muskie was "consciously aiding and abetting the enemy," because the Maine Senator had been sharply critical of the President's war policies.

Or, consider Mr. Nixon himself. The "new" Nixon is the man who nominated a judicial mediocrity (G. Harold Carswell) for a Supreme Court seat, merely for the vote appeal such a move would have in the South. The "new" Nixon is also the man who intervened in the battle to repeal New York's liberalized abortion law, because he believed there might be some votes in an anti-abortion stand. On top of this, the White House denied that the President ever intended to have the letter made public, yet one of his aides approved the disclosure. Apparently, this Richard Nixon believes that intervention into what he himself has termed a matter for the states alone to resolve is justified if there seems to be political mileage in it.

The "new" Nixon is the man who pointedly watched a football game on TV, ignoring thousands of anti-war protesters outside the White House fence, therefore symbolically not hearing what they had to say.

This "new" Nixon has, as in 1952, refused to divulge the source of a large campaign fund, only this time the sum involved is much larger, in the neighborhood of $10 million.

Is there a "new" Nixon? The only thing novel about the Richard Nixon of 1972 is that he has more underlings to do his bidding, and less of the dirty work needs to be done by himself. One cannot teach an old politician new tricks, especially when his old ones work so well.

The Bowman Report Sad Parallels Do Exist Between Vermont And Vietnam

It is hard these days for people to get excited about the mass slaughter of civilians that is taking place in Indochina. What is a little closer to home are the parallels between the environmental and economic destruction of Vermont and its parallel in Indochina.

First, the economic side: Vermonters and out of states have to pay one of the highest rates of tuition to go to the state university. This is not because Vermont is an inherently poor state, but rather for a combination of business and state government policies. 1. Large tax breaks are given ski resorts and other industry. 2. Over 60% of business, including banks and utilities are owned by out of states (hence profits that should stay in the state for development, education, etc., leave to benefit other states). This is a colonial setup, and is paralleled closely by the situation in Southern Vietnam where 1. The war has caused a stoppage of food production making Southern Vietnam and Cambodia dependant on the United States for food. 2. Large United States corporations have already signed contracts for mineral, oil, and other monopolistic rights with dictator Thieu.

Environmentally Vermont is being destroyed by: 1.

Corporate interests (business sites, parking lots, and power plants) 2. The state government, through the highway dept. has embarked on a program of destruction by highway construction. The majority of their programs are designed to benefit traffic passing through the state rather than Vermonters anyway.

In Vietnam the environmental problems are evident everywhere. Every minute, 5,200 lbs. of bombs are being dropped on Vietnam. From 1962 to 1970 100 million lbs. for every inhabitant. Aside from the defoliation effects of herbicides numerous birth defects have been linked with the use of chemical herbicides. Finally since 1968 and increasing after that 150 bulldozers a day have been clearing over 1000 acres a day for the purpose of "area denial".

The similarities between Vermont and Vietnam are striking. Vermont is subject to colonialism, is being made dependant on outside industry and capital; so is Vietnam. Vermont is being destroyed environmentally through irresponsible government and corporate interests; Vietnam is being destroyed by a deliberate plan of United States aggression. These similarities are well worth considering.

Letters To The Editor Loss Of Kake Walk Not Important

Dear Sir Or Ms,

As the case may be,

The concern of the editorial writer 10/5/72 Cynic for the loss of Kake Walk was impressive. It's good to see youth persist in seeking a goal. But since he is a campus leader shouldn't we expect more than a decrying the loss and expectation that someone else will generate a replacement? Does his pen represent the affluent age - a generation that grew up in material comfort, never forced to do its own grubbing? The NOW generation has demonstrated a dear genius for evolving new life styles. One aspect of your style includes an apparent amazing adeptness in the mechanics of sex.

Shouldn't we try to divert some of this energy to breeding and nurturing a new set of live, student - operated, fun weekends to replace those the editor declares we have lost?

You might thereby also show your parents that you have learned from their bad examples. Probably there's more to breeding and aborting; more than breeding and turning the offspring over to nuns and baby sitters; more even than keeping them in the arms of their mothers. If you would have children grow to independence it helps to have concerned parents here in there along the way.

So too with your weekends. Kake Walk was evolved through earlier eras when prejudice was the law of the land, whether you recognize it or not. To replace the lost event you have to hang in there long after the begetting. Why pass the buck?

Sincerely yours,
Joseph Bornstein
Agricultural Engineer

added, have been "half-hearted and begrudging." "The Administration, after stating that it wanted a strong bill," he went on, "has given in to agribusiness and the chemical industry and failed to push for strong pesticide control. It capitulated to the coal industry and refused to support strong strip-mining legislation, and under the Nixon administration, Federal energy policy is the province of the large oil companies, who are now attempting to monopolize our oil, uranium and other energy fuels."

What the country needs, Mr. McGovern said, is an "era of environmental law and order."

A McGovern Administration, he said, would press hard for the following:

Passage, full funding and vigorous enforcement of the Water Quality Act of 1972.

Development of tax incentives, such as taxes on sulphur emissions and effluent discharges, as a means of curbing industrial pollution.

A 10-fold increase in the number of safety and health inspectors to enforce legislation aimed at making the working environment less dangerous.

Substantial redistribution of highway trust fund money away from road construction and into mass transit capital, maintenance and operating expenditures.

Greatly expanded research and development funding for such problems as urban transportation alternatives to the internal combustion engine, alternative energy sources, oil tanker tracking and flood plain development.

Strong legislation regulating strip mining, leading to a phasing out of such mineral extraction.

A major reorganization of water resource agencies.

Passage of the flat-McGovern bill, which would give citizens the right to police politicians and give courts new powers of review over Federal agency decisions affecting the environment.

In last week's column I referred at length to the difference between environmental rhetoric and environmental action. It would be foolish not to keep this in mind when voting for George McGovern or any other candidate for any other office. Past performance is very tangible, however, and here is the crux of the argument against the environmental Richard Nixon. It has been made "perfectly clear" how President Nixon feels and acts with reference to the environment. With all the givens that exist today and with the present president the direction of governmental environmental action is clear. From an environmental viewpoint, never have so few, acted about so much, and produced so little.

An Observation Can We Protest?

Last week, Cynic columnist William Bowman wrote bitterly on UVM's administration and the school's food service program, SAGA. According to his article, these bodies refused a fund raising fast in the dining halls for Medical Aid for Indochina, a program designed to pay for medical supplies and hospitals to care for the tens of thousands of war refugees and civilian casualties of an undeclared war.

Apparently, the administration and SAGA felt that action was too political, and indeed, certainly not in the best interests of UVM's "image," a word that university president Edward Andrews is very fond of using.

Bowman pointed out the obvious hypocrisy of the denial, alluding to the diabolical of political science professor Michael Parenti last spring by the University's board of trustees, a decision made at its 1971 December meeting.

A word like "hypocrisy" is a powerful one, and because it is, it should be used carefully. Yet, one has to wonder what kinds of dissent, if any, will be allowed by this university in light of its most recent action not to have a fast.

I am confused. I am worried. Obviously, a war continues in Indochina where human beings are being killed. Indeed, as this is being written, Henry Kissinger is in Paris for an "unprecedented" third day negotiating with the North Vietnamese; Yet, in essence, what of it? The war should have been ended so long ago. But also at this writing, American bombs still fall, killing civilians. Obviously, there are many here in America who wish to register a protest.

But, if you are a student at a university, how do you protest? The fundamental question that ought to be answered is this: Can you protest?

Does protest end because we are labelled "students," "faculty," "administrators," "trustees"? Are we components of a machine where a button-for-dissent simply doesn't exist?

It seems whenever a group of individuals protest, it is automatically characterized as a "political act." We forget that we have a right to dissent, and dissent, in itself, isn't necessarily political, but, more than likely, directed at a political process that needs repairs badly.

When any governing body, be it a food service program or a university administration, assumes the power of deciding what is in the best interests of a free university, it comes tragically close to a dictatorship. The right to dissent, to actively protest, is erased.

Indeed, what kind of citizens do we become when we are trapped at such an early age into the game of rules and regulations when we have legitimate complaints? It would seem that rules and regulations are non-existent in undeclared wars, thousands of miles away from a "free" country, thousands of miles away from a "free" university.

Tax Strike Urged In Protest

To the Editor:

We are well aware that the war costs money. Huge amounts of money. Enough to feed all the people in Vermont, enough to provide employment for thousands of unemployed in this country. Yet, is this really important to us as humanitarians? Would it be alright to use napalm bombs, pineapple bombs, guava bombs, and "daisy-cutters" if they were provided free of charge? There is no horror akin to that of napalm. We, as Americans, have stood by silently as these anti-personnel materials are produced, never thinking that to stop the production of war machinery is to stop the war machine itself.

It was not so long ago that the town of Guernica, Spain was bombed by American planes and eighty people were killed. The world was outraged at this inhumane, senseless act of aggression. Yet now, a mere forty years later, we are dropping napalm on six million pounds of homes per day on the people of Indochina! And the American people do nothing, say nothing. They ignore this brutal war because it is six thousand miles from their homes. What they do not realize is that the armaments that permit the war to continue are in their own back yards! Lakeview General Electric, to name but one, produces virtually all of the so-called "mini-guns" which are used in Vietnam. These guns can tear up a whole village, taking every living thing in it, in the span of one minute! Imagine your home town devastated in sixty seconds, your parents, friends and relatives slaughtered in but a moment. There are innumerable other "war factories" whom operate nearby on the dollars that we pay them.

You can stop this horror. The place to start is to refuse to pay the 10% phone tax that pays for the war. You can refuse to pay any taxes at all until the war ends. Some have done it: they have gone to jail.

Thomas Cutler

Demonstration Saturday

To the Editor:

Saturday October 14 is the culmination of Medical Aid for Indochina Week. It is also the anniversary of the death of Nguyen Van Troi, a Vietnamese patriot, and the day was chosen by Vietnamese in America to publicize the Seven-Point Peace Plan. To mark this day in Vermont, a statewide demonstration has been planned at Montpelier.

Concerned citizens from all over Vermont will gather at the statehouse lawn at noon on Saturday. For more information, concerning preparation or rides, contact the Committee Against the War. Conference Room 6, 100 State Street, Montpelier, VT 05602.

On Ms. Cochran's Dad

Sir,

In regards to your front page article in last week's issue on the political views of Barbara Cochran. I feel that you have been party to deception by omission of the fact that Ms. Cochran's father has been for a number of years an executive in the Armaments Division of General Electric. Senator McGovern's proposals for reduction of military expenditures could well have an effect on Ms. Cochran's financial security so perhaps she has an axe to grind. I don't think this was made clear in your article.

Sincerely,
Wayne Paranteau

Your breakfast here are something
Even-pressant pancakes,
But eaters who are really smart,
Only have the corn flakes

Your fried eggs come complete Your scrambled eggs with I'm sure you could surprise us
But only time will tell.

Your lunchtimes are a special bc
You always have a treat,
And when we're done with what
We all go out to eat.

Your dirty dishes, filthy forks,
And such commodities,
Come with everything you serve They're never oddities.

Your hamburg comes in many f
Patties, leaves, and sauce,
You want to jeopardize your job
Give some to your bosses.

SAGA's brown all-purpose gravy
Is on ev'rything we eat,
You cook it up, then pour it on
And now it's myst'ry meat.

You treat us right on Saturdays
You give each kid a steak,
But get revenge on Sunday night
With week-old SAGA steak.

I'm sorry but I have to stop,
It's GREEN DEATH time
I caught it during freshman term
It's starting its fourth year.

But I don't let that bother me,
My time I try to bide,
'Cause SAGA food was so much
Before my taste buds died.

Burlington, the volunteers are really carrying out the ideals of concern and compassion expressed by college students today. They are involved in making certain that every person who needs blood will get it.

Mr. Stearns said that the act of donating blood is the "most unselfish, humane act available to us" because the donor gets no compensation for it and he never knows who gets his blood. It is the "responsibility of all citizens in a democracy." It is necessary that people continue to give this gift of life because, despite tremendous scientific and medical advances, no substitute for human blood has been found.

He called support of the college students "truly outstanding." Over 7500 pints of blood were donated last year by students at organized blood drawings at colleges and universities in the state of Vermont. The Blood Center estimates that approximately 9000 pints will be donated this year by students.

Since the center was started on September 15, 1950, over 910,000 pints were donated in the Vermont-New Hampshire Red Cross Regional Blood Program. This makes it the most superior program in the country. In the year ending June 30, 1971, 42,593 pints were collected in the two states.

I didn't catch the name of the opening act last Saturday as it turned out, it didn't matter because their music was anything but memorable. Borrowing from a range of pop idioms and stealing riffs from the Allmans and Chicago, this band managed to make their music so bland as to be offensive. A stage act so over-rehearsed that the perspiration on the musicians' foreheads seemed choreographed made their sixty-minute-plus set almost intolerable. It was nothing more than rock and roll cocktail lounge music. Having dispensed with White Trash, Edgar Winter now has one of those organic power bands less concerned with making intelligent music than in whipping the audience into an increasingly furious frenzy. Winter and his band used every possible gimmick to excite the crowd: high volume, "DO YOU WANNA ROCK AND ROLL?" exhortations, a call and response routine and self-indulgent displays of instrumental virtuosity etc., etc. I have to wonder about any band that uses Keith Emerson's patented synthesizer organ AND a weak rehash of the Jimi Hendrix guitar torture routine (much of which Jimi copied from Buddy Guy), including playing the guitar with the teeth.

When the group got down to music minus the distracting flash, they did some vicious, body-rattling rock and roll, but then so does Humble Pie. At least with the Pie one isn't subjected to the grotesque exaggeration Winter and his three cohorts (all of whom, by the way, are talented musicians, even if it didn't show much that night) dished out.

Or as a friend of mine said as we walked from the gym: "Oh, it was alright...but I couldn't get into it."

Album Review:
Van Morrison Approaches Perfection

by Doug Collette
SAINT DOMINIC'S PREVIEW
(Warner Brothers BS 2633)

Van Morrison's albums are as close to pure perfection as any records I've ever heard: his songs come to life as Van sings them, making them deep expressions of his whole being. The arrangements are completely appropriate to the mood of the particular song and Van's musicians are totally in tune not only with him, but with each other. Astral Weeks, Moodance, His Band and The Street Choir and Tupelo Honey, whatever their stylistic differences, are seen together by the emotional power of the supreme artistry of Van Morrison.

None of these albums can really be separated from the others—they're like chapters in a book in the process of creation. So, Saint Dominic's Preview bears some resemblance to its predecessors, but because its creator is a different man than one that made Tupelo Honey and the others, this latest album contains much that is new.

"Jackie Wilson Said (I'm in Heaven When You Smile)" is in the fine tradition of Van's previous singles: jaunty, thoroughly happy and completely infectious. In no way does it compromise his artistic values for the sake of commerciality.

"Gypsy" gives the first real clue about the album: a lean arrangement, and uncomplicated lyrical images suggest that condensation is of the utmost importance. As Van, Janet Planet and Ellen Shroer sing each chorus, we can see the gypsies dancing in their "woody glen...where they make a retreat..." and at each mention of "the sweet sound of two guitars" Doug Messenger fingers crystal notes on his six-string acoustic to accompany Van's rhythm. The arrangements on this record and the spare style in which all the musicians play makes for a spare sound which is nevertheless as rich as that of Preview's lush predecessor and that pays a great compliment to the skill of the people who play and sing here.

"I Will Be There" is Van's "If Dogs Run Free", a light, happy love song in a rather traditional jazz mode. It's completely delightful, thanks in no small part to those superb sax courtesy of Jack Shroer and Jules Broussard.

"Listen to the Lion" is one of the two long tracks on the album in an stream-of-consciousness format similar to Astral Weeks. It has a beautiful melody coupled with simple lyrics and the dramatic crescendos at each refrain rivet the listener's attention. Towards the end of the cut as background vocalists sing "Listen to the lion," Van makes incomprehensible guttural noises, displaying a lack of self-consciousness that indicates how very much Van reveals himself to us through his songs.

The title track acts as a sort of bridge between the album's conventional and the five conventionally styled performances. But "Saint Dominic's Preview" is the most enigmatic of them all. The lyrics are very difficult to decipher but mention the current situation in Ireland and compare it to "Back in San Francisco where I'm trying to make this whole thing blend"—the main focus seems to be the individual's commitment to something other than himself. The fullest arrangement of the album features a delicate intertwining of piano and organ and steel guitar.

"Redwood Tree" evokes the same kind of sensuous images as "Old Old Woodstock." "And it smells like rain/Baby hear the thunder/Won't you keep us from all harm/Wonderful redwood tree." Nothing to say but it's gorgeous.

"Almost Independence Day" is the finale, the second extended cut. A Moog is used behind an all-acoustic arrangement much as on "Move Around" from Stephen Stills Manassas, in concert with Van's involved vocal, it makes the unadorned lyrics as vivid as the most picturesque poetry. In addition, the Moog's foreboding tone contrasts those optimistic lyrics which may hearken to a passage from "Tupelo Honey": "You can't stop us on the road to freedom/You can't stop us 'cause our eyes can see... Knights in armor bent on chivalry." But as with "Listen to the Lion," literal interpretations are unimportant—the mood created by Van and the musicians is what counts.

Although between the two albums there is a great variety of expression within (those), each style and structure, and conception—and execution culminating in a blend of music and mood that is as encompassing as the self-confidence and contentment that glowed from Tupelo Honey. And because that self-assurance has allowed Van Morrison to produce and album as adventurous as Saint Dominic's Preview, it appears that this very gifted man has much more music he wants to make.

And that is the best news I've heard in a long time.

Chicago Returns To Burlington

The success, both artistic and commercial, and the legitimacy of a band may often be determined by the decreasing amount of adjectives required in order to refer to a group and its sound.

When Chicago initially came together in the Windy City as a sort of revolutionary bar and dance band, the descriptive adjectives were practically endless: "That band playing down at..." "Horn players who..." "Well, it's kinda like jazz, I guess..." "You remember the big bands? Well, there's this group..."

When Chicago came to Los Angeles as the Chicago Transit Authority, the adjectives remained. However, they were becoming fewer in number and more succinct. "Jazz-rock..." "Rock-jazz..." "Big band influence..." "Highly refined arrangements..."

Today, that band is Chicago. Period. Mention the name and the responses are predictable. All the former descriptive associations connect simultaneously, giving rise to the aura that is Chicago, rather than the words that merely attempt to represent the band and its music.

Indeed, those who attempt to describe Chicago are in many ways doomed to folly. The influences are there, of course. There is the admiration for jazz, for brass, for the classics, and for rock and roll. However, to call this jazz-rock is missing the point. These influences are admired and utilized in the creative development that is the nature of all music.

Chicago is an experimental band, both musically and sociologically—experimental in that it is not afraid to make any musical attempt that, although the outcome may be predetermined, will yield a further progression.

Musically, Chicago never rests. Yet, at all times it is street music, composed, executed and tempered by training, knowledge and experience. Chicago seeks to accomplish more than the synthesis of styles. Rather, the band fuses its influences together into a symbiotic relationship.

Chicago is also experimental as a creative unit of individuals. Yet, that experiment is now a reality. There is a fraternal spirit to this band that returns the word "group" to the connotations of its original meaning. While the musicians are united in a common goal, each man is a complete individual. No one, for example, would be so presumptuous as to speak for another member of the group or even for Chicago as a whole.

Historically, as well as musically, Chicago was born in the city of the same name. Art often tends to be influenced by its environment. In Chicago's case, that effect is one of sophisticated urbanization meeting the natural common essence of Middle America. This factor is evident in their music. No matter what the roots of each individual musician may have been, the artistry transcended the basics to encompass a catholic approach to music. The backgrounds of each of the seven members of Chicago has influenced all the others, creating a rare musical interaction. Jim Pankow, for example, was schooled in the classics, then developed an interest in jazz that led him to the big bands and finally, through experience, to rock. Terry Kath, on the other hand, has broadened his rock beginnings to include the classical influences fostered by Pankow. Robert Lamm brought with him the grandeur and grace that he developed when he started singing in a church choir. Trumpet player Lee Loughnane once played country-western music in an Irish Show Band and has since contributed a feeling of simplicity to the group. Walt Parazider studied jazz and classical clarinet before learning that Chicago could provide him more freedom than could be obtained within the rigidity of a symphony orchestra. Bass player-vocalist Peter Cetera also began in rock and has since expanded his musical horizons after becoming a part of Chicago. Drummer Danny Seraphine studied music on a formal basis while playing in rock bands and listening closely to jazz. This is a band that is unique in that each musician has found a way to creatively employ every experience in life and express it.

As the band developed in Chicago under the name of the Big Thing, the group realized that continued progression would not be possible in Chicago. Because of the environment at the time, people in clubs and at dances were not receptive to the group's efforts to broaden musical horizons. In effect, the act was nearing a dead end in the city of their origin.

"As our style began to change," recalls Walt Parazider (woodwinds) "it became evident that we would have to come to Los Angeles."

James William Guercio, the record producer who had created the conditions that made the Big Thing possible, also was aware that in order for Chicago's potential to be fulfilled, it would be greatly benefited by the sheer activity present within the Los Angeles music scene.

Guercio brought the group out west, changed their name to Chicago Transit Authority, moved them into a small house in Hollywood, and told them to worry only about their music and nothing else.

As they were inspired by other musicians, they began to inspire each other. Rehearsing every day, Chicago began making increasingly frequent visits to small clubs. They would unleash their new music upon unsuspecting yet appreciative audiences. Chicago became a local phenomenon that since has gained them an international prominence on all levels of music and performance.

In fact, Chicago is now the biggest American act on the international market. According to Guercio, "Chicago has made this commitment—the best vocabulary between cultures is music." The band initially played Europe when it wasn't financially lucrative to do so, and without a hit record there. But they gave up potential money that they could have made in America, with the result now being that Chicago's next European tour is sold out in advance.

Chicago also exists as a medium that allows its members freedom and individual growth. Bass player Peter Cetera, for example, was the final addition to the band. At first, he was a little uneasy and his contributions consisted of playing his instrument, which was a major addition in itself. But Pete was given the opportunity and the impetus to grow musically to the point where he is now writing and helping to arrange several songs for the group.

Most importantly, Chicago is an idea that continues to work. Serving as an umbrella for seven highly accomplished musicians with differing musical tastes, Chicago as a unit, an entity, has brought these resources together within the contextual framework of growth through freedom. Chicago, in all its forms, works not only for the musicians, but for the audience. Between the two stands a mutual mirror, reflecting the band and its listeners. The result is discovery—the reward of creativity.

Friday Night: Dr. Watson And Sherlock Holmes

"The Woman in Green," the first movie in the Lane Film Society Series entitled Sherlock Holmes Classics, will be shown tonight, Friday, Oct. 13, at 8:00 p.m., in Marsh Life Sciences Building at 8:00 p.m. Tickets, $1 each, may be purchased in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, or at the door. Reservations may be made by telephoning 656-3418.

Season tickets for the six films in the Sherlock Holmes Classics series are also available at $5 each. Starting in "The Woman in Green" are Basil Rathbone as Sherlock Holmes, Nigel Bruce as Dr. Watson, Henry Daniell as Professor Moriarty, and Matthew Boulton as the Inspector.

The screenplay, based on the characters created by the late Arthur Conan Doyle, and also incidentally on Doyle's The Adventure of the Empty House, was written by Bertram Millhauser, with direction by Roy William Neill. Running time is 68 minutes.

The remaining films in the Sherlock Holmes Classics series include: "Sherlock Holmes and the Secret Weapon," Oct. 20; "The House of Fear," Nov. 3; "The Pearl of Death," Nov. 10; "Sherlock Holmes and the Spider Woman," Nov. 17; and "The Scarlet Claw," Dec. 1.

Beginning October 14th, The Robert Hall Filmings Museum will be closed on Saturdays, except for special occasions which will be announced when they occur.

Monkey Business was the Marxes' first movie in Hollywood and it shows. There were their pre-Thalberg MGM days, and with the restraining hand of Broadway lifted, any pretense to plot likewise disappears, and total chaos obligingly steps in. We begin to get a whiff of all this when Groucho, Chico and Harpo are billed as Groucho, Chico and Harpo.

However, this is all fine by me. Their systematic destruction of an ocean voyage (for which a bunch of pickled herring barrels pick up the tab), and later a rich bootlegger's mansion, is much too absorbing and natural for us to have time to ask questions we shouldn't ask, such as "Why?"

One critic (a very bad one, by the way, but so's your old man) notes the particularly unsympathetic tone of Monkey Business. Well, I don't know. Yes, the humor is more rigorously physical and yes, the Marxes less discriminating in their targets (many fans feel betrayed when the brothers are careless enough to bumble into the realm of the innocent and sacred common man) but I don't know. metastatically, though the lyrics were mostly non-descript. A band would be a big asset for Cooper. Drama, keyboards and some soft lead guitar would lead his songs the embellishment now only implied by acoustic guitar and bass and would make the performance of them seem more complete.

After a very prolonged period of reworking, Blood, Sweat and Tears has at last stabilized itself into a ten-man band within which is a fortune of technical proficiency and versatility. Although the new lead singer is weak and limited in nearly every way, he can't detract much from the instrumental work which is much looser than in the group's previous configuration. When they get cooking, the music burns fiercely, but when they don't, it's almost completely lacking in spontaneity.

The most serious fault is that the group relies too heavily on the horn section to do most of the solos; lead passages of electric guitar or electric piano would have canceled out a feeling of sameness that hampered most of the act.

Not surprisingly then, the highlight was an extended instrumental featuring drum, piano and guitar solos as well as some spirited horn interaction. It was a piece that, in greater proportion than any other single performance, consistently matched skill and sensitivity.

Chico and Harpo are still doing Variations on a Theme, but that theme admits of a hell of a lot of permutations without going sour. When an officer settles himself in a chair in the barber shop which stowaways Chico and Harpo have taken over, Harpo ties him down with the apron and Chico peers down his throat. "Atta fine," says he. "We take a little time." Harpo sharpens the blade on a piece of wood, and they promptly set to his mustache, clipping one side and then the other, evening them up and completely demolish it. "I think you give him one snoop-a too much," decides Chico. Cut.

You see, I don't think this incoherent moment-to-moment stuff is at all bad (in fact I am modeling all my reviews after it...). It is one of those happy but probably totally unintended results of an indeterminate cause and effect relationship between comedian and camera. (Well, all the jokes can't be good.) The plotless essence of the whole is seen as inevitable when bounced off the innate completeness of each Moment: when Groucho pauses to give

Chico a geography lesson, the focus is not on the lull but the lesson, and in and of itself it makes perfect sense. Each time the camera focuses on one of the brothers we learn to expect a beginning and an end, and we get them. To say nothing of the ends which are not ends as, again, with Harpo and the frog. The motion of chasing the children from the fountain and inviting the frog into his hat describes an almost circle: it is enough in itself. Later when we find that he still has this crazy frog our delight consists of more than the immediate layer we have learned to expect. Beautiful.

I will leave you in peace with At the Circus. It is a later MGM film, and its difference with these earlier Paramount films is pretty marked in a lot of ways: for better or for worse is for those who are less biased to decide (though I suppose I could dig up a few thoughts on the subject if I really tried...). At any rate, I SHALL RETURN with A Night at the Opera. Lucky you. But as Chico would say, "It's better to have lost and lost than never to have lost at all."

PURPOSE...

Statement of Purpose:

The University of Vermont should be an institution existing to serve the needs of both students and the community. It should be a liberating force through which students may realize their true creative potentials and through which the community can draw vital resources needed to build a humane society for all of its members. Therefore:

- 1.) We want to establish student-faculty-worker control over UVM.
- 2.) We demand the right to know the policies by which the University is administered and their immediate and future ramifications upon the UVM and Burlington communities.
- 3.) We demand the end to all campus complicity in the war in S.E. Asia.
- 4.) We demand an increase in the minority enrollment proportionate to the national population.
- 5.) We advocate more relevant minority studies programs open to all students.
- 6.) We demand equal treatment for women in the University community.
- 7.) We support efforts by non-academic employees in obtaining reasonable working conditions and benefits from the University.
- 8.) We deplore the monopoly of the University store over school supplies, and thus, actively encourage and support all efforts aimed at creating a student co-operative which would give real monetary relief to the entire University community. We also deplore the monopoly of campus dining facilities and therefore call for an end to the coupling of housing and meal contracts.
- 9.) We support efforts designed to lower in-state tuition and give aid to out-of-state students.

Vermont is being exploited by huge out-of-state corporations who take "all their profits from the poor Vermonters." His advocated heavy taxing of large corporations and heavy polluters. Mahan concluded by urging everyone to join him in striving to end the Vietnam War.

The last candidate to speak was Martha Abbot, who feels that the legislature is unrepresentative of the interests of Vermont, as under 15-20% of the legislators are women and many of them are retired men over 65.

RETURN with A Night at the Opera. Lucky you. But as Chico would say, "It's better to have lost and lost than never to have lost at all."

QUESTION: Enclosed is an ad from a magazine that suggests that a woman can increase her bustline three to five inches. It is based on an exerciser. Please comment. Does it work?

ANSWER: The ad is for the Mark Eden Developer and Bustline Contouring Course. It shows the usual before and after pictures — women increasing their bust from 34 or 35 inches to 39 or 40 inches in just eight weeks. Indeed, the pictures look impressive. But closer examination revealed that all the women in the "before" pictures had very poor posture and since they were fully clothed it was impossible to tell what kind of supporting bra they were wearing. The "after" pictures, in addition to demonstrating better posture, also have the women wearing bikini bathing suits with a top that looks like it gives considerable uplift.

Seizing upon the opportunity to do a quick experiment, I whipped out my tape measure and rounded up a few volunteers. I had them simulate the poor posture illustrated in the magazine ad and measured them. I then had them stand properly and remeasured them. All subjects increased their bustline by at least two inches, including myself and another man who volunteered for the experiment. The women in the ad were very well endowed to begin with and I am sure that an uplift bra would account for another inch or two. There is little doubt that exercise resulting in better posture and increased strength of certain muscles in the chest can maximize a bustline, but it cannot make the breast itself any larger. I think that you would be perfectly safe to follow the recommendations in the ad, but I doubt that you have to spend $9.95 for an exerciser to find out what to do. Check with the people in the physical education department of your school.

QUESTION: After my boyfriend and I have sexual intercourse, he always feels like all his insides have moved up toward his chest and his stomach is empty. He has a great deal of pain and says that everything just tightens up. Is this normal and what can be done to prevent it?

ANSWER: Some people have a very strong reaction to orgasm which includes intense abdominal sensations. Most likely this is what your boyfriend has and the best advice would be for him to lie still following orgasm; in particular he shouldn't stand on his head. If the problem is very severe, medication to decrease gastrointestinal spasms might help. By the way, is it better or worse on an empty stomach?

QUESTION: I was told by a doctor that hiccups on the breast can lead to breast cancer. Do you know if there is any truth in that or is he just trying to spoil part of my fun?

ANSWER: Hiccups, for the uninformed, are bruises produced by the application of strong suction to a small area of skin resulting in blood leaking out of superficial capillaries. Some people use the term to refer to similar small bruises that result from bites. The term is almost always confined to bruises produced in the course of lovemaking or other affectionate play. Occasionally, a small child might be seen with a hiccup-like lesion resulting from placing a suction cup dart on his forehead. The idea of hiccups causing breast cancer sounds preposterous and I imagine that the physician you saw was either jealous or kidding you and you didn't realize it.

Biting and nibbling, in addition to other forms of oral stimulation during sex play, are found in quite a few mammals other than humans. A possible biologic explanation for the pleasurable sensations of oral activity in a sexual context is suggested by the fact that parts of the brain responding to oral and genital sensations are located next to each other and stimulation of the oral areas results in excitation of the genital areas.

QUESTION: Prior to sexual intercourse, primarily during foreplay, my stomach grows unusually loud and quite frequently, about once every ten seconds. This has occurred with all my sexual partners and a few have commented about it. During intercourse it ceases to grow, but afterwards, usually around the time I have intercourse again, the growing resumes. Is this normal? What causes it? (This letter was written by a man).

ANSWER: Changes in gastrointestinal activity during sexual excitement are normal. I'm unable to tell from your letter whether you are complaining or whether you are boasting. If the latter is in the nature of a complaint, you might try having something to eat before you have sexual intercourse.

QUESTION: Can you tell me how long Dexedrine remains in one's system? I read somewhere that it stays in the body for up to three weeks. Is there any difference whether it is Dexedrine or Dextroamphetamine as to the extent of time remaining in the blood stream?

ANSWER: Dexedrine and Dextroamphetamine are trade names for two types of amphetamine drugs. They differ from each other in terms of chemical configuration and Dexedrine usually has more central nervous system activity and is used more commonly. Methamphetamine, the original precursor of the nickname "speed" is another member of the family of even greater central nervous system effects.

Amphetamines are immediately absorbed from the blood stream into body tissues and can be found by testing the urine, not the blood. Excretion of these drugs is dependent upon the state of kidney function and acidity of the urine. The more acid the urine the more rapidly they are excreted. However, they remain on board for quite a long time. Trace amounts can certainly be found at least a week after the drug is stopped. From a practical point of view, this means that a psychosis induced by amphetamine is apt to persist for at least three to seven days following the last dose of drugs.

These drugs are widely prescribed for weight reduction and abused because of their transient mood elevating qualities and their ability to alleviate fatigue. In none of these situations are the benefits more than very temporary and often they are illusory. In fact, a recent study showed rather clearly that amphetamine usage for more than a week resulted in depression for many people. The drugs have a high habituation potential. They are useful in two rather rare medical conditions: narcolepsy (uncontrollable sleeping spells) and the treatment of the hyperkinetic child.

Undefeated Cross Country Team Wins 39-17

The Undefeated UVM cross country team, following their impressive 17-39 win over Connecticut last Saturday, moved to Middlebury this Wednesday (Oct. 11) for the annual State Meet with Middlebury, St. Michael's and Norwich. Vermont is the defending champion.

Following the state meet, Bill Nedde's harriers will move to Williamstown Mass. and a tri-met with rugged Williams College and RPI, Oct. 18. Vermont is a 4-0 in dual competition.

The Yankee Conference Championships, scheduled for the University of Maine, are set for Oct. 28.

Vermont's success this year can be attributed to a blend of youth and a senior skier who joined the fall cross country program for the first time this year. The senior is Hank Pfiffner of Kingfield, Me., who is a standout cross country performer for the Catamounts ski team, one of the top in the East. Pfiffner has consistently been in the top five all year, and he still hasn't reached his peak this fall.

Other top performers include sophomore Mike Berry (Burlington) and freshmen Stan Dunklee (Brattleboro), Bob Graves (East Greenwich, R.I.), Russell Jedicke (Greenwich, Conn.) and David Pliska (Framingham, Mass.). One of the most improved runners on the squad, and ready to make his move into the top five, is senior captain Mark "Rex" Gravel (Burlington). "Gravel is currently running the best mile times of his career," said Nedde. "This club is far ahead of any pace set the last four or five years, and we hope to peak by the time the Yankee Conference Championships roll around later this month."

UMass Scalps UVM 33-14

In a cold rain soaked Centennial Field, the University of Vermont Catamounts were scalped by the Redmen of U. Mass., 33-14. Although the score really seems like U. Mass. walked all over us, in reality the statistics show that the game was rather close in everything except penalties. Vermont had 174 yards where UMass had only 61 yards.

After Paul Metallo received a concussion in the first quarter and was laid out for the rest of the game, the officials became very nit-picky and made many calls that might in other games would not have been mentioned.

The rain also affected the Cats. Quarterback Earl Olson was intercepted twice and when Vermont could ill afford them. On the beneficial side, the rain also hampered the Redmen's running game.

The first score for UMass was set up with Metallo completing a pass to Tim Harris on the 2. On the next play Metallo went over for the score. Falso kicked the point after and the score stood 7-0. UVM rallied in the second quarter. Fired up by the loss of UMass' ace Metallo, Wayne Balmain blocked the punt of Andy Dukhanof. The ball dribbled into the endzone where Rich Rostovsky pounced on the ball for UVM's first TD.

The Redmen's Steve Schubert, brought the ball from their own 27 to UVM's 15, in the kickoff after the Vermont score. The UVM line held UMass to just one yard in the next three plays so Falso kicked his first field goal of the game and the score was 10-7.

After the UMass kickoff, Vermont moved the ball to the Redmen's 27, on a pass to Billy Looker which was good for 24 yards. Olson then completed a pass to Tony Jones on the 13. After overthrowing a pass to Looker, Olson handed off to Steve Coon, who plunged to the nine. On the next play, Olson found Tim Sullivan open in the endzone for Vermont's second and final score.

At the half UVM was leading 14-10. This was the first time UVM had ever been ahead of the Redmen since the 1950 game. The kickoff for the second half was marred by a clipping penalty which gave UMass the ball on the UVM 32. Quarterback Paul Pennington, with his quick maneuvers brought the ball up to the 17. A pass to Bill Hanlan put the ball on the seven and a pass to Schubert in the endzone made the score 17-14, after Falso's kick.

UVM's Steve Coon took the kickoff to the 36. Vermont held the ball for five plays until an Olson pass, was intercepted by Dennis Kierman and returned to the fifty.

A personal foul on UVM gave Mass. the ball on UVM's 35. Pennington connected with Schubert two plays later to make the score 23-14; the attempt after failed.

With some hard hitting by the UVM offense, the Cat's were able to move the ball down to the UMass 34, but an interception by Earl Brown of an Olson pass to Leber quelled that threat.

UMass put points on the score board twice after UVM lost the ball. The first came on a field goal from the 35, and a five yard pass from Pennington to Mike sealed the fate of the Catamounts.

Women's Soccer Loses Opener

For the first time this year, UVM women have a varsity soccer team. The team is coached by Miss Jennifer Oakes, a 1972 graduate of UVM, who is teaching physical education in Williston. Jake Kingsley, team co-captain with Chris Morgan, is assisting Miss Oakes.

After practicing for two weeks, UVM played Castleton, October 3rd, to a 0-0 tie in double overtime. All twenty-four members of the squad participated in the game. During the final minute of the first overtime, it appeared that UVM had finally scored. Unfortunately the score was nullified as UVM was called off-sides.

Odd defensive playing by halfbacks Chris Morgan and Julie Flanagan plus two saves by goalie Jake Kingsley and three more saves by freshman, Liz Leopold helped UVM keep Castleton scoreless. UVM's mainstays offensively included: second half, Ann Quantic, and Carol Shostack.

With freshmen comprising one-third of the squad, UVM women's soccer can look forward to a bright future. In the more immediate future, UVM plays a rematch at Castleton on October 11. Their next home game is October 13 at Southwick Field against Johnson.

Fidd Hockey Ties, 2-2

Green Mountain tied UVM 2-2 in field hockey October 5th. According to UVM's coach, Marilyn Chase, Vermont could have won but "we missed out on several opportunities to score which Green Mt. capitalized upon."

Green Mt. dominated the first half while Vermont appeared off their stride and their tempo of play was considerably slower than normal during the first half. Miss Corral scored both Green Mt. goals in the first half. Vermont's goalie Val Gardner made one save and Green Mt.'s goalie Rankin made three saves.

Early in the second half UVM attempted two goals, both of which were blocked by Green Mt.'s goalie, Rankin. UVM finally came to life in the last eight minutes of the game. Marty Fain scored Vermont's first goal with seven minutes left to play. Donna Gibson, right halfback, made the tying goal on a dangerous kicking call against Green Mt.'s goalie.

Their record stands at a commendable 3-0-1. Marty Fain leads Vermont scores with seven goals.

For the fourth straight time this season, the Catamounts have come out on the short end. On a beautiful, sunny day at Post Field, UVM was upset by the upstart Cadets from Norwich by a score of 3-1. Even worse than losing their fourth in a row was knowing that Norwich hadn't beaten Vermont in soccer since 1964.

Using a devastating short passing game, the Cadets methodically devoured the Cats. An interesting aspect, however, was the fact that UVM had an edge in shots on goal, 33-15. Most of Vermont's shots were wasted while Norwich took full advantage of their few rushes into the Catamount's zone.

Norwich was paced by goalie George McMillan and forward Don Rivard. McMillan had 19 saves including a penalty shot stop by Knute Gulbrandson. He proved particularly hard to crack late in the second half when UVM was pressing. Rivard, who was in on all 3 Norwich goals, played an outstanding all-around game. UVM took the early lead when Pete Breen placed a shot in the right corner of the net at the two minute mark. It was all down-hill from there, although the first half ended 1-0 in favor of the Cats.

At the 44 second mark of the second half, Don Tibbets scored the second goal for Norwich. Twenty minutes later the Cadets took the lead for good with Rivard scoring, assisted by Tibbets.

So, what started out as a promising season for the defending co-champ Catamount booters has turned into a frantic attempt to salvage some mid-season respectability.

The New UVM Ambulance, Operated by

New Rescue

Have you heard the sound of a siren around campus this year and looked up to see a large U-Haul shaped yellow and white ambulance? This is the UVM Rescue Squad, a group of thirty plus volunteers who are on duty around the clock to administer emergency medical treatment and transport the injured to the infirmary.

The idea started last October in the OVP office. But it has been implemented totally by the volunteers, notably Jack Schmidt. In June, the Board of Trustees okayed an addition to the health fee of one dollar for three semesters, this covers the cost of the ambulance and equipment. Operation costs are paid by the Student Association.

All of the volunteers have taken or are currently enrolled in a seventy-hour professional rescue personnel course. They are trained mainly for emergency medical treatment. Most of the 33 volunteers are pre-med or physical therapy majors, however there is a good cross-section of interests. Half of the volunteers are girls. The volunteers work at least twelve hours a week, and some as many as twenty hours.

The center of operation is one room at the back of Wason Infirmary. It has four bunks, a two-way radio, telephone, and other equipment. It is not exactly luxury living for the shifts of people who stay there around the clock. The night shifts put in one complete night (12 hours) a week and every fifth week a complete weekend. The day shifts have varied hours to accommodate going to classes. Right now, the Rescue Squad "covers" just UVM property and students living off campus within a five mile radius. Soon, when a hospital room is installed, the squad will serve as a backup rescue team for the Burlington area.

SA Senate Recognizes Committee Against The War

by Dan Haelem

The sixth regular meeting of the Student Association Senate met for the first time in the Billings Center Apts. Senators were instructed to sit in chairs placed upon the carpet to distinguish the voting personnel present.

Perhaps most outstanding in the Senate proceedings Tuesday night was the recognition of The Committee Against The War after two weeks of intensive questioning and debate within the S.A. The three other organizations requesting S.A. recognition, the Sailing Club, Female Students Centennial Organization, Photographic Interaction Group, also succeeded in their bid.

Other matters of student interest discussed were the cost of concert tickets to students (particularly for the Chicago concert) and the selection process by which concert artists are chosen. It was explained that Chicago charges a fee of $15,000, plus a percentage of the proceeds in order to perform, thus necessitating a $5.00 admission charge for advance student sales and a $6.00 general admission charge. The selection of the performing artists was explained as consisting of a choice between what is available and what is then affordable.

New business to be brought to the S.A. on October 24 is heavy. Besides two motions previously tabled concerning the Financial Policy of the S.A. and the possession of marijuana, there will be six other bills to be acted upon. The Women's Centennial will present a detailed financial report of their expenses. An investigation of the financial policies of the UVM Bookstore, particularly of their profits, is proposed. Support for the repeal of anti-abortion laws and the selection of student representatives to the Faculty Senate will also be discussed. In addition, two anti-war proposals will come before the Senate, an endorsement of

Tom Salmon Supports McGovern, Calls For Changes In Taxation, Welfare

by Jeff Yeager

QUESTION: Are you supporting George McGovern for President?

ANSWER: I am.

Q: Do you give him unconditional support, or do you support most of his ideas. Do you disagree with him on any issues?

A: I voted for Senator McGovern for President as a McGovern delegate to the convention; as a matter of fact I voted for him in 1968 at Chicago. I support his candidacy, he is our national leader. I have run, from a point in time before my announcement of candidacy, an independently oriented campaign, predicated on Vermont issues. But I support Senator McGovern without qualification over the prospect of four more years of President Nixon.

Q: Is Senator McGovern receiving a large degree of support among Vermont Democrats?

A: I would say their support is mixed. He is certainly receiving enthusiastic support among the more liberal elements in the Vermont Democratic Party; there is some negative reaction among the more conservative elements. I have seen evidence particularly in the last week, or so, among some of the more conservative elements who originally stated they would not vote for Senator McGovern starting to come back. I think this trend will continue.

Q: You have been in the Legislature for several years now. If you are elected Governor you will automatically be on the Board of Trustees of the University of Vermont. In an ex officio capacity, you will also have to grapple with appropriations by the Legislature for UVM. If you are elected, what kind of posture would your administration take toward the University of Vermont as a state-affiliated institution of higher learning?

A: My posture would be that of understanding this is the largest center of higher education in Vermont. Its existence is that primarily that of a state University dedicated to provide higher education to Vermonters. Implicit in that philosophy is that we must hold the line in terms of in-state tuition, and the notion that we should expand the Board of Trustees, on which I would serve ex-officio, by including at least one student member with full voting rights, as opposed to the ex officio arrangement that has been initiated in the past. I was one of the nominators of Kenneth Parker, a former President of the UVM Student Association, when he ran unsuccessfully for a Trustee of the University during the elections in the General Assembly. Although he lost, he made a very credible showing—the first non-legislative type of person who came even close to being elected to this group.

Q: There has been a noticeable influx of people and businesses into Vermont during the past few years. This represents a paradoxical problem, in that more people and more business mean more money and more jobs. Yet, it also has the potential of depleting the environment. Gradually we can see the Burlington "metropolitan area." If you would like to call it that, expanding out into Chittenden County. A lot of very scenic rural areas surrounding Burlington are now starting to disappear. We've got the "huggerbush" just a short distance away. How would you approach this issue of environmental protection while trying to promote progress?

A: The first thing would be to make a statement, like I have been saying, that we must make an absolute commitment to preserve the essential pastoral quality that is Vermont's. We must make a commitment to take initiatives at the level of state government, and control the type of growth, the scatter-gun type of growth that we have experienced in the state in recent years. A commitment to take steps through government, specifically through a tax program which I have outlined, to slow down the rate of speculative land sales, and the sale of land in general here in the State of Vermont, to give us sufficient running room to make the tough value judgements that we'll ignore over the long run, to the benefit over the long run, to the benefit of the detriment of Vermonters.

Q: You just touched upon the subject of taxes. Vermont has one of the highest tax burdens per capita in the United States. If you were elected, would you recommend any basic changes in the tax structure?

A: To be very specific, I would make substantial reforms in the area of local property taxes—the tax on a man's home, specifically. Under my program, no household in Vermont would be required to pay more than 5% of its income from all sources, on the local property tax, namely the tax on basic housing up to two acres of land. Specifically, an elderly couple, living in Burlington, who own their home and have $5,000 in income from all sources, including Social Security pension, interest, dividends; the maximum tax they would be required to pay would be $250.00 a year. If their taxes are consistent with the average tax in Vermont on a $20,000 home, their present level of taxation would be $682.00 a year. Very substantial benefits would accrue to a wide number of economic interests in Vermont, particularly the young couple and the citizen on a fixed income, but more broadly, to average people in Vermont who may earn $7,000, $8,000, even $12,000 a year. They would also share

VPIRG Examines Effects Of Ski Areas In Mad River Valley

by Jeff Ewen

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group released, on October 10, a report entitled "Downhill in Vermont: The Effects of the Ski Industry and Land Development on Warren, Vermont." The study, following several months of detailed research, examined the effects of a major ski area development on the town of Warren, in the Mad River Valley.

A prime argument over the years for recreational developments in the state has been an economic one. Proponents of ski industry expansion maintain that the developments are an economic bonanza for local residents. In the report, VPIRG has seriously challenged this assumption. The study's conclusions are that the ski areas provide little in the way of economic benefit to local citizens, and that the advantages of such development are enjoyed primarily by out-of-staters.

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group study recommended that the state adopt a policy of "discouraging recreational and vacation home development," maintaining that "such development does not generate substantial

Waller, Steffenhagen Release Answers To Marijuana Survey

Dr. Julian Waller, of the Department of Community Medicine, and Dr. Ronald Steffenhagen, of the Department of Sociology, wish to thank all the freshman and transfer students who filled out the anonymous questionnaire on marijuana and driving this past month. The results of their questions are being analyzed—a task that unhappily will take at least a couple of months—but they are trying to get back the answers to student's questions now. They didn't realize what a Pandora's box they were opening as there were so many questions (and a number of statements) that can't all be answered in the space allotted. However, they have tried to answer the most important ones and the ones that were asked most often.

Q: What is the purpose of this study?
A: Despite comments both ways there have not been adequate studies to determine whether smoking grass is associated with highway crashes or not. It is the purpose of this study to find out. It is known that some people use alcohol together with marijuana. If the marijuana users do turn out to have crashes while high (and it is not known if they will or not), it is necessary to find out whether this is because of the marijuana or the alcohol. That's why the questions about alcohol were asked. No one is seeing the individual questionnaires other than the research group. The final conclusions of the study, of course, will be available, and will be reported in the "Cynic."

Q: Can people really count on to be honest?
A: Based on previous experience and the answers seen in this questionnaire one could say 95% yes.

Q: Does marijuana affect the nervous system the same way as alcohol?
A: Alcohol is a depressant which reduces vision and hearing, slows reaction time, alters judgment so that people take unnecessary risks, and affects coordination. Marijuana on the other hand is not a depressant. Some evidence suggests that it causes "drowsiness" but not attention, but it does not appear to bring about an increase in risk-taking behavior.

Q: What are the short-term and long-term effects of marijuana? Can it damage the brain?
A: The short term and long term effects of marijuana depend at least in part on the emotional stability of the individual. In an otherwise emotionally stable person there does not appear to be any evidence that occasional use of marijuana would have harmful effects. However, some people report—as a number of students did—that one of the acute effects of marijuana is to make them feel a bit paranoid. Apparently this does not bother some people, but it is upsetting to others.

Persons who do have emotional problems may have worsening of these problems when using marijuana. The drug, by the way, is not physiologically addictive in any way; however, it can produce psychological dependency. Frankly, there is not much information about the effects of heavy use of marijuana since in many cases the heaviest users are persons who also have emotional problems and who also use other drugs. It becomes hard to figure out if either heavy use or the other drugs or the underlying emotional problems, or all three, cause the personality deterioration that is observed.

No accurate data exist on the long range effects of marijuana. However, there is some reason to suggest that abuse (as opposed to occasional use) of marijuana is dangerous and brings about fuzzy headedness and loss of motivation. In India there is a marijuana skid row which is the equivalent of the alcoholic skid row in this country. This fact is not commonly known either by those who say it is harmless or by those who feel it's a tool of the devil.

Q: Can marijuana affect how babies will turn out later?
A: Regarding the effect of child bearing, there is no evidence so far to indicate that marijuana

Newman Center Sponsors Lively Debate Between Democrats, GOP And Liberty Union

by Barbara Frankel

A "Political Evening at the Newman Center," featuring representatives of the Democratic, Republican and Liberty Union parties, provided many debates, arguments and even insults.

The debate, held on Sunday, October 15 at 7:30 pm, was sponsored by the Newman Center in order to give UVM students and all others interested a chance to hear the views of the three major parties in Vermont, as expressed by party leaders.

Professor Jerry Carr, acting as moderator, stated that each party would begin with a three minute opening statement. After drawing lots to see who would speak first, Scott McKay and Bill Klein, speaking on behalf of Senator McGovern, began by citing McGovern's virtues as "the people's candidate who is in no one's back pocket" and by saying "This year we have a real choice." Republicans Tom Cate and Karl Rowe used their opening statements to basically claim that President Nixon "has taken decisive action on foreign and domestic issues." To support this argument, they cited such examples as the eighteen year old vote, the gradual withdrawal from Viet Nam since 1968 and President Nixon's actions in support of Liberty Union representative David Mahan and Bernard Sanders asserted the country needs an alternative to the two-party system—both the Democratic and Republican parties are basically the same because they are supported largely by big corporations.

The opening statements were followed by a question and answer period between the candidates, which tended to be about Nixon's actions for the environment, read an excerpt from a speech by Sen. McGovern stating, "Richard Nixon has talked alot about the environment, but he had done precious little to change it." Rowe replied by calling the statements made by the Democrats, "a bunch of unsubstantiated charges." He continued by attacking Sen. McGovern and the previous Democratic administrations for their lack of action in this subject.

Sanders, who is the Liberty Union candidate for governor, attacked the Republicans on this administration's continued support of "a corrupt military dictatorship" and on the spanking of children and innocent bystanders. Rowe counteracted by arguing that "We are not in Viet Nam to support a corrupt dictatorship but to preserve democracy." He cited Pres. Nixon's five point peace plan, which includes asking for the resignation of President Thieu and the holding of free elections in South Viet Nam.

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Student Potters Sell Their Wares

Student Potters will be offering their hand made wares to the public today and tomorrow at Billings Center. The sale, which takes place in the North Student Lounge, features a variety of functional pottery. In addition to the usual bowls, plates, and cups there shall be many interesting planters and covered jars to decorate a room or serve as a Christmas gift. All work has been donated so that the proceeds can go towards a new kiln for the expanded pottery department. This provides a chance to help the shop and save money on the low prices on student war.

Problems Of Financing Advanced Technology

Dr. K.M. Gardiner, Staff Engineer, IBM Burlington, Vt., Thursday Oct. 19th, 1972 at 4 pm 231 Votey Building. In this lecture, Dr. Gardiner will examine in some detail the pressures on the Rolls-Royce Aero Engine Division which led to its abortive contract with Lockheed. The technical background ensuing bankruptcy and near bankruptcies will be discussed. The problems of future financing will be explored, particularly in relation to concerns such as SST, 747, space shuttle, and transportation. Dr. Gardiner received his Ph.D. in Metallurgy from the University of Manchester, England in 1957. Thereafter, he worked for the English Electric Company and for five years in the Rolls-Royce Aero Engine Division. During this period he also attended the Derby College of Technology, London University, on a part-time basis. Dr. Gardiner joined IBM (United Kingdom Limited) in early 1966 and was transferred to the Components Division in Burlington in April 1968. He is the first vice-chairman of the Green Mountain Chapter of the Society of Manufacturing Engineers and a certified Manufacturing Engineer.

David Mahan agreed with the Democrats but went a little bit further by declaring the need for a voucher system giving each student a sum of money to spend on his education as he wishes. Rowe cited figures in an attempt to prove that Nixon has done a great deal for education. When asked why the President had vetoed two bills which supported increased funds for education, the Republicans replied that "the bills were inflationary."

At this point, Case again interrupted in order to introduce a proposal for a new amendment to the constitution. When asked what distinguished the Liberty Union Party from the Democratic Party, Sanders replied, "While we support McGovern more than anyone else, the time for reform is over. We need a takeover and redistribution of the wealth."

Each party was given a three minute period to make their closing statements. McKay continued to discuss the alleged corruption of the Nixon administration while Rowe continued to discuss the alleged corruption and indecisiveness of Sen. McGovern. The Liberty Union Party added to the event by speaking of the "deceit and lack of credibility of both major candidates."

Recreational Development Presents Disadvantages . .

Also urged was a greater emphasis on the part of Vermont towns, on rational town planning. VPIRG believes that local citizens and government officials should become more aware of the possible disadvantages of large-scale recreational development, not the least of which is the possible loss of control of a town by its residents.

Warren, a town with almost 400 year-round residents, is the site of the Sugarbush Ski Area, which was developed in 1958.

The VPIRG study examines the effects of the ski area's development on the town in terms of employment, population growth, vacation home construction, and land ownership.

The research effort discovered that of the full-time, all-year jobs generated by the ski area and related land developments, 88% are held by people who moved to Warren after the ski area was begun. Only 10 jobs in this category are held by people who were residents of the town prior to 1958 (when the development began.)

VPIRG also found that 43% of the business enterprises in Warren are owned or managed by people who moved into the town after the Sugarbush development began. Only three businesses that have been started since the development began are owned or managed by pre-1958 residents of Warren.

The study found, in regards to population change, that 49% of the year-round residents of Warren have moved there in the last four years, and that 71% of the permanent residents were not living in Warren prior to 1958.

VPIRG discovered that 84%

of the vacation homes in Warren are owned by out-of-staters, and of the 146 new homes built in the town in the last four years, out-of-staters own 88% of them. A survey found that 70% of the out-of-state vacation home owners are either planning to become permanent residents of Warren or are thinking of it. 30% are making definite plans to move into the town on a year-round basis.

The report also pointed out the fact that 70% of the landowners in Warren do not live in the town, and that 57% are non-Vermonters. Out-of-staters own about 39% of the town's land, in the four years since 1968, were the purchasers of 70% of the undeveloped land in Warren. The percentage of non-Vermonters among sellers of undeveloped land in the town over the same time period was 34%. The high percentage of out-of-staters involved in the buying and selling of land indicates a high degree of land speculation by out-of-staters, the report said.

The VPIRG report concluded that the town of Warren has largely been "expropriated" from the original residents for the enjoyment, profit, and use of the expropriators. The study maintained that "the town has been excised from the traditional fabric that once made it part of Vermont," to the economic benefit of those residents who sold their land to developers at high prices, but to the detriment of the majority of the town's population.

VPIRG, which pointed out that a similar situation exists in the Dover-Wilmington area near Mt. Snow, expressed the hope that its research effort would help other towns in Vermont to avoid the situation which now exists in Warren. Employment for the residents of rural Vermont and it causes serious problems for the towns.

Specifically, VPIRG suggested that Vermont discourage the development of any new ski areas in the state. Another recommendation was that the State of Vermont initiate studies on the economic, social, and environmental effect of ski area and related development on rural areas, such as the Mad River Valley. This examination procedure would ultimately be financed by the potential developer under application provisions of Act 250. Vermont's land development control law. New ski areas should be banned, VPIRG maintains, until such studies are made.

The public interest advocate group also recommended that the Vermont legislature enact a statute requiring that 20% of new vacation home units "be available to low income Vermonters at a price they can afford." This would stem the flow of local residents from vacation towns.

VPIRG also advocated a redirection of Vermont's development efforts, toward those types of development that will create meaningful jobs for the existing population of the state.

Mess Near MAT-A Safety Concern

Construction of the Living Learning Center and the Jughandle continues near the Marsh-Austin-Tupper complex. Directly affected everyday from early morning to late afternoon are hundreds of UVM students who walk through this area to attend classes. Directly affected are motorists who must commute to Burlington to earn a living. And also affected are the construction workers who earn their living by these projects.

Lately, the risks to human life, especially students, have increased. As more machines operate, walking space becomes alarmingly limited. At this writing, there is one place where the fence around the Living Learning Center and the road construction nearly meet; this spot at times becomes extremely busy as the earthmovers continue digging.

Any measure that will help in safety is unquestionably vital. A safe walkway, perhaps manned by a law official, needs to be established. Unlike the past hectic days, it should be easily identifiable, wide enough, and permanent. Also, students should avoid the temptation of dashing helter-skelter across the road. A crosswalk with a warning light operates just a few feet below construction, and motorists for the most part have done their part in stopping.

Overriding these important safety considerations are fundamental questions needing answers desperately:

When does building of roads and huge residence halls end here at the University of Vermont? What assurances are there that this will be the last jughandle, the last Living-Learning Center?

In regard to road construction, when will we begin to realize that short-range projects, historically, have proven unsuccessful? When will we begin to realize that even long-term projects, specifically super-highways, no longer can truly combat the influx of automobiles? When will we begin to realize that perhaps this machine, the automobile, that was once glorified as Man's prized possession, a symbol of freedom, may have to become obsolete as a major step to stop pollution of our environmental resources?

Does the answer lie in a national mass-transit system?

These questions, though fundamental, are indeed complex. If nothing else, they should provide a meaningful stimuli for this university's Administration, the body that last spring gave the land away for the present jughandle mess.

Indeed, the tendency is to believe the University of Vermont can somehow remain isolated from basic human concerns in its pursuit for intellectual enlightenment. Though this, in itself, is important, there is a need to learn our emotions when trees and open fields too rapidly become concrete highways and brick buildings.

Return Of The Cynic

Thoughts On Pot, Watergate, Tuition, Trustees, And SA's Ticket Raffle

by Steven C. Rice

"Well, it sure has been a long time!" he exclaimed as we met in the Billings Den.

"Yes, it has. I was beginning to think that we never see each other again. God, you're looking swell!"

"Yes, son. You would think a man my age would be setting his sights on a proper funeral right now. But, not me. I tell you I had one helluva good time these last couple of months..."

The Old Man's eyes radiated. He did look well! He had lost weight; he had a nice tan. His hair had turned silver. He wore an orange suit with a marigold pinned to his jacket...

"Jesus, you should have seen the looks I got when I hitchhiked down South. I swear to God a few cars, seeing the sight of me with my knapsack and sleeping bag, nearly drove off the road..."

"Generally, the people were pretty nice about picking me up. Most of them were young folks just seeing the country like me. None of them seemed to have any kind of destination, or, for that matter, any kind of goal in their lives. Him, who can blame them really?"

He had been in Miami during the Republican Convention, met many protestors against the war, and had witnessed a demonstration seeking legalization of marijuana.

"You know what struck me the most about that group? There was one lady, about my age, along with them. She was damn pretty. Well, she was smoking away one of those marijuana cigarettes. I guess a photographer caught sight of her, because he was taking all kinds of pictures..."

He laughed lightly.

During our conversation, a copy of UVM's newspaper was given to us. The Old Man glanced through it.

"Well, the Doctor's Bag still remains. Must say it makes popular reading," he mused.

"And it sure looks like the trustees are the same old bunch. It seems hard for them to be fair to people. Still, I will think any guy who worked full-time and paid taxes

Environmental Comment

Nixon's Environmental Offering Is For His Political Sake Only

by Gene Beaudoin

By the late 1960's it's been clearly noted that air pollution was no longer just an aesthetic problem. The Council on Environmental Quality (CEQ) noted in its 1970 report that "it is well established that air pollution contributes to the incidence of such chronic diseases as emphysema, bronchitis, and other respiratory ailments. Polluted air is also linked to higher mortality rates from other causes, including cancer and arteriosclerotic heart disease." We have had the Clean Air Acts of 1963, 1965, and 1967 in the sixties. With that in mind it is important to note that nationwide emissions of carbon monoxide (CO), particulate matter, sulfur oxides (SO), hydrocarbons (HC), and nitrogen oxides (NO), which are the five major (or recognized as major) pollutants of the air increased from 272.5 million tons in 1968 to 281.2 million tons in 1969. What laws are on the books sometimes have little to do with what actually occurs.

Often we find that when an issue becomes large enough to become a political one it is commented on by Presidents. What has been the case with the Nixon administration is that what one says and what one does are two different things. (I speak here only from an environmental point of view).

In 1970 President Nixon sent his first environmental message to Congress. In it were strong proposals for national air quality standards. In this message were also proposals for states to start pollution abatement plans. All of these proposals at the time were bold but were riddled with loopholes. As Ralph Nader put it, "One is hard put to imagine a more ineffective measure than President Nixon's. Suffice it to say that the proposal incorporates all the weaknesses and most of the delays that have hamstrung enforcement of the present law...In the journey up the echelons of the Administration, every meaningful provision of the earlier drafts was systematically pruned. Private rights of action to enforce violations of standards, power to subpoena information, and expedited enforcement provisions were only a few of the Nixon proposals that fell unceremoniously to the cutting floor at the White House."

What is a political act? The University and students alike seem to be confused.

The University administration and Board of Trustees speak of "political acts," as if there were a difference in political activity. I have heard students say they were not going to become political (I assume they mean voting, protesting, etc.) because it would do no good, or they didn't want to become a part of the political system.

Obviously there are misconceptions about what political activity means to them. If I would hold that every and all acts are political. When a person votes, or doesn't vote, protests or doesn't protest, he is being political. It is therefore absurd: 1. for the University to talk of political vs. non-political acts, and 2. for students to think that they can avoid political action.

What are some everyday political acts? Do you own a car or a stereo? Isn't owning a car saying that automobiles as a mode of transportation are good, that the depletion of natural resources used to make them, and the air pollution they cause are all good? Isn't owning a stereo produced by one of the manufacturers of the electronic battlefield, used in Indochina, saying that you approve of the genocide being committed by those companies?

Shouldn't you know where a bank invests your money, or what your University does with its land holdings, and what companies and businesses the members of the University Board of Trustees are involved with? All of these things are politically significant and directly affect you. There are no longer any refuges where your actions are entirely personal.

What A Political Act Is

by William Bowman

One part of the story here was that Sen. Muskie, who was Chairman of the sub-committee on Air and Water Pollution, who had previously fought for the cause of the environment had been challenged by President Nixon who claimed to be fighting for the cause while doing an excellent job fighting against it. By the end of the year the battle would have progressed and amendments would be passed to the Clean Air Act which was the responsibility of Sen. Muskie, among others, and Mr. Nixon claimed them as his own to the point that when the ceremony of the signing took place Sen. Muskie was not even invited. A Nixon aide explained that the room in which the ceremony was being held was too small for all 40 sponsors of the bill. One persistent reporter argued that the bill was so much Muskie's that it was even known as the "Muskie Bill", but the aide said, "I don't believe it's been called that in this room."

During the course of the last three years the role of the President has been clear in the battle against air pollution. The administration has effectively tried and succeeded in some cases to weaken all and every aspect of the air pollution bills. This was the case on all the bills even including the sulfur tax bill where the effect was the same. Increased taxes for industries to convert, smaller fines, easier rules to comply with.

In the middle of rising public concern over environmental deterioration, President Nixon proclaimed in his January 1970, state of the Union Message that clean air, clean water, and open spaces ought to be once again the birthright of every American. This served two purposes. It was one of many steps to have the American public have faith in him and more important than that it served the purpose of making the American public believe that there was indeed no problem with the air or the water. It has become very clear by action rather than by speech that the Nixon Administration does not put the environment very high on their list of priorities. On the contrary his Administration has consistently sought to delay the fight against air pollution urging weak legislation and by undermining enforcement of the existing law.

The Crow's Nest

From High Perch Of Billings, A Look At Student Life At UVM

by James Anthony Pietrovito

By way of introduction, this is the first of a series of articles to be written from my high perch in the Billings Center. As a second year student in an M.Ed. program of Higher Education, Student Personnel Services and Counseling, this lofty position of practioner intern in Student Activities lends a unique vantage point for testing out some of my high-minded ideas as a "budding" professional. Thus, I have chosen this column as my sounding board and it will also serve me as a semester project. Potentially, it will serve the general campus community in that I may present some questions, from time to time which will provoke some thought and action pertinent to Student Activities at UVM.

The opinions and ideas expressed in this column are those of the author unless otherwise stated and at no time are they necessarily representative of the University of Vermont, the Office of Director of Student Activities or Ms. Karen Wedge.

Rest assured that I have plenty to crow about already, however, I feel it is only fair to my vast following of readers to set the scene this week before getting into specifics. Future editions of this column will be attempts at a birds-eye-view of what the writer feels to be the main components of Student Activities at UVM. Among these will be Student Association, Inter-Residence Halls Association, Office of Volunteer Programs, Billings Center, Governing Board and others. In each case, I will consider the leaders of the student personnel profession in general, as it is viewed generally by the University of Vermont (that is in the eyes of the Trustees, Administration and Faculty via published materials i.e. The University of Vermont Catalog '72 et al.) as seen by student leaders and participants and finally as seen by myself, objective observers.

Among Student Personnel workers in the United States the basic philosophy of Student Activities set down by Kate Hevner Mueller in her book Student Personnel Work in Higher Education, are fairly widely accepted and often referred to by more recent writers. Generally speaking the broad area of Student Activities as Dr. Mueller sees it is broken down quite clearly. To begin with she feels a Student Personnel Worker in Student Activities needs to know: "1. something about the socialization process; 2. group dynamics; 3. the types of leaders and leadership training; 4. problem resolution; and 5. goal achievement." Armed with this knowledge she goes on stating the goals of a Student Activities program: "1. a favorable continuation of the socialization process of the Complain About SAGA?

Millions Have Nothing

Dear Sir:

The poem which appeared in the October 13 issue of the Cynic entitled "UVM Food - An Incredible Saga" may have been cleverly written, but it also serves the purpose of demonstrating how narrow some people can be about the world in which they live. Those who mindlessly voice their negative opinions about the quality of food here would be well advised to do a few minutes research into the availability of food to people in other parts of the world - or indeed, even to large numbers of people in the United States.

If they did they would find that somewhere around two-thirds of the world's population is undernourished, and that during recent years somewhere around 3.5 million people have starved to death annually. That means that about 400 people die of hunger each hour, or around 6 each minute, twenty-four hours per day.

It has long been fashionable among Americans to sneer at food being served to them, and I never cease to be amazed how people can be so particular about their meals in the midst of the appalling and incomprehensible suffering which hungry people must experience. I have no idea what

Mr. Dedopoulos means by the GREEN DEATH (sic), but in spite of my ignorance on this point I would much rather take my chances with that than trade places with one of my counterparts in Africa, Asia, or Latin America.

Personally, I think the Saga food is fine, that students at UVM eat very well. Food here is nutritional and varied, and, significantly, there is plenty of it. Food managers in the respective dining halls whom I have met have impressed me as being admirably conscientious and cooperative. Putting it bluntly, unless there is evidence that food is deficient nutritionally or prepared under unsanitary conditions - and that is not the case here - we who have never known what it means to be hungry have no right whatsoever to complain about the food offered to us.

If those who are dissatisfied were truly interested in upgrading the quality of food, they would use their energies and talents to help curb the population explosion or organize the "Walk for the Hungry" campaign (I didn't see many at the meeting at the Newman Center last Thursday night) instead of quibbling about alleged shells in their scrambled eggs. If they did they would have taken a significant step towards being concerned adults rather than immature ingrates.

Yours sincerely,

One Student's View

Nixon's Foreign Policy Not All Good

by Jeff Evans

As someone about Richard Nixon's most outstanding accomplishments in the four years of his presidency, and the answer is likely to be "his foreign policy," or "his trip to China and his trip to Russia." There is a widespread belief that the foreign policy of the Nixon Administration has brought the world closer to peace than it has been since before World War II. There is an equally widespread belief that foreign affairs is the one area in which George McGovern can offer no substantial challenge to the President's record. There may be some truth in the former contention, but absolutely none in the latter.

It is probable that Nixon's overtures to Peking and Moscow have indeed lessened the prospects of conflict between the West and the Communist world. The administration has repeatedly boasted about its "bold initiatives" in this area. But let us ask ourselves the question as to just how "bold" the President's moves were.

George McGovern has advocated full recognition for the Communist government of China for twenty years. Richard Nixon during that time staunchly opposed any dealings with the Peking regime, preferring to maintain the fiction that Chiang Kai-Shek's government was still the government of China. Then, in 1971 Nixon announced that he would go to China (though not formally recognizing it). A bold, imaginative move? Hardly.

The Nixon Administration has opened the door to increased trade with the Soviet Union, another "imaginative" step that Senator McGovern has advocated for years. It is interesting to note, also, that the large wheat deal the Administration negotiated with the U.S.S.R. is proving to be a gold mine for the large grain companies, while providing no increased benefits for individual American farmers.

Nixon claimed to have made major progress in halting the arms race and points to the recent Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty as proof. Yet almost before the ink on the treaty was dry, Melvin Laird was before the Senate asking for development of practically every new weapons system not covered by the agreement. This move is hardly likely to bolster the Soviet Union's confidence in our intentions, and hardly likely to make the next round of SALT negotiations any easier.

The Nixon foreign policy has perpetuated a war in Indochina that has poisoned our relations with much of the rest of the world, especially the underdeveloped nations who see themselves as potential victims. Our war in Southeast Asia has blocked closer relations with the People's Republic of China and has put an effective barrier in the way of a constructive foreign policy in the area, one that could gain influence by other than military means.

During the Indo-Pakistani War the United States backed Pakistan, a little military dictatorship responsible for the slaughter of millions of Bengalis. In doing this, we turned our backs on India, the world's largest democracy (remember Democracy, the principal for which this country supposedly stands?) and drove her closer to the Russians. And all this largely because Nixon was so impressed with Pakistan's President Khan, the man who brought you the tragedy of Bangladesh.

The Nixon foreign policy has downplayed the United Nations in favor of more unilateral methods for solving world problems. After all, though, it must be remembered that many of the votes in the U.N. recently have been going against the United States, and President Nixon apparently doesn't like to play the game unless the participants follow our rules. Secretary of State Rogers has also announced that the U.S. will use its veto in the world body more often, a tactic for which we have publicly scolded the Russians for years.

The Nixon foreign policy unleashed John Connally on the major trading nations of the world, not to mention a 10% surcharge on imports into the United States and an end to the convertibility of the dollar into gold. None of this was done after consultation with our trading partners, as one might expect. These surprises from Nixon's bag of tricks have alienated many of our allies in Europe and in Asia. These moves have not made the U.S. popular with the underdeveloped nations either, for it was difficult enough for them to compete in the United States import trade before the surcharge; now it is nearly impossible.

The Nixon foreign policy has been one of support for military dictatorships around the globe, continuation of wasteful and senseless war in Asia, economic nationalism and the alienation of allies, scars for the United Nations, and neglect of poor nations on the earth.

In contrast, George McGovern has offered a foreign policy that would combine our ideals with action, that would end, once and for all, the bogymen of a monolithic communist movement out to destroy the United States. He offers a foreign policy that would end support to corrupt dictatorships, not the least of which is the one in South Vietnam, and a foreign policy that deals not with what dedicated anti-communists would like the world to be, but with what the world is.

Textor Replies To Greeks

Dear Editor:

Last week's barrage of editorial letters, directed at me and not particularly at my ideas, was expected. It encourages me, though, that "the Greeks" can and will debate the issue of their necessity and direction on the social spectrum. It also encourages me to see that the Greeks have held such effective and provocative offices as S.A. president and Cynic editor-in-chief. Finally I am encouraged by the almost universal defense of fun and games that the Greeks periodically and believably sponsor.

However, I would like to take issue with the accusation that I should be "more factual" by presenting some facts:

Fact 1: Two hours after the Sept. 28 issue of the Vermont Cynic hit the stands, I received a telephone call from a Mr. Steve Johnson. As he later admitted, this was not his real name nor would he give me his real name. He only said that he was from Sigma Phi and resided there most of the time. Most of the conversation was an obnoxious probe into my life, social status and occupation; I answered most of the questions to the best of my ability.

I constantly tried to discuss my ideas but my attempts were thwarted by persistent efforts to understand "what the hell is wrong with you?" I ended the conversation by suggesting that maybe I should come over and talk to a few of the boys at Sigma Phi. We both agreed that this would be profitable; I hung up with the intention to soon visit the fraternity.

Fact 2: About four hours later, I received a second and more concise phone call. I quote it now to the best of my recollection: "You'd better be careful when you're around the fraternities. You could get hurt." No names, no affiliations, and no damned courtesy.

Fact 3: The next week's Cynic is filled with pro-fraternity letters and the first Editor is even taking pot shots.

I would now like to ask a serious question, hopefully an answerable one: Is this the sort

Bill Meyer- The Man For Congress

To the Editor:

Thirty-two representatives from all across our nation took an ad in five Vermont papers on September 30, 1959, to tell Vermonters their impression of Vermont's representative, Bill Meyer, after his first year in Congress. "Bill Meyer represents the epitome of granite integrity," he represents, we believe, the finest tradition not only of Vermont, but of America. We have always profoundly respected his integrity, his patriotism, and his courage. Bill Meyer represents that voice of conscience which prompts us all to think more deeply. His voice on the floor commands attention and respect. He has shown a talent for leadership, and a great sense of responsibility.

Bill Meyer kept campaign promises. One of his 1958 promises was to fight for the reduction of waste in government expenditures. He said before the election: "We fail to realize that more than 80 cents of every tax dollar goes to pay expenses occasioned by war or fear of war. I see no reason for giving up social benefits in the interest of economy when we know that the only way to make major savings is by reducing the waste of an inflated military budget."

After election, in Congress, he said: "Mr. Chairman, last year I voted against the defense appropriations bill, after raising quite a few questions about waste. We are not truly defending our country by permitting waste to remain. I am not against the defense of our country. I am willing to try the present approach for one year. I am going to do my best to make great changes. I will not support this bill next year unless drastic changes are made in it."

Bill Meyer's policy was condemned, and he was defeated by a man who later popularly advocated changes for elimination of waste in the defense budget.

Bill Meyer is forgotten. He led a fight in Congress trying to prevent the potentially dangerous transfer of our nuclear know-how and weapons to other countries. He sponsored a resolution to extend the moratorium on nuclear testing as evidence of support for our negotiations in Geneva. He fought hard against the waste in defense contracts and stressed the greater long-run security that lies in economic rather than military aid to other countries.

When this 25-year-old researcher wanted to investigate a possible cancer treatment, we gave him the go-ahead.

We also gave him the right to fail.

At Kodak, it's not unusual for a 25-year-old like Jim Carroll to win the title of senior research physicist. Like any company involved in a lot of basic research, Kodak has felt the pressure of modern technology and the need for young, fresh thinking. So we hire the best talent we possibly can, and then give them as much responsibility as they can handle. Whatever their age.

We have departments and divisions, like any company. What we don't have are preconceived ideas about how an expert scientist's time should be spent. So when we received a request from the medical community for assistance in experimenting with lasers as a possible cancer treatment, we turned to 25-year-old Jim Carroll, who is deep in laser technology, and gave him the go-ahead. He built two half-billion watt laser systems, one of which Kodak has donated to the National Institute of Health.

The lasers proved unsuccessful in treating cancer, but we'd make the same decision all over again. We entered laser technology because we have a stake in business. We let a young researcher help the medical community look for a means of cancer treatment because we have a stake in the future of mankind.

To put it another way, we're in business to make a profit. But in furthering our own needs, we have often furthered society's. After all, our business depends on our society. So we care what happens to it.

Film Review:

Holmes Solves Mysteries While Watson Bumbles

by Margo Howard

As an A. Conan Doyle fanatic of long standing, I was very curious to know just how a Hollywood script writer would handle the reconstruction of Sherlock Holmes to the screen fifteen years after the death of his creator. If your head works the way mine does, you read the books before you see the movies made from them, if indeed they become movies. In reading fifty nine of the sixty Holmes stories about forty-seven times, my imagination conjured up a mental image—solidly formed—of how everything connected with Baker Street appeared to me; how Holmes looked and acted, what sort of person Watson might be like; the two colleagues at the come of a crime; even the Victorian designs of the rooms—and this image refused to budge. After learning of the existence of the movies, I more than half expected this Hollywood writer Bertalan Mithras to really botch things up. He could make an inferior movie, or he could make a good movie, but if it didn't match my imagination-picture, I wouldn't go to like it. To ally any suspicion of egotism, let me state that one can say a movie was well-done, and give done by over-emphasizing these for the viewer's benefit. The results are ludicrous; let us leave it at that.

Now for the actors themselves. There is a human element visible through the icy demeanor of the great detective that is as surprising as it is necessary. Rathbone's Holmes is shrewd, yes; calculating, yet; cerebral, yes; and yet very much a human being!

We get flashes of dry humor, un-machine-like impetuosity at the bumbling of Watson and the difficulties of the case. And, when the life of his friend and comrade is threatened, he instantly reveals that he not only has a mind, but a heart as well—and without blowing his cool. We see him turn on the charm—polite, impeccable, rather distant, but still charming—when it furthers his purpose. The momentous scene with Lydia shows a fine and believable actor. Even though we might anticipate what sort of surprise Holmes has in store for us, it is a question of how he will prove what he knows is true.

Nigel Bruce as Dr. Watson is a surprise to one who has seen this (or any) Holmes movie for the first time. He fits, indeed, he fits! He bumbles, and mumbles; (was it the sound track?) he asks banal questions, is skeptical of theories he hasn't thought up himself, and distrusts those members of the medical profession that inhibit fields of practice other than his own.

Watson, I am happy to say, does not come off looking like an idiot. Nor does he just play the role of a clown to add a touch of comic relief to the suspense. He is a direct contrast to Holmes; that's what he's there for. He is the common man, quite ordinary, bewildered at every fresh development, and respectful of his friend's uncanny abilities. He is always trying to follow Holmes' train of thought and employ his methods of observation. He feels secure in the knowledge that he is useful to Holmes, yet he cannot let the difference between them grow ever wider; so he questions, always trying to learn. Often Holmes' triumph is at Watson's expense; it was the case here. We laugh, but it is an uncomfortable laugh, that hits pretty close to home. Watson is a sensitive person with real feelings, and he is too much like us.

The 1971 Pulitzer Prize winning play "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds" will appear on the Lane Series on Wednesday, Oct. 25, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

A limited number of tickets, $3.75, $5.25, and $6, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations phone 656-3418. Starring in the play is Teresa Wright, winner of Academy Award nominations for her first three films, "The Little Foxes," "Frieda," and "Mrs. Miniver." In 1971 she won the award. More recently she received Emmy nominations as Annie Sullivan in "The Miracle Worker," and as Margaret Bourke-White in "The Margaret Bourke-White Story" on television. Among her Broadway starring roles, she has been seen in William Inge's "The Dark at the Top of the Stairs," "Who's the Happy Now?" by Oliver Healey, and "I Never Sang for My Father" written by Robert Anderson.

Featuring in the cast is Alexandra Stoddard, Robin Nolan, Helen Ross and Carol Potter.

The play deals with a fatherless household headed by a domineering, embittered and acid-tongued mother and the struggle of her brilliant but plain daughter to win recognition in the shadow of her more attractive and popular sister.

"Marigolds," which recently ended a New York engagement of $19 performances, has won more prizes than any other play of the past decade. In addition to the 1971 Pulitzer Prize, it was awarded the New York Critics Circle Award, the Variety Poll Award, the Los Angeles Critics Circle Award, and five Jefferson Awards in Chicago. The play has already been performed to critical acclaim in Boston, Chicago, Detroit, Baltimore, Toronto, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and opens in London on Oct. 23. "Marigolds" was written by Paul Zindel, a former schoolteacher turned playwright, who at the age of 35 has a second hit play to his credit, "And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little." His third play, "The Secret Affairs of Mildred Wild," opens on Broadway in November, with Maureen Stapleton starred. In addition to his stage work, Mr. Zindel has written the screenplay for the soon-to-be-released film "Up the Sandbox" starring Barbara Streisand, and has completed the screenplay for the motion picture version of the hit Broadway musical "Mame."

The next Lane Series concert will be the chamber music ensemble the Fine Arts Quartet, Sat., Oct. 28, 8:30 p.m. in the Allen Chapel.

More Holmes Flicks Coming

"Sherlock Holmes and the Secret Weapon," the second film in the Sherlock Holmes Classics series sponsored by the Lane Film Society, will be shown on Friday, Oct. 20, at 8 and 9:30 p.m. in Marsh Life Sciences Building.

Because of demand for tickets there will be two showings of each film from now on.

Tickets, $1.00 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman and at the door. For reservations, phone 656-3418.

Starring in "Sherlock Holmes and the Secret Weapon" are Basil Rathbone as Sherlock Holmes, Nigel Bruce as Dr. Watson, Lionel Atwill as Professor Moriarty, and Karen Verne.

The film, containing a cipher similar to that propounded in Conan Doyle's story "The Adventure of the Dancing Men," is set during World War II. At the climax of the movie, Holmes is bound in Prof. Moriarty's laboratory, having his blood drained from him drop by drop. The object of Moriarty's quest is a bomb mechanism by a Swiss inventor which he hopes to sell to the Germans at a vast profit. The plot gives occasion for some excellent disguises on Rathbone's part.

The screenplay, which runs for 68 minutes, is by Edward T. Lowe, Scott Darling, and Edmund L. Hartman. The next film on the Sherlock Holmes Classics Series will be "The House of Fear," Nov. 3. Other showings include "The Pearl of Death," Nov. 10; "Sherlock Holmes and the Spider Woman," Nov. 17; and "The Scarlet Claw," Dec. 1.

Album Review:
HumblePie
by Doug Colette
LOST AND FOUND
(A&M SP 3513)
WIND OF CHANGE
Peter Frampton
(A&M SP4348)
It's not only doubly ironic, but contradictorily so, that Humble Pie should at last break through to widespread popularity by virtue of their flash live album Rockin' the Fillmore, which is as comprehensively accurate a representation of a band's stage act as I've heard.

of versatility and this bargain two-LP set, which consists of their first two albums, As Safe as Yesterday Is, and Town and Country, is an ample display of that versatility. Not restricted to electric guitars, bass and drums, each man played both electric and acoustic guitars and keyboards in addition to his main instrument; Marriot, Ridley and Frampton provided a distinctive trio of solo or group vocalists and each of the four composed songs. Multi-instrumental arrangements create moods and textures appropriate for soft laments (Take Me Back), rock and roll ballads ("The Light of Love") or plain hard rockers ("Buttermilk Boy") as well as the various combinations of these general types.

In nearly all they did, Humble Pie demonstrated not only a thoroughly professional technical skill, but intelligence, sophistication and a sense of humor plus a wholesome innocence that prevents the listener (and the Pie too, I'll bet) from taking them and their music too seriously. The Fillmore may very well be indicative of all this.

The Fillmore may very well be indicative of all this.

Prampton's talent as a composer is stunning; his songs create and sustain moods on many levels. "Oh For Another Day" is one of his quiet tunes—with a delicate, almost fragile arrangement of acoustic guitars and strings, he evokes perfectly that feeling of honest contentment one gets from working hard at what he likes best and seeing progress being made.

But Peter does love to rock, too and when he does, it's equally extraordinary. Once again the appropriate arrangement on "The Lodger" creates a tense drama, corresponding to the situation described by the lyrics, which is heightened near the track's conclusion, by Jim Price's bass.

These two are probably the most fully-realized cuts, but the rest doesn't fall far behind. "It's a Plain Shame" is perfect Humble Pie: "All I Want to Be (Is by Your Side)" has gorgeous Beatlesque harmonies and "Lady Light," a charmingly catchy tune, contains the delightful melodic twist reminiscent of McCartney.

One of his greatest strengths, however, except the necessary electricity, his graceful and precise phrasing and sensitivity of the moment are a unique gift and a pleasure to listen to especially on "Fig Tree Bay" and "Wind of Change." And Peter's singing is wonderfully melodious, with a clarity matched by the production, also by Frampton, throughout the album.

But what really takes me within inches of calling him a genius is his treatment of "Jumpin' Jack Flash." His version alternates rocking vicious as the Stones and Jazz-influenced instrumental sections that ring with the authority of a master musician—it becomes Peter's song, a statement as distinctively his own as his original material.

The young ex-Fleming is now touring in this country with a band he's christened Frampton's Camel and I wouldn't hesitate a second to see them not to make sure I get Frampton's future recordings. It's young artists like Peter and Neil Lofgren, not the pseudo-linky/profound Al Kooper or the musically inept Black Sabbath, that will not only make new rock and roll safer, but will consistently inject it with the vitality and discipline necessary for its healthy growth.

Concert Bu Strives To I

by Lisa Cherie
Many students are currently protesting—or simply questioning the selection of musical groups presented by UVM's SA concert bureau. It seems unfortunate that the two most recent concerts presented only part of the original bill. The cancellation of Jim Croce from the George Carlin concert, and Mark Allmand from the Edgar Winter show, aroused aggravation and discontent among a percentage of the campus community.

In defense of the bureau's position, Jeff Wilson, the director of the SA concert bureau, has offered an extensive explanation of how the organization functions, and why certain groups are selected to perform at UVM.

The primary concern of the concert bureau is to present a diversified program of music throughout the year, rather than cater to the particular interests and demands of individual students for each separate concert.

"Most students relate to music on an individual basis, although it is often presented for the masses," Jeff stated. "Because of particular likes and dislikes, it is most difficult to meet personal demands with any success."

What's more, a concert by the bureau must consider many other aspects besides student requests. To successfully has an effect on consciousness. However, work being done at St. University on Long Island has raised about its effect in mice and hamsters. These animals should not smoke it. Q: Is marijuana an aphrodisiac? A: No, and scientific evidence suggests it is either. Sorry. Q: If marijuana isn't harmful, why legalize it?

A: There are two answers to this very question. On the one hand, as has already noted, there may be some harmful associated with marijuana in some individuals, but this, of course, is true regarding also. Basically, the question is a social and not a medical legal one. It can be answered from a cultural point of view. In the United States, we have accepted and tolerated (to place negative pressure on) the use of alcohol. In India the holds true. Alcohol is the drug of choice.

There is certainly a strong argument current laws, and their application, developing a generation of individuals cynical about and have disrespect for. In the past five years there has been an open talk, more open use, less sentences and other evidence of acceptance by the public. No one knows this is leading. Let's stick around while Q: What are Vermont's laws pertaining to marijuana? What is the University regarding marijuana? (Drs. Walter Steffenhagen checked with District Patrick Leahy and Dean Powers of UVM following facts.)

A: In Vermont possession or use of amounts is a misdemeanor (in large amounts is a felony) and the University is obligated to recommend breaking. However, as noted above, although sentences may be very harsh there is reduction in the actual sentences years. In Chittenden County during the past year, sentences for a first involving small amounts has been a maximum of 60 days in jail or a fine of $500. In other Vermont counties, giving more or less stringent sentences. Driving under the influence of drugs is a different story and can result in one's license (despite the fact that knows if marijuana really affects driving).

The next Lane Series concert will be the Chamber music ensemble the Fine Arts Quartet, Sat., Oct. 28, 8:30 pm, in the Allen Chapel.

Rock and Roll

appointed composer is stunning; his songs create and sustain moods on many levels. "On For Another Day" is one of his quiet tunes with a delicate, almost fragile arrangement of acoustic guitars and strings, he evokes perfectly that feeling of innocent contentment one gets from working hard at what he likes best and seeing progress being made.

But Peter does love to rock, too and when he does, it's equally extraordinary. Once again the appropriate arrangement on "The Lodge" creates a tense drama, corresponding to the situation described by the lyrics, which is heightened near the track's conclusion, by Jim Price's bass.

These two are probably the most fully-realized cuts, but the rest doesn't fall far behind. "It's a Plain Shame" is perfect humble Pie; "All I Want to Be (Is by Your Side)" has gorgeous Baroque harmonies and "Candy Land" is a charmingly catchy tune, reminiscent of McCartney when he was at his best.

Frankton's guitar playing is one of his greatest strengths. Each evening any gymnastics whatsoever, except the necessary electricity, his graceful and precise phrasing and sensitivity of the moment are a unique gift and a pleasure to listen to especially on "Fig Tree Bay" and "Wind of Change." And Peter's singing is wonderfully melodious, with a clarity matched by the production, also by Frankton, throughout the album.

But what really takes me within inches of calling him a genius is his treatment of "Jumpin' Jack Flash." His version alternates rocking violence with the Stones and jazz-influenced instrumental sections that ring with the authority of a master musician—it becomes Peter's own statement as distinctively his own as his original material.

The young ex-Pisces is now touring in this country with a band he's christened Frankton's Camel and I wouldn't hesitate a second to see them here to make sure I get Frankton's future recordings. If young artists like Peter and his Lane Series, not the pseudo-feminist/professional Alice Cooper or the mindlessly inept Black Sabbath, that will not only make sure rock and roll never dies, but will constantly inject it with the vitality and freshness necessary for its health.

Concert Bureau Strives To Please

by Lisa Charles

Many students are currently protesting or simply questioning the selection of musical groups presented by UVM's EA concert bureau. It seems unfortunate that the two most recent concerts presented only part of the original bill. The cancellation of Jim Croce from the George Carlin concert, and Mark Almond from the Edgar Winter show, aroused indignation and discontent among a percentage of the campus community.

In defense of the bureau's position, Jeff Wilson, the director of the EA concert bureau, has offered an extensive explanation of how the organization functions and why certain groups are selected to perform at UVM.

The primary concern of the concert bureau is to present a diversified program of music throughout the year, rather than cater to the particular interests and demands of individual students for each separate concert.

"Most students relate to music on an individual basis, although it is often presented for the masses," Jeff stated. "It is most difficult to meet personal demands with any success."

When arranging a concert, the bureau must consider many other aspects besides student requests.

schedule a group, the timing of its tour, the price, the EA budget, and the campus reception must all be considered.

The bureau operates on a $5,000 allocation from the Student Association. Office expenses are covered by $1,000, while the remainder is used to defray ticket costs, ensuring a student discount. However, the total expenditures for each concert often exceed the budget. Consequently, the bureau ultimately aims at a profit margin in hope of preventing too expensive or possibly free concert sometime during the year. The bureau is also expected to reimburse for any damage resulting from a particular concert. This compensation is frequently the central reason for increased ticket prices. Thus it is only in the student interest that smoking is prohibited inside the gymnasium.

"People ask why we don't schedule the Allman Brothers or the Grateful Dead," Jeff commented. "Usually their fee is too high, the touring schedule is unfavorable or we can't depend on the group to perform."

section of students. We cannot take the chance of signing a one hour contract with the Dead and have to pay them for a four hour concert they were 'psyched' for," he explained.

Marijuana Questionnaire.

has an effect on circumstantial structure. However, work being done at St. Johns University on Long Island has raised questions about its effect in mice and hamsters and these animals should not smoke it.

Q. Is marijuana an aphrodisiac?
A. No, and scientific evidence suggests nothing else is either. Sorry.

Q. If marijuana isn't harmful, why isn't it legalized?

A. There are two answers to this very difficult question. On the one hand, as has already been noted, there may be some harmful effects associated with marijuana in some individuals; but this, of course, is true regarding alcohol also. Basically, the question is a social question and not a medical legal one. It can only be answered from a cultural point of view. The Judeo-Christian tradition has accepted alcohol and has tended to place negative prescriptions on hallucinatory drugs. In India the opposite holds true. Alcohol is the drug which is frowned upon.

There is certainly a strong argument that current laws and their application are developing a generation of individuals who are cynical about and have disrespect for the law. In the past five years there has been much more open talk, more open use, less stringent sentences and other evidence of greater acceptance by the public. No one knows where this is leading. Let's stick around awhile.

Q. What are Vermont's laws pertaining to marijuana? What is the University's policy regarding marijuana? (Drs. Waller and Steffenhagen checked with District Attorney Patrick Leahy and Dean Powers of UVM for the following facts.)

A. In Vermont possession or use of small amounts is a misdemeanor (in large amounts it is a felony) and the University is obviously not going to recommend breaking the law.

sentences may be very light (they have been a reduction in the actual sentences in recent years. In Chittenden County during the past year the usual sentence for a first offense involving small amounts has been a $150 fine. The maximum permissible under Vermont Law is six months in jail, $500 fine or both. It is not known if courts in other Vermont counties are giving more or less stringent sentences.

Driving under the influence of drugs however is a different story and can result in loss of one's license (despite the fact that no one knows if marijuana really affects driving). In QUESTION: Why do bicycles for men have an extra bar, whereas bicycles for women do not have any? Because of the anatomical makeup of the man, it seems that a bar would be a problem.

ANSWER: The lack of a bar on a woman's bicycle appears to be related to clothing styles (skirts instead of pants) and probably some word issues of modesty relating to having to swing your leg over the seat of a bike to mount it. As with other issues of false feminism, the price is high. A woman's bike, with its open, U or V shaped frame is inherently much weaker—pound for pound than a man's bike with its rigid, triangular frame. A woman's bike does have a major advantage if you have a child's seat on the back; a man's bike requires something of a Rockstar-like dance maneuver to get on and off while the child is still in the seat.

About the anatomical concern you raise, let me reassure you. Squeamish thoughts of sliding down banisters aside, most toilets can be swung to the left or right of the bar since a correctly fitted bike is one in which the bar is approximately a half an inch to an inch below the crotch, when the person is standing flat-footed straddling the bar. Bicycle frames come in different sizes and it is essential that you obtain one of the right size to bicycle efficiently.

Most peddlers I have observed do not have their seats adjusted properly. The seat should be high enough so that with the ball of the foot on the pedal (the only correct way) and the pedal fully extended, the knee should have a very slight bend. You can obtain this distance by kneeling barefooted and measuring the inside length of your leg from the crotch to the floor. Multiply this distance by 1.09. The result is the distance the top of your seat should be from the pedal.

This and other pearls of wisdom can be found in an excellent overall reference on

A helpful reader sent me the following:
"I'll do my good deed for the day by responding to the letter asking for suggestions on coping with leakage after sexual intercourse. Here are three suggestions for various stages of aftermath:

"For directly afterward, wipe up with Kleenex Man-Size tissues. These are so large and absorbent that I am convinced that this is their real purpose, being much too large for anyone but an elephant to use for nose blowing. If you fold them on the diagonal into a diaper shape you can also recapture part of your lost youth at the same time.

"If the woman is not hung up on projecting a romantic, lacy night gown look, a pair of men's thick cotton briefs is comfortable to sleep in. They are very absorbent and help avoid the icky feeling of waking up in the middle of the night laying in a cold puddle.

"For those who begin the day with intercourse, a tampon is good for avoiding sudden leakage while riding one's bicycle.

"The most civilized solution to this problem is the bidet. After having one for two years in another country, I am at a loss as to why these are not standard equipment in American bathrooms. I suppose it is part of the national policy of nonrecognition of genitals.

QUESTION: Sometime ago I wrote to you about a compulsive cheek biting problem. You suggested that I was probably anxious about something. A divorce solved 90 per cent of my problems and the remaining 10 per cent I solved. Anyway, I haven't bit my cheek in two years now.

I have another minor problem or question. I worry about alcoholism because my father has this problem. Currently, I am going with a guy (we get along fine) who drinks about de beers a day and on the weekends gets what he calls drunk on beer, about 12 beers per day on Friday and Saturday. He is never obnoxious in any way; in fact, his disposition often improves with beer. My question is simply, is this a dangerous pattern? He never touches hard liquor because both his parents have drinking problems.

ANSWER: There is no question that your friend has a very serious drinking problem. The amount of alcohol he consumes is such that he most likely would have some withdrawal symptoms if he had to stop suddenly. One clue to the extent of the problem is your comment that his disposition gets better as he drinks more. The natural question is: What happens to his disposition and how does he feel if he drinks less than what he does?

Getting drunk on beer is a particularly interesting phenomenon. Unlike drinking hard liquor where small amounts are potent, it takes a prodigious effort to handle the volume of fluid involved in continually drinking beer. The drink a quart, urinate a quart cycle gets tedious, leading a heavy beer drinking acquaintance of mine to observe that one doesn't really buy beer, one rents it.

People with drinking problems often come from families where one or both parents also have a drinking problem. Such a situation is another example of maladaptive patterns of dealing with stress being adopted by children. The situation is enhanced by cultural or sub-cultural attitudes toward alcohol that emphasize anti-social aspects of its use or forbidden use. The problem is complex in that the forbidden aspects of alcohol use can be so emphasized that rigidly non-drinking families can provide the setting for a rebellious member to use alcohol as a destructive device. A startling number of women with alcoholic fathers tend to get involved with men who also have drinking problems. Unless your friend can see his drinking as being a problem that he needs some help in solving, and unless he can alter his pattern of drinking, he is headed for big trouble.

The right-in candidate.

He told us what he and the other coaches felt was the only way they could operate and be successful. They asked us to accept "his" and we began to learn about what it was a commitment to other people for a to learn about what it means to sacrifice ourselves to a common goal for the good of the team. Coach Falivene's philosophy for us around "caring."

Care about us, not just as football players but as people. He wanted us to be just that — that day in August, coaches who cared just for the three months of football, but for nine months as well, and they were not how we'd perform as men for the rest of the year. Coach Falivene and his men feel this will be important.

Over, I am glad to be at UVM. Our team is giving themselves every day, not for a prize, but rather because we care about the coaches, and we know they care about us.

There is a man who won't deceive you. He will tell you across with what he thinks. He will put the line for us at any time, and because this will work for them and believe in them and

Cats Drop Another 6-2

KINGSTON, R.I. — The clouds which have hovered over the University of Vermont soccer team all season continue to get darker.

The latest episode in the decline of the Catamount soccer team came Saturday against the Rhode Island Rams, when clouds had cleared. UVM had lost 6-2 and is now 0-7 on the season.

"We played super in the first half, but after that we lost our composure and pace," said UVM coach Don Soderberg.

The Rams, who have losses to Brown and Bridgeport, also have wins over Maine and UVM to remain in the race for the Yankee Conference championship.

UVM has now lost to Connecticut, BU and the Rams in conference play.

After Rhode Island had scored two goals, twice when Brad Gregory was caught out of the net, Soderberg lifted Gregory and inserted Jim Tait, who performed well the rest of the way. Tait, who played at Essex Junction High, had not played in the goal for two years.

The UVM goals were scored by Tait, on a picture-perfect deflected head shot with Jack Shaw getting the assist at the seven minute mark of the first half.

The second goal was scored by Proctor's Paul Austin on a penalty shot at 24:27 of the second half.

Paul Carvalho was the big gun in the Rams' offense, scoring two goals in the first half and two more in the second.

"We don't enjoy this losing streak," said Soderberg, "but until we put it all together, we will have a fight on our hands."

Wednesday the Catamounts play Middlebury at Middlebury and Soderberg describes that as going from the frying pan to the fire.

Rhode Island had 27 shots on goal to 13 for the Cats. In the first half it was closer with the Rams outshooting the Cats, 11-7, with a 16-4 edge in the second half.

Daily had seven saves in the nets for Rhode Island while Gregory and Tait combined for 10 for the Cats.

THE INSIDER

by Frank Luisi

For the past two years, I have looked forward each week to reading the articles in this column, written by athletes who I knew and respected. I felt that this part of the Cynic was a very special thing for both the school and the team, because in it something special and very personal was being expressed. I never thought I could ever express such a feeling about our team, for I didn't consider myself an insider. (chances of starting as a 5-9 170 lb. quarterback are not great) and I thought this column should be written by someone who was really inside the team, someone who's playing.

Standing next to the starters I have often felt over shadowed by their immensity, and that I didn't deserve to stand next to them. I had felt this way until Coach Falivene took over and changed the philosophy of football. (continued on page eight)

UVM Defeats Colby 4-1

by Joan Mollica
UVM dominated play against Colby Jr. College, Oct. 11, in field hockey and won 4-1. Vermont's coach, Marilyn Chase, commented that "UVM played good hockey but it could have been much better if we had capitalized upon Colby's errors."

Vermont's offense was set in motion by center Sue Murphy who scored two goals in the first five minutes of the game. Colby came back late in the first half to score their only goal of the game. Val Gardner, UVM's goalie, made one save in the first half of the game.

Pam Bryant scored Vermont's third goal early in the second half. Marty Fain followed with the fourth goal. She scored in typical "Fainian" style with a solitary drive from the 30 yard line. Vermont's goalie saw little action in the second half. However, she did make one more save in the second half to bring her season total to eighteen.

UVM's record stands at 4 wins and 1 tie.

Spoil Homecoming Cats Squeak Past URI 14-13

by Ricky Steinberg

This past weekend the University of Vermont football team headed down to Rhode Island hoping to improve upon a disappointing 0-3 record. Disappointing in the sense that they had been playing extremely well all season but had yet to win. On Saturday, the Cats once again played well and for the first time came out on top. They spoiled a homecoming weekend game at Rhode Island by defeating the Rams 14-13. The Cats were sparked by the brilliant passing performance of quarterback Earl Olson.

The defense also excelled allowing only 13 points and holding the Rams to only four yards passing.

The Cats first half play looked like a repeat performance of the first three games. They were outplaying their opponent but still trailed by one touchdown at the half. The defense was superb, yielding only 72 yards to the Rhode Island offense (all rushing) with the lone Ram touchdown coming on a freak play.

With 1:12 gone in the first period, Ram halfback, Dan Weed took a hand off from Kim Purcell and headed into the UVM line. After a short gain, Weed was hit hard and the ball jarred loose. The ball rolled to the Rhode Island 45 where end Buddy Denniston picked it up and outraced a host of UVM pursuers into the end zone. The Cats were victimized by the own hard hitting. The extra point attempt by Charlie Ulch was good, giving Rhode Island an early 7-0 lead.

The Cat's offense then took over but could not move the ball so they punted giving Rhode Island possession on their own 32. The defense then came on, stopped URI cold, and forced a short punt with an excellent rush. The Cats took over on the URI 43 and moved down to a first and goal situation on the 3 yard line. They tried two runs and two passes but were unsuccessful in four bids to score a touchdown. This may have reminded the Cats of the game a year ago when the Rhode Island defense stopped them on 11 successive attempts from inside the 10 yard line.

The remainder of the half continued in the same pattern. The UVM offense moved at will until they were inside the ten. Then the RI defense would toughen and push the Cats back. Throughout the half, Coach Carl Falivene expressed faith in his offense, refusing to attempt field goals on 4th down situations despite being in range numerous times. This questionable strategy proved successful later in the game and provided UVM with the winning margin.

A second obstacle that constantly thwarted UVM drives was the fact that the Cat's receivers dropped many passes. A dropped pass with about a minute left in the half cost them a touchdown and the Cats headed into the locker room trailing 7-0.

The first half statistics bear out UVM's complete first half domination. They had 10 first downs to URI's 3 and they accumulated 192 yards offensively to Rhode Island's 72. But the most important numbers were upon the scoreboard which read URI 7, UVM 0.

The second half began with neither team able to mount any type of offensive attack. With 6:21 remaining in the third quarter UVM received their first break and took full advantage of it. On a 4th and 7 situation URI was forced punt from their own 23. A bad map from center sent the ball sailing over the head of John Anderson. RI's freshman punter, the ball landed in the end zone where Anderson surrounded by a group of UVM players, attempted to kick it. He fumbled the ball and Doug Ball pounced on it giving the Cats their first score of the game. A more experienced punter may have given up the safety instead of attempting such a risky punt. As it turned out, he gave it the old college try and lost. With Jakubicki's conversion, the score was tied at 7 all. This is how the score remained until early in the 4th quarter.

At this point the UVM offense once again started to move with Olson finding an opening in the middle of the Ram's nose defense. The Cats moved down to the Rhode Island 4 where it was 1st down and goal to go. They were stopped by the Ram goal line defense on three consecutive plays and Coach Falivene decided to call time out to talk things over with Olson. Having already been stopped within the 10 three times, Falivene had to decide whether or not to challenge the Ram's defense. He showed his faith in his offense by sending Olson with a play. The Cats finally cracked the URI defense, with Olson sneaking over from the one.

This gave Vermont a 14-7 lead with 12 minutes left in the game.

The Ram's struck back six minutes later. On a beautifully executed inside reverse, all conference standout "Molly" McGee galloped 38 yards for a URI score. This made the score 14-13. The Rams decided to go for the win and lined up for a two point attempt. They scored on a pass to Mike Matkevich and it appeared as if the Cats fine play would once again be wasted. A penalty forced a replay though and once again the pass was to Matkevich, but it fell short and UVM held on to its one point lead.

Gaining momentum URI stopped the Cats on the next set of downs and came within inches of blocking the punt. They started moving against the UVM defense for the first time all afternoon and with 58 seconds remaining attempted a 40 yard field goal. The outcome of the game now rested on the foot of Charlie Ulch. With the wind behind him, he kicked the ball but it hit the left goal post.

All UVM now had to do was run out the clock. They did this successfully and had their first victory of the season and the first for Coach Carl Falivene.

This weekend UVM takes on the Wildcats of UNH.

UVM Harriers Host Norwich

Something unusual in Vermont cross country will take place this Saturday (Oct. 21) when the University of Vermont harriers host the Norwich University runners in a dual meet that will begin at approximately 2 p.m.

Approximately at 2 p.m. the varsity meet between Vermont and Norwich will begin at Centennial Field late in the first half of the Vermont-New Hampshire football game and the finish will occur 20 minutes later during the halftime ceremonies of the game," said Rex C-C coach, Bill Nedde. The finish line will be in front of the football stands and an estimated crowd of over 7,000 football fans will have a chance to see the undefeated Catamount cross country team in action.

This is the first time in the history of cross country at second in 1970.

Budweiser Brewing Chart

ADOLPHUS BUSCH

Because malt is so important in brewing, we use the finest Western two-row barley available in addition to the Midwest six-row variety. The extra cost of this premium barley is worth it, since it makes for a milder, more pleasant beer. Here, our barley is first cleaned, graded, washed and steeped, then allowed to germinate for a minimum of five days under a gentle stream of humid air in slowly revolving drums.

The hopped wort is strained, pumped to cooling towers, and then to fermenting cellars. Yeast, made from our own special pure culture, is added and fermentation begins.

Penetrating heat halts the sprouting process and dries the grain. Rootlets are screened off.

The cleaned barley malt is stored until needed for grinding in the Brew House.

Meanwhile, specially selected rice is crushed in separate mills and weighed. Budweiser is brewed with rice (including actual table-grade rice) even though many brewers use corn syrup instead because it is much cheaper. But cheaper is not for Budweiser.

The ground rice and barley malt are wetted with clear, filtered water (absolutely ideal for quality brewing) and cooked. This mash is then strained in huge tanks, producing a clear amber liquid called wort.

In these patented Anheuser-Busch fermenters, the brewers' yeast changes sugars from malt and rice into alcohol and carbon dioxide.

Many beers would be ready for artificial carbonation, filtering and bottling at this point, but not Budweiser. Instead, it goes to huge tanks in the lager cellars. Here, beechwood strips are spread across the bottoms of each lager tank, beer is pumped in, freshly yeasted wort is added, and the beer is allowed to carbonate itself naturally as it ferments and ages, slowly and quietly a second time.

(This is the exclusive Budweiser Beechwood Aging process. It takes more time (actually as much as three times as long as the process some beers use) and costs more money, but the strips of beechwood provide extra surface for the brewers' yeast to cling to—and help clarify the beer naturally.)

The final step: the beer is carefully filtered—creating the sparkling brilliance and clarity that have made Budweiser famous throughout the industry. And the world.

THE WORLD RENOWNED Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.

Hops are the "seasoning" of fine beer. Only the choicest imported hops from the honored fields of Central Europe and the very best of domestic blossoms from the western United States are used in brewing Budweiser. (Absolutely no extract is used!) The result is Bud's rich, mild aroma and crisp, refreshing taste. Here, these choice hops are added to the wort, which is boiled in giant brew kettles until the wort has assumed just the right delicate hop flavor.

All that is left to do now... bottling, bottling and canning operations and adding the familiar label that identifies the most popular brand of beer the world has ever known: Budweiser, King of Beers.

Brewing beer right does make a difference!

Lengthy Senate Financial Policy

As was anticipated, Tuesday's S.A. Senate meeting lasted into the wee hours of the morning, or at least three hours longer than normal meetings. President Bill Sisco revealed the meeting to order at 6:45 pm. One of the first announcements was of the Protest Demonstration October 26 by the Committee Against the War. The demonstration would be at the Restoration Headquarters for the President, in Burlington.
The Finance Committee gave its report in which it suggested the allocation of $250 for the Rugby Club and $150 for the Home Economics Association. The Finance Committee also stated that $1250 had been allocated to the Women's Centennial, which sponsored "She-Week" on campus last week. Reports indicated that She-Week was successful.
Sisco then gave a report on his investigation into the use of S.A. allocated funds by the Student Association.

GOP Hopeful Hackett Comments On UVM, Abortion, Environmental Protection

by Steven C. Biss
Luther Hackett is seeking to become Vermont's second straight Republican governor in the state's November 7 election. Opposing him are James Salmon, a Democrat, and Bernard Sanders, a candidate from the Liberty Union Party.

In an interview last Friday at the campaign headquarters on 12 Church St., the GOP hopeful spoke on a number of issues, including abortion, needed changes in the state's tax system, the question of industrial progress and environmental protection, and perhaps the most sensitive to this university, the state's concerns with the University of Vermont in policy

Because of a tight schedule, Hackett spoke rapidly, but candidly. What follows are the questions, and his responses to them.

Asked what he felt the role of his administration would be with the University of Vermont, he answered:

"The University of Vermont is an extremely important part of our state. One of the two key parts of our education in our state. The education that it provides for Vermont students is one of the best things we do in the state of Vermont. We're going to make sure the university is funded adequately, to provide the kind of quality education that is needed, to provide programs that meet the needs of Vermont students, and to do it without having to continually increase tuition."

He continued: "I think the in-state tuition rate is as high as it ought to be. I don't want to see it increase, and that means the state is going to have to increase its appropriation... and I intend to see that happens."

Hackett's opponent, Thomas Salmon, has urged that a student be seated on the university's board of trustees, with full voting rights. The GOP candidate, who, if elected, would be an ex-officio member of the board, disagreed.

"I think the present structure of the board with student representatives on all the committees, and faculty representatives on all the committees, and faculty and students represented at the full board meetings is the best possible arrangement for student and faculty representation on the board at the present time."

On the emotional issue of abortion, Hackett offered:

"I, personally, as a matter of conscience, oppose the idea of abortion. But, the question is a matter of law. What should the law be? I believe that the law should not prohibit or limit the right of a woman to have an abortion the first twelve weeks of pregnancy, as a matter of her choice, in her conscience and with her physician."

He continued:

"After twelve weeks it should only be provided for those medically indicated reasons. I think this is a matter on the one hand of the rights of the individual, and, on the other hand, the responsibilities of society. I believe this is where the line should be drawn."

In recent years, Vermont's population has increased. This reporter asked Hackett what steps he would take to attain the need for the state's industrial growth as well as safeguarding it from environmental harm caused, most of the time, by industrial growth.

The GOP hopeful answered: "Our approach to protecting the open rural character of the state and protecting Vermont against excessive population rate of growth has to be a combination approach. There are a number of things that have to be done."

"First of all, as we pursue improved and increased employment of Vermonters, through encouraging some new industry, or, encouraging existing industry to grow, we have to make sure we do a very

McGovern 43%, Nixon 30%, In Second Poll Of UVM Students

Editor's Note: This is the second of two polls conducted by the Cynic on the presidential election. A total of 730 students were polled in this poll, as opposed to only 350 in the first one. Students were polled in the dormitories, fraternities and sororities, and off-campus. Although their percentage has decreased, a large number of students still remain undecided in their choice for president. In order of preference, the three topics most considered main campaign issues were, the war in Viet Nam, the economy and welfare.

Lengthy Senate Meeting Tables Financial Policy, Passes Resolution

by Bruce Mathison

As was anticipated, Tuesday's S.A. Senate meeting lasted into the wee hours of the morning, or at least three hours longer than normal meetings. President Bill Sisco presided over the meeting to order at 6:45 p.m. One of the first announcements was of the Protest Demonstration October 26 by the Committee Against the War. The demonstration would be at the Residence Headquarters for the President, in Burlington.

The Finance Committee gave its report in which it suggested the allocation of $250 for the Rugby Club and $1250 for the Home Economics Association. The Finance Committee also stated that $1250 had been allocated to the Women's Centennial, which sponsored "She-Week" on campus last week. Reports indicated that She-Week was successful.

Sisco then gave a report on his investigation into the use of S.A. allocated funds by recognized groups, and of the financial status of all recognized organizations. He found four groups that had missed or were misusing their funds. When pressed to name the organizations specifically, Sisco stated that the situation at this time was that of merely an allegation, not a formal charge, and because of this he would decline to name specific groups and/or individuals.

One item which was quickly disposed of was the nomination of Michele Kearney to the Concert Bureau. Min Kearney's nomination was approved overwhelmingly by the Senate. The Senate also voted to recognize the UVM Rescue Squad as a separate student organization. Previously the rescue squad operated as part of OVP.

A substantial portion of the meeting was spent discussing, at great length, the new financial policy statement of the Student Association. The financial policy up before the Senate is the third in two years, and is fourteen pages long. There was a motion at the beginning of the discussion to table the entire policy statement for one more week, however, the motion was lost in parliamentary rhetoric and failed. Sisco attempted to go through the entire statement, expounding on new points and comparing them with the old policy, only to be stopped or rather, stymied on innumerable spots. According to the University and Senate policy, the S.A. is accountable to all its recognized organizations. A question was raised as to whether the Finance Committee and the Senate Council were recognized groups. Sisco quickly said that they were covered separately under the Constitution, which takes precedence over any policy. It was also noted that any

VPIRG Compares Prices In Local Markets

by Jeff Ewen

On October 11, volunteers from the Vermont Public Interest Research Group conducted a comparative price survey of twelve supermarkets in the Burlington area, using a market-basket list of forty-six common grocery items as a basis for comparison. All stores were surveyed on the same day to provide a valid comparison of their respective prices.

The items used in the survey included soap and laundry products, toilet tissue, bakery products, flour, sugar, mixes, cereal, dairy products, coffee and tea, soda, vegetable and fruit products, meats, rice, spaghetti, salad dressing, and peanut butter. One uniform size was used for each product in all supermarkets.

The results of the survey showed noticeable differences in grocery costs at different stores in the area. The most inexpensive store, in terms of the total bill for the items used in the VPIRG survey, was the A&P on Pearl Street in Burlington, and the most expensive supermarket, for the same items, was the Country Store in Winooksi.

The difference between the Pearl Street A&P and the Country Store for the total cost of the groceries on VPIRG's shopping list was $1.70. For a family that spends approximately $30 per week on food, shopping at the most inexpensive store on the list could mean a saving of $1.78 every week, which adds up to yearly savings of over $90. A family spending about $50 every week on food could save almost $3 per week at the lowest priced supermarket, or about $150 in a year of shopping.

In between the A&P on Pearl Street and Winooksi's Country Store, from the cheapest to the most expensive, were the A&P on Shelburne Road, Martin's on Dorset Street in South Burlington, the First National on Williston Road, Grand Union on Shelburne Road, the Grand Union on South Winooksi Avenue in downtown Burlington, the Grand Union on North Avenue, the Super Duper on North Avenue, the Super Duper on Shelburne Road, the Grand Union in Winooksi, the Grand Union on Hinesburg Road in South Burlington, and Martin's on Shelburne Road.

The prices gathered by the VPIRG volunteers were all double-checked to insure that there would be no errors in the prices reported. This was done by sending two people to every store, and having each researcher validate the results found by the other.

The survey was conducted solely by UVM students working with the Vermont Public Interest Research Group's University of Vermont students, which is run by students here at the University. It is hoped that the survey will enable shoppers (especially off-campus students using off-campus) to get more for their

the country as a whole?

A. I believe that his chances are poor in Vermont, because Vermont has been known to be a strong Republican State in the past, and I'm sorry to say that I don't think his chances overall are very good.

Q. Why do you feel the public hasn't reacted as strongly to the Watergate incident, and why don't you think it has had a bigger effect on the Republican Party?

A. First of all I think it speaks poorly for the administration, and for the whole Government, I believe that it gives the public the right to look faith in politicians. I feel that this indicates a need for a change to a more creditable person in the executive office, and also it demands the defeat of the Republican Party.

Q. If elected to the legislature, will you support gun control legislation?

A. That depends on the legislation. I don't feel that blanket control is needed or acceptable. I do believe that we should bar the sale or possession of arms to persons with a record of insanity.

Q. How do you feel about the rapid growth of Vermont, especially the Burlington area? Do you feel there should be legislation to prevent future "jug handles" mass housing and business development?

A. It is my feeling that Vermont needs more and better jobs and income. There is a critical need for a good housing program, however there should be careful controls on this type of development. I feel that vacation home centers and ski areas do nothing for the local job situation or economy. This type of development is done by out of state companies which bring in their own money, most of the money goes out of state. However, some controlled highway expansion is necessary. I think that there should be more development of our State Parks and State Forests. I also believe that a lot of Vermonters are selling out Vermont, which actually they can't be blamed for, because of their low income and the appealing sums of money developers will pay for their land. A possible solution would be to tax capital gains the full rate instead of 1/2 rate, also, monies gained from developed real estate could be put back into the community.

Q. Do you favor an increase of State financial support to U.V.M. since there is a definite need for more than the 21% now received?

A. State funding of higher education is below the National minimum. However, we do spend heavily on primary and secondary education. It is evident that appropriations are not adequate to keep up the best type of undergraduate program. If tuition is kept down, then the undergraduate program will suffer; if the State won't appropriate funds, then let U.V.M. charge full tuition to instate students.

Q. Do you think there is a need for expansion here at U.V.M.?

A. I believe that a library (continued on page ten)

'She-Week': A Revolution Of Awareness

by Jeri Covey

Amid the falling leaves and brisk autumn air last week, a startling revolution was taking place on this campus. It was a revolution of awareness. Most of the participants of She Week (this reporter included) could detect a new wind swirling. Up to now, Women's Lib was considered mainly as a radical extremist view. She Week provided a way of reconciling the need of women for self-awareness and recognition without resorting to extremist tactics.

The amazing aspect of the symposium was the participants. Only one word could adequately describe them as a whole, varied. Not all were women, although most were; they were everything from blue jeans and sneakers to gray hairs and pearls. But, everyone was able to communicate or try to communicate with each other. The range of experience and backgrounds was fantastic, and even though you didn't disagree with someone you found that you could learn from and understand them. The whole thing was a feeling of openness.

The theme and feeling of the week was set on Monday night, a talk by Dr. Gail Parker on "Expanding Lifestyles of Women," but little really happened on the "me-level" until Tuesday and Wednesday nights. A strange thing happened to this usually objective, detached reporter. I found that it was impossible to remain just an observer but became a participant. I went to "cover" the discussion groups on Tuesday night with only the motive of getting a good story, but found it impossible to remain a detached observer in such an open atmosphere. The first group I annexed myself to was fairly simple. Someone recognized me as a CYNIC editor and it was easy just to sit and listen for a while. But by the time I had sat for fifteen minutes in the second group I had randomly picked to join (actually I joined it because it was near the coffee pot) my defenses were breaking down. One of the moderators of the group asked me my name; I stifled the impulse to cop-out and explain that "I'm just a reporter" and bumbled my way through a hasty introduction. (I sincerely doubt if half the women in the group understood what I said but I was caught off-balance by my own reaction.)

By Wednesday night I had reached myself to becoming a participant in the discussion. I walked into "Alternative Careers Night" and instinctively headed for the sign that said "Media." (I suppose a good news reporter should have been able to tell you what the other groups were talking about, but I really didn't care.) I talked with Ruth Page of the "Suburban Set" for a while and found out how (continued on page ten)

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Burlington Master Plan

The proposed Burlington Master Plan will soon be on display in Billings Center. The display includes a copy of the Plan, and a map of the regional divisions in the city and the traffic flow patterns.

Acceptance of the proposed plan will be voted on in Burlington. The Plan will be reviewed in a meeting on October 30 in City Hall Auditorium.

Blood Drive Results Above Last Year's Total

Last week the Ethan Allen Rifles and the Pershing Rifles sponsored a very successful blood drive at Billings Center. The drawing ran for a three day period and 798 pints of blood were donated by students. This is fifty pints above the amount of blood donated last October at a similar drawing held at UVM.

Edward R. Stearn, administrator of the Red Cross Blood Center here in Burlington, said that this "tremendous response couldn't have come at a better time; the center had been swamped with orders but were able to satisfy all the demands thanks to the student-donated blood. Mr. Stearn on behalf of the whole center wanted "to thank all the donors and volunteers for their efforts."

"Millhouse"

UVM students for McGovern are sponsoring the showing of "Millhouse," a 90-minute documentary on Richard Nixon, Nov. 2 at 7:30 in North Lounge. Admission charge is $5.00.

Marriage & Human Sexuality

The Pre-Cana (pre-marriage) Session on October 30, at 7:30 p.m. at the Cunningham Newman Center, will be conducted by Rev. John Guichard. The topic is "Marriage and Human Sexuality."

Hiking, A Chance To

With what may have been a cloud of dust and a hearty "leigho Silver" had it been the Lone Ranger, but was in actuality a cloud of smoke and the roar of an engine, we found ourselves hurtled from the steps of the Outing Club House to somewhere at the base of Mount Adams in just over two hours. We promptly rolled ourselves out of the station wagon, donned packs and hiking boots, blinked, and headed up the mountain. Hiking, A Chance To Rediscover Nature

With what may have been a cloud of dust and a heavy "fog" of rain, the hike to Mount Adams in just over two hours. We promptly rolled ourselves out of the station wagon, donned packs and hiking boots, blinked, and headed up the mountain. Our destination was a cabin a few miles away - I never was very good at exact distances, but it was up there somewhere.

If it was sunny blue skies that you were looking for this was not the day for you. It was overcast and threatened to rain at every step, but rain at the bottom meant snow at the top, and snow is not, after all, so we trudged on. Despite the weather it was a beautiful walk. Near the bottom the colors were blinding, even without the sun, and as we progressed upwards, icicles and ice patterns not only made the path more slippery, but also caused bursts of approval. Some patches of snow were found among rocks and behind rocks until the walk was so punctuated with "neat's" that there was little room for anything else. And it was neat. The waterfalls were incredibly wet/neat! The misty view between clouds was breathtakingly neat. And so after some odd seats, and some odd hours we reached the cabin, where we were greeted by several people and finally rain. There was not enough room for all of us in the cabin so we set up a tent, and two of us slept outside. After a supper of whatever it is that one eats on camping expeditions we went to bed.

I was one of the ones who got to sleep inside, and I fell asleep with the sounds of a howling storm outside, and visions of I knew not what ahead. I woke at one point in the night, and the howling had stopped, so I fell asleep again with complete peace of mind. In the morning I discovered the reason for the silence. The rain had turned to snow, and as I stepped outside I was surrounded by total whiteness. It was like Christmas all over again. It was certainly neat. Because of the weather we couldn't cover the mountain, so we had breakfast and headed down from the cabin. If there had been cause for approval the day before there was double cause this day, because as we slipped and slid and mumbled "neat's" down the mountain, we progressed through a fluffy mist and winter to a curious mixture of snow on trees that hadn't lost their leaves. By the time we reached the bottom the sun was out and shining, but it continued to snow through the sunshine in various places all the way home.

The object of the trip was to climb Mount Madison, which hadn't been climbed by one of us. Well, it still hasn't, but it will be yet. COME TO OUTING CLUB MEETINGS! - Wednesdays, 7:00 p.m., Southwick. ALL WELCOME!

Scandinavian Seminar Accepting Applications

Scandinavian Seminar is now accepting applications for its study abroad program in Denmark, Finland, Norway, or Sweden for the academic year 1973-74. This living-and-learning experience is designed for college students, graduates and other adults who want to become part of another culture while acquiring a second language.

An initial 3 weeks language course, followed by a family stay, will give the student opportunity to practice the language on a daily basis and to share in the life of the community. For the major part of the year he is separated from his fellow American students, living and studying among Scandinavians at a "People's College" (residential school for continuing adult education) or some other specialized institution.

Approximately 400 freshmen students have not picked up their Photo Freshman Registers as yet. These persons have paid for their Registers in advance and should come into the Student Association Office in Billings Center as soon as possible. These are beautiful, hard covered books that are well worth having. Please pick yours up soon!

A Theatre Of The Absurd

Very often in the theatre, the line between comedy and tragedy is very thinly drawn. Tuesday's performance of the Student Association Senate was such an example.

The meeting itself lasted five hours. Five hours. That in itself is indicative of a lack of foresight and proper planning. The climax of the show was reached toward the end of the production. Bill Sisco had finished his "explanation" of the new Financial Policy, which brought Marshall McLuhan to Marsh Lounge for the first time. The Senate then tabled action on the new Financial Policy for one more week. Moving on, the Senators concerned themselves with several resolutions. On one resolution condemning American involvement in the IndoChina War, an amendment was offered changing it from "We, the S.A. Senate..." to "We, the Student Association..." and submitting the resolution to a referendum. The amendment was defeated. The resolution was passed.

So, the S.A. Senate has passed a resolution of itself and wants full publicity. The scene is faintly reminiscent of events in Petrograd, circa 1917. Is the Senate afraid of its own constituents? Are the persons who defeated that amendment fearful of what the opinion of the students is?

How far will the theater of the absurd go?

Billings Abounds In Potential, But Students Rather Complain

by James Anthony Pietrivito

I think it is fitting and proper that the first step in my flight through Student Activities at UVM be at Billings Center, especially since it is where I work from to begin with. At any rate, the Billings Library ceased to be known as such and became the Billings Center with the dedication of the Bailey Library in 1961. The Bulletin of The University of Vermont '72, describes the Billings Center as follows: "The major function of this multi-purpose building is to provide the 'where' for curricular activities in an atmosphere consistent with the goals of the University for individual development. Billings provides facilities for lectures and other programs sponsored by the various student organizations; small group conferences; and recreational activities; and much more." The Billings Center is the heart of the campus.

Before I go into what Billings Center is or isn't, let me present a generalized view of student centers. The Association of College Unions seems to be about the best source for this viewpoint. Most campus agencies which present a general social-cultural-recreational program for a student body have chosen to join this international body since its founding in 1914, and it is among the oldest intercollegiate educational organizations in existence. At its National Conference, 1966, the general membership of the association adopted, "The Role of The College Union," as a statement of purpose. This four-part statement is as follows:

"The Union is the community center of the college, for all members of the college family—students, faculty, administration, alumni and guests. It is not just a building. It is also an organization and a program. Together they represent a well considered plan for the community life of the college."

As the "living room" or the "heartstone" of the college the union provides for the services, conveniences, and amenities the members of the college family need in their daily life on the campus and for getting to know and understand one another through informal associations outside the classroom.

The union is part of the educational program of the college. As the center of college community life, it serves as a laboratory of citizenship, training students in social responsibility and for leadership in our democracy. Through its various boards, committees, and staff, it provides a cultural, social and recreational program aiming to make free time activity, a co-operative factor with study in education. In all its processes it encourages self-directed activity, giving maximum opportunity for self realization and for growth in individual social competency and group effectiveness. Its goal is the development of persons at all levels.

The union serves as a unifying force in the life of the college, cultivating enduring regard for and loyalty to the college.

There are over 180 different types of student unions throughout the country. The various types offer a full range of programs and facilities. Everything from ballrooms to bowling alleys, hotel rooms to study carrels, and rathskellers to recreation rooms. However, it must be made clear that the potential of a union program is directly related to budgetary restrictions and limitations of its physical

McGovern Moves To Low Tactics As Presidential Election Nears

by Dick Parker

The McGovern campaign, faced with a landslide defeat perhaps unequalled in our history, has moved its tactics to a new low in American politics.

Perhaps it is simply the hysterical, hand-wringing tone that McGovern uses which has turned away many of his original supporters. But it probably goes much deeper than that. Consider: McGovern recently attempted to compare the President with Hitler. His bug-out policy on Vietnam, leaving prisoners to the good-will of theanoi regime, appeals to very few. His aides sneeringly refer to middle-class voters as "John Sixpacks", beer-guzzling ignoramuses. McGovern flails about on other issues, attempting to stir up minor matters into great national tragedies.

Mr. Ewen's article (Cynic, Oct. 13) is a case in point. Lacking any real basis to state a case for McGovern, he indulges in a whimsical attempt to distort the President's early record. Jerry Voorhis and Helen Douglas are used as supposed examples of Mr. Nixon's "gross distortion" tactics. The subject of Voorhis is an interesting one, as Voorhis has written a book on Nixon that has to be one of the most vile, slanderous pieces of disgusting garbage ever published. As for communists in government in the late 40's and early 50's, it is a simple matter of record and I invite Mr. Ewen to read some factual information on the subject.

Departing from Nixon, Vice-President Agnew, one of the most courageous men in American politics, comes under the same type of smear attack. Agnew is indicted for having "intimidated the Media." Pity the poor, abused media. But that, again, is not the case. Agnew correctly perceived what a majority had felt for some time: that leftist media were willfully distorting the views and statements of the executive branch to such an extent that the President was not able to get a message directly to the American people. The eastern media block, centered in Washington and New York, has a well-known hatred of Mr. Nixon, irrational though it is. That such bias exists is well documented in a recent study on the subject. It continues to exist, perhaps on a larger scale as a result of the Vice-President's stand. It took considerable courage to speak out against such a powerful group. The Vice-President, in the process, also incurred the wrath of some academicians. Some faculty members on this campus have a complete repertoire of anti-Agnew jokes with which to amuse classes on dull days, thus insuring their good standing in the leftist establishment.

The best that the media could do in response was to scream "censorship", when in fact Agnew clearly stated his belief in a free press. Mr. Ewen overlooks this point.

Meanwhile, the bombing circus that is the McGovern campaign, has remained about as reprobate as far as the press inspecting his background as it has Nixon's. For example, McGovern supported and campaigned for Henry Wallace in 1948, the candidate backed by the American Communist Party. Recently, in an interview, McGovern stated that he "liked what Wallace had to say about foreign policy." This policy was based on attacks on the Marshall plan, which helped rebuild post-war Europe, and apologies for Soviet takeovers in Poland and other countries now satellites of the USSR.

McGovern also made some rather hysterical attacks upon U.S. participation in Korea, implying that the United States started the war there. But little of this record finds its way into the press. Neither have other recent underhanded tactics of the McGovern campaign, such as using campaign offices in California to stage demonstrations and hackles against administration spokesmen, meddling in the return of P.O.W.'s from North Vietnam, and undercutting the President's efforts to negotiate a settlement in Vietnam.

There is also a question of Iran on at least 3 occasions against Nixon campaign offices.

The McGovern campaign stumbling around in confusion in search of an issue to grasp, has proposed and backtracked on nearly every position that McGovern has taken. McGovern distorts his own record on Vietnam, clearly one of political opportunism, as a recent study of his voting record indicated.

The "dike bombing" is another example of his discredited campaign. Logic dictates that if it were policy to destroy dikes they would in fact have been destroyed, yet no single credible source can document such charges. McGovern tried to make much of Ramsey Clark's "evidence", gained on a trip to North Vietnam in which Clark was led around by officials of that genstar regime to supposedly bombed dikes. Other than some typical hand-wringing by the New York Times-Washington Post, many people believed Clark. (Could the electorate be more intelligent than McGovern supposes?)

McGovern continues to discredit himself by his own actions. As for his poor showing in the polls, is it any wonder that a candidate that is embraced by such crazies and lunatics as Rubin, Hoffman, Kunstler, the Berrigans and others of the same ilk is being shunned by responsible voters.

McGovern sent a public relations man to Paris to deal secretly with the North Vietnamese, and then denied it, still later confirming it. He has attacked small businessmen as making too much money, has made a fetish out of raging against corporations showing a profit, proposes defense cuts that would make the United States a second class power in face of expanding Soviet forces. He proposed a $1000 check for everyone, then hedged on it. He cries corruption without any evidence of any. He is for busing in Florida, then later, while in Oregon, is against it. He was particularly unfriendly toward aid to Israel, now he is for it. Is it any wonder that McGovern went through nearly a dozen men before finding one that would run with him?

In a lighter note, I suggest that you McGovern fans would do well to save your campaign posters. Add them to posters you already have of such great comics as Woody Allen and W.C. Fields, so that you will have a complete collection. Show it to your children in a few years, otherwise they might not believe it happened. Put it in a time-capsule, the Martians won't believe it either. But if you haven't got one, rip one off in a hurry. Do it while the clod populist, Mr. "One-Thousand-Percent", is still funny.

Letters To The Editor

Inter-Residence Association Is Alive

To the Editor:

If you have been at all observant these past few weeks at UVM, you may have noticed some new and different things in the way of social activities on campus this semester. Remember all those dances, concerts, indoor and outdoor picnics the first two weeks? Or maybe you heard a rumor about a mini-course in pottery being offered, or seen stakes for volleyball nets going up? The organization to praise, or blame, for all this is IRA—the Inter-Residence Association.

In general, IRA's responsibilities include acting as the student government of the dorms and improving student living and working conditions in all practical ways. IRA's governing duty has been hampered somewhat by the apathy of some dorms toward the election of their representatives to the association, so many students living on campus are without a voice and vote at the Council of the Inter-Residence Association.

practically all of the dorms have representatives on the Council. IRA has put together (or is in the process of doing so) programs geared to enhance college life. Two special committees have been formed, one to work on constructing and equipping a craft shop for woodworking, leather tooling and other skills, and the other, the Saga Food Committee, to establish better relations and provide a communications channel between students and the dining hall management. The IRA Council has also voted to allocate funds for equipment in a bicycle repair shop being established in the basement of Robinson Hall, which all students on campus will be invited to use. Coming in early November are other IRA sponsored activities: a forum on parapsychology and the occult, and a concert-dance. The environmental dorm's showing of Sierra Club films will probably also be supported in part by the Association.

The Inter-Residence Association can be a powerful student governmental body on campus. It has the potential; all it needs is some student interest and participation. If you think you would like to work on a project, have some ideas or complaints, or just want to see what we're doing with your money (the IRA fee), please feel free to contact your dorm representative, or just show up at our next meeting. The Council gets together every Monday night at 7:00 in the Harris-Millis conference-recreation room.

Liberty Union Seeks Answers To 1972 Issues

by William Bowman

The Liberty Union Party is a third party effort, and as such is able to talk about important issues (something the Republicans and Democrats never seem to do). There are three candidates running for the legislature from Burlington, under the Liberty Union umbrella; they are: John Chaplin—District 1-3, Pierre Sargent—District 1-2, and Dave Mahan—District 1-8.

The Republicans, Democrats, and "The Burlington Free Press" would like to deny the Liberty Union Party any credibility, but they need no support from those sources. There is an alternative in Vermont this year, consider it.

The following was taken from a Liberty Union campaign flyer:

"This country is facing the greatest moral crisis in its history. While we spend close to half our national budget—some 70 to 80 billion dollars a year—to napalm children in Vietnam and to support corrupt military dictatorships throughout the world, one-third of the people in Vermont are living below the federal guideline for poverty and thousands of workers spend 60 hours a week trying to keep their families alive while earning starvation wages."

"While a hundred individuals and families maintain personal fortunes of $100,000,000 or more, hospital beds cost $70 a day and thousands of children in Vermont are losing their teeth because their families can't afford dental care."

"While there is a tragic housing shortage throughout the state and Vermonters are forced into trailers or forced to pay outrageously high rents, 7 percent of our workers, who could be building low cost housing, are unemployed."

"While out of state developers continue to buy up the state, the price of land is soaring so high that it is becoming impossible for Vermonters to buy and live on their own state. An on and on it goes..."

"This nation, and this state, have the resources to provide a decent standard of living for every man, woman, and child. But we aren't doing that. And the reason we aren't doing that is because the people who own this state, and this country, maintain their wealth and power at the expense of the vast majority of the people by providing the funds necessary to elect the politicians of both major parties who support this unequitable system."

Time For More Than Mere Tokenism

by George Santiago

The University of Vermont has always had minorities in its student population. But, just last year they started recruiting them.

At the moment the university has about 80 minority students, as compared to 8,000-9,000 white Anglo's. Three years ago UVM had only 7 minority students. Plus they have a quota admitting a 30 per year under the special program.

The only beautiful thing is that we get a variety of ethnic groups that are under the umbrella of the Third World. We have Puerto Ricans, Blacks, orientals, Cuban, Dominicans, and many more.

But, not only 1, but other people, feel it's time the university stops accepting only 30 tokens and increase the minority population.

As election day nears, the political country is assuming paradoxical forms. The two major parties are falling over each other for everyone and everything, taking the issues, competing each other's throat in surpassing one another in the opportunism.

Many voters on campus, party activists, are rallied under the McGovern support, however, has declined in a spring primaries because of McGovern's rights of women, gays, amnesty, and unclear stand on the war. Ask any about any issue. He or she will go position last week, his position today position... which most of the time con-

There is one problem with McGovern's campaign of Linda Jennings and Socialist Workers Party. Since the August, 1971, Jennings and Palley have been the Republicans and Democrats perspective in common—that the ind the Women's, Gays, Black and Chicano anti-war movements are a serious and privilege of American corporate class.

As everyone knows, there is a great between what a politician says and what a President Nixon is a fine example. A there would be no tax increase next year meant was that there would be no tax. Presumably, Congress might increase it stop the action. There is also a great between what a politician says and what he actually does do once elected.

1968 he promised to balance the budget to be able to carry on with deficit spending. I don't want to pick on Mr. Nixon the rule, not the exception. I used McGovern was the exception, but it revealed to me has changed my mind. McGovern's position on President The Senator has publicly stated that the major obstacle to peace in Vietnam would no longer support him.

However, the other night I received from a woman who said she had come to, "Who is this?" I demanded, "An meat such an odd hour?"

"Be quiet!" she snapped back. "An she proceeded to play a tape recording between Senator McGovern and President Thieu."

It went something like this: "Hello, President Thieu?" "Yes, who is this?" "This is George McGovern."

"George McGovern? Why are you calling me?" "I just called to reassure you and believe everything you hear or say. Regardless of what I have been saying to you. Although I will have to eventually power if I get elected, you will be the one who will be elected."

"I'm glad to hear that. Those Nixon and reports on Walter Cronkite said tell you the truth, and promise you Nixon this. I'd really like to tell something with a little more security."

"He'll never hear it from me. He's in power for a little while, as I replacement. It seems everytime I job these past few months they have."

"When you do find someone, call me. I've heard that I can get on welfare subsidy."

It's Illogical, But Holmes Triumphs Again

By Margo Howland

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle would turn in his grave. What can the great Victorian detective and his colleague still be rattling around London in homespun coats in the middle of World War II?

By all the laws of nature and science, logic and reason, this plot is all wrong. Holmes is a Victorian man, an inhabitant of a bygone age in which telephones, aeroplanes and Rolls-Royces play no part. Yet we find Holmes in Switzerland aiding the eminent Swiss scientist, Dr. Torgel, in keeping his top-secret invention—a bomb mechanism—out of the hands of Professor Moriarty and the Nazis. And faithful Dr. Watson burns the midnight oil at 221B Baker Street, waiting for developments on the case.

Professor Moriarty? Nazis? This is 1943, and Holmes should be eighty-nine years old!

Sherlock Holmes and the Secret Weapon would be decidedly confusing to any unfamiliar with the famous British consulting detective (played by Basil Rathbone) and his collaborator, Dr. John Watson (played by Nigel Bruce).

One must consider that Holmes and Watson appear in their best light in their own time, period of the eighteen-eighties to the turn of the century. While the idea that Holmes and Watson could actually grow old is somewhat disturbing, nevertheless there is something very odd in being called fifty years out of the past and not aging a hair in the process!

Universal Pictures can perhaps justify this great liberty by the argument that if Holmes and Watson were alive and well in 1943 they would certainly come to the defense of their country.

The thread of patriotism runs through this story and appears in Watson's heroic attempt to defend Baker Street from supposed secret agents who would steal the precious invention; it appears, in the

Marx Comedies Received With Mixed Emotions

By Nina Carson

It's a funny thing about audiences.

The two audiences which I was part of for A Night at the Opera were absolutely polarized in their responses to the movie. The first showing provoked at least ten of what verged very close on standing ovations. The second (granted, on a bleak Sunday afternoon in an overused hall) drew only pitiful laughter, mostly in recognition of some old tired slapstick gag.

The verbal humor was granted very short shrift by this wary audience. I couldn't figure it, I think, though, that it might be the type of film that makes it with an audience or doesn't, depending on whether the Marxes have previously made it or not with the same group. It does slightly at our indulgence, which is something that others for the most part have avoided doing. It is a little mushy, and not up to par comedically in the same way as some of the others were.

Anyway let me tell you what I know about the background of this movie, culled from about five different sources, probably all more or less inaccurate. However I am told that Reality is to be found at the intersection of Planes of Appearance, so, hoping that this convenient axiom by true, I shall proceed. The incredible Thalberg of MGM decided to sign the Marxes after they'd been out of work about a year. He'd decided that there were ways to make their pictures successful at the box office which had previously gone untapped. So he got them their favorite team of writers, and the writers got them a plot and a couple of solid songs ("Alone" was at the top of the charts for a while—how do you like that as a bit of illuminative history?) and they were in business. All of them. Sure enough, the movie made more money than any of their others had by a long shot.

It really is an excellent movie, as movies go. The music is essential, the supporting cast is essential (and not bad, I like that).

Lane Series Will Provide Unusual Elizabethan Program

One of the most unusual programs ever to appear on the Lane Series will be offered on Thursday, Nov. 2, at 8:30 pm, in Memorial Auditorium.

This concert will be "An Entertainment for Elizabeth," an Elizabethan masque billed as a Renaissance spectacle celebrating the union of poetry, song, dance and music which made the Elizabethan court the wonder of its age. Producing the performance, and appearing in it, will be the New York Pro Musica.

Tickets, $3.75, $4.50, $5.25, and $6, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. Reservations may be made by telephoning 656-3418.

Conceived by John Reeves White, "An Entertainment for Elizabeth" will be performed by a cast of 24. Richly costumed and staged against a tapestry, suggesting the last decades of the House of Tudor, "Elizabeth" is produced with the kind of care and attention to detail that characterized the Pro Musica's performances of The Play of Daniel and The Play of Herod.

"John" Hollander, the innovative young poet who has created the text for "Elizabeth," is a master of Renaissance literature and music. Witty and topical, his poetry is a perfect foil for the delightful music of Pro Musica's instrumentalists and singers, which itself accompanies and embellishes the dancing. The dances of the Renaissance are executed by nine dancers under the tutelage of Julia Sutton, noted authority on the history of the dance.

The world premiere of "Elizabeth" was given at Caramoor, in Katona, N.Y. in June, 1969. The reactions of the New York critics were predictably rapturous, for there was little doubt the latest effort of the New York Pro Musica, founded in 1953 by the late Noah Greenberg, was a masterpiece more than its two previous medieval musical-dramas. Wrote the critic of the New York Times of "Elizabeth": "All the ingredients were carefully prepared and excellently performed... The Pro Musica deserves admiration and gratitude." And Alan Rich, music critic of the New York Magazine, reported, "It was simply beautiful. The dances were wonderful to behold. The music was ravishing."

During the 1950-71 season, "Elizabeth" took its place in the regular touring repertoire of the Pro Musica, receiving enthusiastic reviews on both coasts and culminating their tour with two performances at Hunter College in New York City. The response was so tremendous they were invited back to Hunter last year and are returning again this season for two performances.

In Elizabethan and early Stuart England the masque was a type of theatrical performance at court and in great households on festive occasions, especially in honor of a high-ranking guest. In form, the masque resembled a pageant rather than a drama. Unified by an allegorical or mythological concept, the masque presented, in poetry, song and dance, a progress from the chaos caused by the absence of some virtue to the triumphant vindication of that virtue and often to a purification of the world.

As its name suggests, the masque centered around the masked or "disguised" dancers, titled performers whose dancing transformed into the beauty of motion the philosophy the poet had expressed in the beauty of his lines. Dances performed for the dramatic portion of the masque ranged from processional dances at the beginning and end, to disorderly dances done in the time of chaos, to elaborate patterned dances intended to celebrate the triumph of virtue by showing forth the beauty of design in an orderly world.

"Elizabeth" sets out to re-create the splendor of such a private masque as it might have been performed in honor of Queen Elizabeth I nearly 400 years ago. Since an authentic Elizabethan masque text would have required undue explanation to clarify the topical allusions for a modern audience, the American poet John Hollander was commissioned to write a text after the manner of an Elizabethan masque. The text of An Entertainment for Elizabeth, like its models, uses the allegorical framework and the contemporary references in the service of a neo-Platonic ideal of order and beauty. All other aspects of "Elizabeth" are as accurately Elizabethan as modern scholarship can make them. Presented with the care for continuity and dramatic immediacy that has been a hallmark of New York Pro Musica Productions.

Listening To The

ROCK OF AGES

The Band (Capitol SABH 1045)

Like all great music, that of the Band has multi-layered depth. If it lacks anything, it's the surface accessibility of a band of equally magnificent stature, the Allman Brothers. Listening to the Band is a cerebral experience rather than a visceral one. The Band doesn't grab you—you have to make an effort to see what they're doing, but the rewards for doing that are well worth the effort.

Manuel, Robertson, Helm, Danko and Hudson are each sufficiently conscious of their role within the group so as to be able to play his individual role while simultaneously and probably without consciously interacting with the others, resulting in a sound in which the patterns played by each instrument fit with the others like the parts of a puzzle.

But their music isn't so static as a puzzle nor as restrained as it may seem at first. The Band simply knows how to channel their ideas and their energy to the best effect. The empathy between these

University Players To Hold Tryouts

University Players, the UVM theatre honorary, will present as its 1973 production Christopher Marlowe's THE TRAGICALL HISTORIE OF DR. FAUSTUS on January 25 through 29 next semester.

Due to the complexity of the play and the production, casting will be done this semester. Readings for the play will be held on November 7 (Tuesday) and November 8 (Wednesday) in Marsh Lounge in Billings Center. Readings will begin at 7:30 pm both nights. Scripts will be available at the tryouts but it is advisable to read the play beforehand. The play is available at the library and in anthologies used in the English Department classes.

This production needs many people. The cast will be about forty or fifty people strong. The technical crew will be almost as large. Not only do we need actors (men especially) but we need people willing to sew, paint, sculpt, carve, and carpenter. Even if you do not want to act, please stop by to let us know what you would like to do. There is more than enough to keep people busy. Rehearsals start December 27. For further information call 656-2029.

1972 Ariel More Disappointing

There are two major disappointments in the 1972 edition of the ARIEL, the first is talent and the second is unity. On looking through the book you get the impression that the editors had two hundred and eight pages to fill and really didn't care what they put on them. You are enormously aware of the vast amount of white space on the pages; I suppose that to draw attention to the emptiness you could say that it was for "artistic" effect. However, it leaves you with the feeling that the yearbook staff had an embarrassing shortage of photos taken. Aside from the lack of talent displayed, looking through the book from cover to cover leaves you with the feeling "I suppose the pictures were nice, but they just didn't say anything as a whole." You are particularly struck by the irrelevance of the picture on the front cover, a shot of an old man (I suppose a janitor) sitting, with protruding stomach, god-knows where (I suppose a classroom). If I were a graduate of the 1972 Class, my first question would be "what the hell does he have to do with me and my experiences at UVM?" Maybe the sports...

and Sandy Dennis. The Burtons play the roles of Martha and George, a self-destructive vulgar campus couple who share with their young visitors a Walpurgis Night of fun and games, ending in exorcism. The subject and dialogue was kept so close to the original stage play that Jack L. Warner, then head of Warner Bros., established an "adults only" policy for the film, prohibiting exhibitors from admitting anyone under the age of 18 unless accompanied by a parent. This policy was before the now-familiar MPAA rating system had been introduced by the industry. Films scheduled for the rest of the semester include OH WHAT A LOVELY WAR (November 4), LOOK BACK IN ANGER (November 11), Bergman's THE SEVENTH SEAL (November 18), his first "cinéma vérité" effort, FATTY (December 3), and and stars Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton, George Segal (December 9).

Photogenic Face Scholarship Offered

A Five Hundred Dollar cash scholarship is being offered to the young woman judged to possess the most Photogenic Face. The award is offered by an anonymous donor who feels the existing beauty contests do not afford sufficient opportunity for the young woman whose main talent is merely being lovely. The state-by-state search is of women between the ages of 17 and 29 who may possibly not qualify as beauty title existing (State or City Miss America title, Miss Universe, etc.) for reasons of size measurements, talent, marital status or personal modesty, but who still possess outstanding beauty and who could benefit from the cash award. The rules include the completion of an entry form and that the contestant or those entering her submit a recent photograph for judging and a nominal entry fee. Application material and contest instructions may be secured by writing the Administrator, NATIONAL PHOTO SCHOLARSHIPS, Box 4335, Columbia, South Carolina, 29240. Deadline for entries is December 1, 1972.

Padre Rievera To Stay At Newman Center

A Spanish priest who has spent the last several years of his life in the province of Quiché in North Central Guatemala will spend the weekend at the Cunningham Newman Center, Redstone Campus. Padre Jose Rievera is spending the week with a group of men who are working with the poor of Guatemala. Although these men are priests and brothers and are involved with the religious needs of the people, their work goes much further. They help to develop and run credit unions, agricultural cooperatives, other cooperatives, health clinics, schools and many other activities. One of their members is presently helping a group of the poorest to develop an agricultural cooperative in the depths of the jungle. Padre Rievera is presently attending a Community development course at the Coady Institute of St. Francis Xavier.

'A Walk For The Hungry'

On the first Sunday in December, everyone in the Burlington area will have a chance to take part in and witness to A Walk for the Hungry. The walk is sponsored by CROP, an ecumenical group for World Service to the Hungry, but is planned and carried out by the local community. It is hoped that the UVM Community will see this as a worthwhile cause, and will want to take part, in some way in the Walk for the Hungry. We look forward to seeing a large group at the Thursday evening meeting. 26th, at 8:00 p.m. Chris Podes, a Junior on the UVM Campus, was named as the chairman of the last organizational meeting. She can be reached at 104 Wilks Hall (tel. 656-2441) for any additional information on the Walk. It is hoped that the UVM Community will see this as a worthwhile cause, and will want to take part, in some way in the Walk for the Hungry. We look forward to seeing a large group at the Thursday evening meeting.

UVM Skating

Joining Miss Levitt this year is Miss Kathleen Ryan, a sophomore at Vermont, and a former member of the R.P.I. Figure Skating Club of Troy, N.Y. Miss Ryan will be an assistant instructor. The school will offer classes for the beginning, intermediate and advanced skater. Each skater will be assigned to a specific time and class, and each skater will have a supervised practice session for one hour and 20 minutes following each of their lessons. Cost of the seven-week sessions is $21.00 to be paid the day of pre-school registration. Once again, Miss Barbara Levitt of Troy, N.Y., physical education major at Vermont, will be the head instructor. The talented skater is a member of the Professional Skaters Guild of America and specializes in figures and free style skating.

SA Discusses Financial Policy

(continued from page one) Burlington to adopt an ordinance similar to that of Ann Arbor, Michigan. Gene Beaudoin, former S.A. President raised the point that a motion by Student Association concerning mergers should be an intermediary step or culmination of a long series of events and negotiations leading to hopeful legislation. The Senate tabled the resolution again for a week. The discussion of an anti-war resolution; motion S.14, centered around the point whether the University should assume a definite political role in the community instead of the neutral one it now takes. An amendment was added to the resolution requiring full publicization of the S.A. position. Another motion was offered by Dick Cassidy changing the resolution from one of the S.A. Senate to that of the Student Association, and submitting the question to a student referendum. The amendment was defeated, but the resolution as a whole was passed. The Senate then considered another anti-war resolution, S.15, a resolution to repeal anti-abortion laws, S.12, and a motion to conduct an investigation into the financial policy of the UVM Bookstore, S.18. All of these were passed. The problems cited in regard to the bookstore was that it has a virtual monopoly on campus; the store's profit sharing was also brought into question. A motion to investigate the more effective use of student members on the Board of Trustees and a policy selecting these members was passed. Under new business, a motion was made to donate $3,000 immediately to Medical Aid to IndoChina. The sponsor called for suspension of the rules and an immediate vote, however the Senate voted to follow normal procedures and delay action. Following the explanation of the 14-page policy statement, a motion was passed tabling the matter until next week for further discussion and voting. Discussion then moved to the other motions proposed at the previous meeting of the Senate. The first was a proposed resolution concerning the private possession of marijuana and the regulation of private affairs. The motion urges The city fathers of

VPIRG To Sponsor Conference

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group will sponsor the Vermont Consumers' Health Conference on October 28, 1972, at the Christ Church on State Street in Montpelier, from 9 AM to 6 PM. The purpose of the conference is to coordinate the movement to make health care a local and national priority and to explore means for providing more effective health care to the people of Vermont. There will be six workshops dealing with Child Services, Occupational Health and Safety, Women's Health, Economics of Health Care, Community Health Projects, and a Medical Committee for Human Rights. Everyone is welcome to attend and participate. If anyone is interested in attending the Vermont Consumers' Health Conference and needs transportation to Montpelier, contact Jeff Ewen at 863-3280.

AFROTC Meeting

University of Vermont students interested in opportunities in the St. Michael's College Air Force ROTC program are invited to attend an informational meeting at 8 p.m. Wednesday, Nov. 8, in the Memorial Lounge of Waterman Building. An announcement from the SMC AFROTC program is available to UVM students who have at least two years of college remaining as of next September.

Liberty Union Candidate For Governor Is Interviewed

University is a Mecca to the good life. We would like to see changes in getting to what education is really about and de-emphasism on pieces of paper, college degrees. Q. One of the main issues of this campaign and, specifically, of the Liberty Union Party, is that of land reform and the problem of large corporation buying property in Vermont. Could you comment on this? A. This is a very serious problem in this state. In the last ten years, the price of land has skyrocketed. What's happened primarily is that big money has come in and bought up huge tracts of land and started development. As a result of that, land values go up, prices go up and so forth. And Vermonters, people that have lived here all their lives, can't afford to buy land—the prices are too high. We've said that we are 100% opposed to real estate speculation. If somebody wants to buy a piece of land in this state to live on it, then that's fine. But we don't think that the land in this state should be used for profit. I think the problem is complex and I have a simple solution, that I will do all I can to stop the use of land for a quick buck. Q. What would you recommend as basic changes in Vermont's tax structure? A. I think the state of Vermont, like any state, has basic economic problems. Over a third of the people of Vermont live below the Federal Department of Labor's statistics definition of poverty. Things need to be done. Where are we going to get the money to do that? We have said, (and I have campaigned on this and the other candidates have not) is that the state of Vermont cannot follow the economic program of any other state. These things will have to be solved on a national level. Every single day, the military in this country spends two hundred million dollars to support a military dictatorship in Viet Nam. We don't need a military budget like that. It seems to me that a governor of Vermont, or any other state, should say, "Hey, you can't spend two hundred million dollars a day on the military when we need money back home." That's Vermonters' tax money and that money should come right back home. In the state of Vermont, we have a regressive tax system, that is, working people pay far too much taxes than they should. We need to reverse that whole trend and begin to tax corporations. We've got to revise the property tax absolutely because it hits much too much of the working people. Q. Would you advocate any changes in the welfare system? A. Sure would, welfare is a bad deal all around. It doesn't provide enough for the people on welfare, it keeps them in poverty. It antagonizes the working people, who work very hard. On the other hand, there are many Vermonters, kids, who want to go to college and they can't get it. I don't mean to condemn you, but I don't see any more that the Liberty Union is to provide a decent standard of living for

Environmental Fellowships Available

The National Wildlife Federation has announced that Environmental Conservation Fellowships are available to foster study in natural resource management and related fields. Study areas for fellowships include ecosystem analysis and modeling for natural resource management; range management; economics of natural resource conservation; forestry; conservation education; marine resources; pollution control and abatement; soil conservation; park administration and management; outdoor recreation; public relations and journalism (with conservation emphasis); NWF and the American Petroleum Institute jointly funded studies involving an interface between petroleum and the management and conservation of natural resources. An applicant must be accepted as a graduate student in a doctoral degree program at an accredited college or university as of the September following the time of the application. The applicant must be a citizen of the United States, however, awards may be used for study abroad. Any awards will cover a nine-month academic year, September-June. A new application will be considered for renewal at the end of the academic year. Stipends will be granted up to $4,000 for students working on doctoral or postdoctoral study. Mid-year progress reports and final reports from faculty advisers will be required, as well as a copy of any thesis or research report when completed. Selection will be made by the NWF Board of Directors upon recommendation of the NWF Scholarship Committee. Criteria for selection are relevant previous training, academic standing and other required credentials, including satisfactory recommendations, value of proposed study to conservation and related fields, and need for financial assistance. The deadline for applications is December 31, 1972. For applications and further information, write to: Executive Vice President, National Wildlife Federation, 1412 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

Liberty Union Candidate For Governor Is Interviewed

by Barbara Frankel Bernard Sanders, Liberty Union candidate for Governor, was interviewed by this reporter on October 23. The following are excerpts from the interview. Q. What do you think the role of a third party is in Vermont politics? A. Let me start out by saying that there is no question in my mind that we're going to do much better than we've ever done before. The feedback that we've been getting lately is incredible. If people vote their consciences, instead of constantly compromising and saying as they do to me, "I agree with what you're saying but I'm going to vote for Salmon"; if people stand up to their principles, we're going to do extraordinarily well. At this point I would not say that it's likely that I can win, but I think it's not even impossible. It's a three-way race, so 35% to win. I'm not saying we are going to win, but we're running very hard. We're in it to win. What's made us strong and what's made us good is that what we say is the function of politicians should not be just to get elected. Somebody has got to stand up and say what they believe, regardless of how the votes go. The reason why less than 30% of the people participated in the primary, as they did here in Vermont, is that they have a contempt for politicians now. We say, you may not agree with everything we say, but this is what we believe. Q. What do you think the real difference between Tom Salmon and Fred Hackett is? A. Well, I would say that Fred is a typical Vermont conservative, running in the tradition of Deane Davis, with strong ties to the business establishment, very conservative about the issues. I should also say that I think Fred is a good man and an honest man. Tom is a liberal, who's having a very tough time of it. He wants to go on as a conservative Republican, who is disenchanted with think anyone that the First Woman Academic Dean Has Varied Background Of Experience

Dr. Jeannette R. Folts is the Assistant Dean in the University of Vermont College of Arts and Sciences, and the first woman to be an academic dean in UVM's history.

She is also a psychiatric nurse, a flight nurse, a sociologist, a teacher, an author, and for one summer was an amateur archaeologist at the Mayan ruins of Chichen Itza in Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula.

She sees a logical development in most of her career: "I became interested in psychiatry during a high school field trip to a veteran's hospital. There's a natural connection between psychiatry and sociology — people and their behavior — and the therapeutic side of nursing is akin to sociology."

Professional publication and educational administration follow logically from her teaching career, she feels, and as for archaeology, "I was in high school and thought digging in the jungle would be amusing. It wasn't."

She started recently as Assistant Dean to Arts and Sciences Dean John G. Weger, and already the merger of seeing a woman in the Dean's office is wearing off.

"Students," she says, "are more likely to ignore this kind of thing than the faculty or parents. In any event, now that I'm getting known it makes less and less difference. There are no particular advantages or disadvantages to being a woman in this job."

Dean Folts is a native of Massachusetts and studied for her nursing diploma at Burbank Hospital School of Nursing in Fitchburg, Mass. She received the B.S. degree in psychiatric nursing from Boston University, and the Ph.D. in sociology in 1963 from the University of Washington, Seattle.

Her career has included extensive experience in nursing — "I worked as a nurse while I was studying for my Ph.D." — and as a psychiatric instructor, clinical instructor, general staff nurse and educational director with the U.S. Air Force Nurse Reserve Corps.

As a sociologist, she has been an associate instructor, research assistant, co-director of a research training program in social psychiatry at the University of California San Francisco Medical Center, and a visiting professor at the University of Alberta, Canada.

Before joining the UVM faculty in 1969, in a joint appointment as associate professor of professional nursing, sociology and psychiatry, she was an associate professor in the Boston University School of Nursing and the BU department of sociology.

Her present UVM position is Assistant Dean and associate professor of sociology.

She has published extensively on both nursing and sociology topics, including both articles and texts, and especially on her area of primary interest — "the sociology of death and dying."

which was featured last April in a Burlington Free Press profile by Elizabeth Kirkness.

She remains professionally active in both nursing and sociology, and has a growing reputation in both fields. Last year she traveled to Lublin, Poland, at the invitation of the UN's World Health Organization to establish a college nursing program — the first in the socialist block of nations — and next spring she has been invited to deliver a paper at the International Council of Nurses to be held in Mexico City.

Does she plan to stay in educational administration? "I can't say. This isn't the first job I've had in administration but I don't plan to let myself be drawn away completely from my professional interests in nursing and sociology."

She does, however, have a ready answer for her short-term plans: "Getting ready for the conference in Mexico — the city, that is, not the jungle."

1972 Ariel Provides Proves More Disappointing Than Rewarding

By Jeff Covey

There are two major components lacking in the 1972 edition of the ARIEL, the first is talent and the second is unity. On looking through the book you get the impression that the editors had two hundred and eight pages to fill and really didn't care what they put on them. You are enormously aware of the vast amount of white space on the pages; I suppose that if the layout wasn't so bad as to draw attention to the emptiness you could say that it was for "artistic" effect. However, it leaves you with the feeling that the yearbook staff had an embarrassing shortage of photographs taken.

Aside from the lack of talent displayed, looking through the book from cover to cover leaves you with the feeling "I suppose the pictures were nice, but they just didn't say anything as a whole." You are particularly struck by the irrelevance of the picture on the front cover, a shot of an old man (I suppose a janitor) sitting, with protruding stomach, god-knows-where (I suppose a class room). If I were a graduate of the 1972 Class, my first question would be "what the hell does he have to do with me and my experiences at UVM?" Maybe the editors of the ARIEL have lost view of the idea of a yearbook as a relating of happenings and notions about the graduating students. This yearbook does not seem aware that the graduating students are individual people and not just mug shots, and a name. There were some good candid shots of students (however some were of underclassmen) but certainly not nearly enough. I wonder how many people in the pictures the average graduate of 1972 can recognize. I suppose the editors of the 1972 ARIEL could counter with the argument that with such a big graduating class it's just impossible to portray things that every person can relate to, however previous yearbooks, particularly the 1970 ARIEL, seemed to be able to overcome this problem.

Another thing noticeably lacking from ARIEL 1972 is that they made absolutely no reference to the Greek name societies or other organizations on campus. Whether or not you agree with the Greek system or belong to the Debate Club or whatever does not matter, but they are certainly a viable part of this university and should certainly not be ignored. I am rather surprised that the staff did not ignore the sports teams.

The "section" on Winter Week is another laugh. You aren't quite sure what is what. Winter Week may not have been the greatest thing that happened at UVM, but I certainly have better memories of it than the drab, lifeless pictures portray. The staff could have added some pictures of students enjoying themselves at the parties or the concerts or just around the campus. I am also curious as to how the editors decided which special events to focus on, the ones portrayed were not the only ones, not the only Lane Series, and not the only plays that took place during the year. For instance there was the Byrds concert and the highly popular play "Flea in Her Ear" to name just two.

The only bright spot that I see as I write this review is the last page. "Live each day to the fullest. Get the most from each hour, each day, and each age of your life. Then you can look forward with confidence, and back without regrets." It is too bad that the editors did not take a look at this quote before they started, instead of leaving it as promising footnote. At least you can be sure that no matter what next year's ARIEL will be like, it can't be much worse.

Body Mapping

Body mapping — a technique for developing interpersonal relationships — is being used in a University of Vermont education course to help students "find out what learning is and how it can be used."

Students in "foundations of education," an introductory course taught by Profs. Harry McEntee and Frank Watson, and John H. McCollum, examine the process of learning at its most basic level through the mapping process.

Each student is assigned a partner for the project; the partners first trace the outlines of each other's bodies on wrapping paper, then conduct extensive interviews to become mutually familiar with attitudes and backgrounds.

After the interviews are completed, the students scan magazines for illustrations that fit their reactions to the student interviewed.

For example, if a student feels that his partner is particularly methodical and precise, he might select a picture of a machine to be clipped out and pasted over the part of his partner's body outline corresponding to the brain.

Professor Watson explained that the body-mapping technique "is really an offshoot of a technique of art education, in which collages were made to portray human personality. The process is described in the text we're using for this course — 'Will the Real Teacher Please Stand Up?' by Glee Rubinstein."

Students Urgently Needed For Billings Center Governing Board

by Dan Haslam

Concern has been expressed by Terrance Demas, a member of the Billings Governing Board, and Karen Wedge, Director of Student Activities, over the lack of student interest and participation in the Billings Governing Board.

Demas feels that Billings "should be a place where things are going on." Ms. Wedge agrees and adds that its "function is to serve all students." Billings being the only building on campus devoted completely to students, they recognize the first priority of a student union to be involving and interesting the talents and creativity of the student body.

The Governing Board is dedicated to these same ideals. There are eight areas in which the board operates. They entail exhibitions, speaker forums, and musical presentations, as well as theater, recreation, and the Roundhouse. In addition, there is a publicity committee available to all the board members.

area and a group to sponsor special events.

This academic year is a year of experimentation for the Billings Governing Board, since in the past it has existed as a clearing house for organizations which have expressed a wish to appear in Billings. However, this year an effort will be made by the board to solicit those activities which will most benefit students. The board would be knowledgeable about the best possible use of the building for lighting, acoustics, and general arrangements for any activity to take place, as well as to screen the type of activity to be presented.

An effort is being made to attract students to work on the board in any area of their interest. Applications are available at the Student Activities in Billings. No previous experience is necessary, neither time and ideas of better programming in Billings are needed.

QUESTION: I understand that penicillin is widely used in the treatment of venereal disease. Speaking in terms of those who are allergic to penicillin, is this the only treatment, or is it the least expensive and time consuming?

ANSWER: In the treatment of syphilis, penicillin is the drug of choice since it is highly effective, but there are several other antibiotics that are also effective for those people that are allergic to penicillin. Some of these drugs might require more prolonged treatment but this is not a major obstacle to their use.

In the treatment of gonorrhea, by far the most common venereal disease, penicillin is usually the drug of choice. However, the gonorrhea organism has become more and more resistant to penicillin, requiring larger and larger doses. Some forms of gonorrhea do not respond to penicillin and definitely require other antibiotics. In the treatment of gonorrhea, penicillin has several advantages. Usually, one injection takes care of the infection, an important consideration as people are notoriously lax about taking medicine regularly or returning for follow-up shots. Also, it is inexpensive and an incubating case of syphilis can be simultaneously eliminated. Recently, a new one shot antibiotic has become available for treating gonorrhea, but it does not stamp out syphilis.

In no case, does allergy to penicillin condemn the victim or friend(s) to chronic suffering.

QUESTION: I have been hearing quite a bit about eye exercises. Do they actually improve your vision? If they do, where can I find out about them? I have been rolling my eyes around regularly for about a week now and noticed no change. I have worn glasses for about eight years now, but have only begun to wear them consistently for the past six months. I need the glasses for distant vision. I am 24 years old and read about eight hours a day.

ANSWER: Simple myopia (nearsightedness) is a very common biological variant. The current explanation for the development of myopia is that the eyeball elongates excessively during growth so that the lens of the eye is unable to sharply project distant objects on the retina. Near vision is less impaired, or not impaired at all, since the distance from the lens to the retina is still well suited to cast a sharp image of near objects. As well, there is some failure on the part of the lens to undergo changes which would compensate for the elongation of the eye.

Hereditary plays some role in the development of simple myopia and some people think that this is the chief factor, with close work and reading a secondary factor. Other studies have shown that people who read a great deal are more prone to develop myopia than people who do not read a great deal. There have been all sorts of studies in academic communities showing a worsening of myopia from undergraduates to graduate school. A Japanese ophthalmologist who has studied the problem for many years maintains that there was a high rate of myopia among Japanese school children due to the intense concentration on the 5,000 or so figures that they had to memorize to be able to read. He stated that once large numbers of these figures were eliminated and their form simplified, the incidence of myopia fell. But, nutrition appears to play some part and protein deprived people are prone to develop myopia as well, so improvements could also be due to a better diet.

A variety of treatments have been suggested, ranging from surgery to vitamins to exercise. Studies have not shown any of these to be successful. Eye exercises have been very popular, and some people have been convinced that their

Reaction To The Column

"As first, it caused quite a stir among the departmental secretaries and clerks (one secretary said she thought it was 'in humor' with), but we figure the paper is not for them anyway. The students greatly anticipate it on Fridays, read it first thing, and often aloud to each other in the College Center, howling together."

TOWSON ST. TOWERLIGHT

"The doctor was attacked last year in the state legislature. (Michigan) State Senator Robert J. Huber said the (Michigan State University) STATE NEWS had hit "rock bottom" by publishing his column. State Representative Joseph M. Snyder called one of the columns "indecipherable filth."

NATIONAL INSIDER

"We make it a point to publish most of your answers that are concerned with sex, and since this is majority a male college you can be positive it is well read. We also appreciate the humor of some of the more outrageous (though undoubtedly serious) questions."

vision has actually improved, but carefully done studies have not shown this.

Myopia seems to develop most rapidly during early adolescence and by the time a person reaches early adulthood the rate of change diminishes greatly. I leave you with simple suggestions: always have good illumination when you read, the material should be clearly printed, and good posture is recommended. A sudden change in visual acuity can be suggestive of a systemic disease and if one's vision suddenly worsens, a physician should be consulted immediately.

QUESTION: I enjoy taking long baths, more than most men. I spend two to two and a half hours in the tub. Most this time is spent shampooing my hair. I am also going bald. I was told that shampooing would help stimulate hair growth. Is this true? Or could it be causing my baldness?

ANSWER: Anyone that has kept their hands in water for a long time has observed that the skin becomes puckered. Unlike aquatic mammals, man's skin is not made to endure continual repeated submersion. Skin oils, salts and other substances diffuse out through the skin when it is kept continually wet, especially when aided by soaps and shampoos. One of these days you are liable to get out of the tub resembling a somewhat flabby prune. All that shampooing can't be doing your scalp any good, there is little cause for anyone to shampoo their hair more often than two to four times a week for a few minutes at a time. A physician should be able to determine whether the baldness you are suffering from is due to a scalp condition or is the more probable hereditary type.

QUESTION: I am worried about becoming a homosexual. I have only had homosexual relationships five times in my entire life, but they were generally unsatisfying. I have never had relationships with a woman other than heavy petting. I worry about impotency if I had the chance with women. I masturbate frequently, three or four times a week, with homosexual fantasies. I have tried masturbating with fantasies with women, but it usually doesn't work, or it takes a lot longer. Should I consult a psychiatrist? I am 22 years old.

ANSWER: A fair share of people experience worries, and unhappiness over matters that involve establishing a pattern of sexual activity that is comfortable and satisfying for them. A proclivity for a particular type of sexual relationship, be it heterosexual or homosexual, usually develops as a result of experiences rather than being due to any innate qualities of the person. Such experiences can occur during a person's early development or even in adult life.

Your letter gives the overall impression of worries and concerns about sexual function in several areas. Interpersonal discomfort and intrapersonal concerns can certainly express themselves as problems in sexual function. Seeking professional help from either a psychiatrist or a psychologist may be a good idea.

The most important thing about seeking help will be finding someone who can be nonjudgmental and able to look with you at how sexual function in a complex manner, rather than narrowly defining the problem as one of sexual orientation. An excursion to a psychiatrist or psychologist should not be viewed as necessarily indicating that a person is sick. It just happens, from a clinical point of view, that psychologists and psychiatrists are the people who know the most about dealing with behavior and feelings.

dominated play. But as has been the case all season long, they could not come up with the big play. They put great pressure on UNH goalie Jim McAllister but were unable to put the ball past him. The Cats peppered McAllister with 16 shots in the second half.

Despite UVM's fine second half performance UNH still had several scoring opportunities. Had it not been for the excellent second half goal tending of Brad Gregory the game may have turned into a rout. He stopped two or three break aways and held the Wildcats scoreless. Other standouts for the Cats were fullbacks John Hubbert and Larry Wallis and halfback Chris Chappel.

The Cats will be in Maine this Saturday, hoping to produce their first victory of the season.

annex would be very helpful, but I don't think that we should get too much larger. These are a lot of alternatives to expansion; I don't think the merger of State Colleges, as presented last year, was a good idea. However, some type of cooperation with the state colleges is possible. We could have faculty exchange programs; if a student is not accepted at U.V.M., his application could be referred to one of the State Colleges. There is also a possibility of a Junior year study program at U.V.M.

Q. If elected will you discontinue your work here at U.V.M.?

A. No. I will continue to teach on a part time basis.

Professor Daniels has been a resident of Vermont for 17 years. While at U.V.M. he has been President of the New England Slavic Conference, and is a former chairman of the History department. He served on the Vermont Policy Committee, and was also Chairman of the Policy Planning Committee. Daniels was a McCarthy alternate to the 1968 Democratic Convention in Chicago.

much one woman can do in journalism. She seems to be able to do everything. The air was mostly filled with shop-talk among TV and newspaper reporters, free-lancers, authors, and publishers.

The exhibit of the impressions of women by artists, mostly men, at the Fleming Museum surprised me with the lack of reality that the pictures had of women (or at least how I view women certainly seemed to clash with most of the artists' views.) The concentration of the artists seem to be mainly on the body, this was particularly true of A. Walkowitz's "Isadora Duncan," a small head with no facial features on a more prominent body. The head shots were vague, blank-looking stereotypes with the exception of Raphael Soyer's "Portrait of a Girl" and Katha Kollwitz's self-portrait. These two seemed to be the only real, non-stylistic drawings of the exhibit. The whole week was summarized for me by an excerpt from Katha Kollwitz's diary. "I search in the realm of art, and who knows, I may find there that which I seek."

Poorly Refereed

UVM Women Play To 0-0 Tie

by Joan Mottica

In a rough game of poorly refereed soccer at Johnson State on Oct. 18th, UVM women played to a 0-0 deadlock. Vermont's coach, Jennie Oakes, declined to allow her women to continue in an overtime period. Her players argued.

The game was played on an ill-kept soccer field in great weather. The air was crisp, occasionally interspersed with snow flakes, and the sky was clear. Unfortunately the weather was the only great thing present. Johnson failed to provide the regulation number of referees, which is two, and instead hired one of their male students to officiate.

Mattered by two unsportsmanlike conduct calls, the threat of imminent "combat" and a UVM injury, the game was tempestuously fought on both sides. All seventeen of UVM's players displayed amazing temper control and good ball handling. Wing Ann Quantrell sustained a knee injury in the early part of the second half and was sidelined for the remainder of the game. The UVM defense centered around halfback Chris Morgan and of the game. The UVM defense centered around halfback Chris Morgan and Vermont's goalies Jake Kingsley and Liz Leopold combined to make 14 saves. Paula Ladd totaled 16 saves for Johnson.

Vermont's record stands at 1-1-2 with one game remaining against Middlebury next week. Vermont has a very commendable record for a first year team with a first year coach playing older, more established teams.

Women's Hockey Team On Rampage

by Joan Mottica

Vermont lengthened its winning streak in field hockey to 6-0-1 with a hard earned victory over Lyndon. In the midst of 32-degree weather and snow flurries it was UVM 2-0 over Lyndon on October 17th. Vermont took the lead early in the first half and went on to dominate the entire game. According to Marilyn Chase, UVM's coach, "we have developed good, well-directed rushing and coordinated plays which we put all together today."

Marilyn Chase brought her season total of goals to ten with a clean shot eight minutes into the first half. Miss Chase leads Vermont scores followed by Ann Margolies with seven goals. Freshman Pam Bryant scored Vermont's second goal midway through the second half. Miss Bryant played hockey at Essex Junction last year, and has become a regular starter at UVM.

Thanks to the hustle of defensemen Donna Gibson and Kathy Potter, Vermont's goalie Val Gardner saw very little action. While Miss Gardner had three saves for UVM, Miss Ferguson of Lyndon made nine saves. This far this season, Val Gardner has tallied twenty saves and she has thoroughly enjoyed her lack of business, right Val!

Earlier in the season UVM beat Plymouth, Johnson, Plattsburg, Colby Jr., Castleton and Lyndon while UVM tied Green Mt. to bring their record to 6-0-1. UVM has yet to play Middlebury and North Country Community College. With the hardest games, Castleton and Lyndon, over with Vermont appears on the verge of an undefeated season. To date Vermont has scored twenty-eight goals against their seven opponents, while a total of seven goals, an average of one per game, has been scored against Vermont.

Marilyn Chase and eighteen of her starters will be travelling to Yale University this weekend. They will compete in the Northeast Intercollegiate Tournament against teams from New England, New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

UVM Mauls Wildcats 28-17

by Tom Fawcett

Many of us here, who are going through our third or fourth football season at UVM, might find this year's team a bit hard to believe.

After seeing two years of mediocre football, this year's team is a refreshing change. The players seem to be up for every game, and have confidence in themselves.

This past weekend was no exception. Trailing 17-7 going into the second half, the Cats were able to close the gap and go on to beat UNH 28-17.

The first half was similar to that of previous games. Taking an early lead 7-0 in the first quarter, UVM failed to score again until the second half. Their lone tally in the first half came on Mike McAllister's 22 yard burst up the middle. Timmer, Coon and Humba threw in helpful blocks so Mike could get loose. Despite being hit on five yard line, Mike managed to scramble to score.

The score came after the Cats moved the ball 82 yards in nine plays. Including a 29 yard pass from Olson to Coons and three runs by McAllister.

UNH scored on a fluke play. A punt sailed over Dan Leber's head and was touched by him. Ken Geisinger of the Wildcats downed the ball on UVM's 10.

UVM held UNH on three plays and managed to shove them back to the 13. Jim Giuca made the score 7-3 by kicking a field goal for the Wildcats.

New Hampshire took the lead early in the second quarter capitalizing on McAllister's fumble on the UVM 39. Four plays later UNH quarterback Bob Osgood connected with Bandana from the nineteen and Giuca's extra point after made the score 10-7.

Ten minutes later McAllister fumbled again, this time on the UVM five. Osgood went over from the one and Giuca kicked the extra point to make the score 17-7 at the end of the first half.

UVM came to life in the second half. Taking the opening kickoff, the Cats steamrolled down the field 80 yards on eight plays to score. The scoring play came on an Olson to Coon pass in the left corner of the end zone. Jakubinski kicked the extra point that made the score 17-14.

Seven plays after the kickoff, UNH was forced to punt and UVM got the ball on its 30.

On the first play, McAllister took the ball and scampered 41 yards to put Vermont on the Wildcats' 28. A series of passes moved the ball to the eyes and the score was made on a pass from Olson to Looker. Looker had done a great job in taking his defender and was wide open in the end zone to receive the pass. The kick was good and UVM was once more on top 21-17.

By far one of the most important plays of the game came in the middle of the fourth quarter when John Thompson stopped Geisinger's fake punt on the UVM 36. The Cats took advantage of this to go in for one more score.

The final TD came when McAllister broke through for 19 yards and scored, flying the last five yards through the air. Jakubinski's fourth conversion was good and the Cats were leading 28-17.

Three interceptions, two by Glenn Thigpen, put a damper on further UNH aggression in the closing minutes of the fourth period.

Some interesting facts of this game are the following.

Earl Olson became UVM's all time leading yardage holder, surpassing not another. Olson now has a total of 2400 yards in two and a half seasons as signal caller. The previous record was held by Mitchell for gaining 2234 yards from 1965-1967.

In this game Olson was 19-28 in the passing department, for a total of 277 yards and two TDs.

Other standouts of this weekend's game were Mike McAllister and Billy Looker.

McAllister, who should be nicknamed the Flying McAllister, rammed and scrambled past the UNH defenders 31 times to gain a total of 183 yards and two touchdowns. Billy Looker hauled down two passes one for 27 yards and one for a TD.

This weekend UVM takes on Hofstra at Centennial Field. Kickoff is at 1:00.

Why Budweiser is worth
a little more.

In the brewing of Bud., nothing has been left out or speeded up. Because we believe speed destroys the flavor, bouquet and drinkability of great beer. Beechwood Ageing, for example, is a costly step other beers don't take. Even though our brewing process takes up to three times as long as that of some other brewers, we think it's worth the time and trouble, and so do millions of American beer drinkers. Brewing beer right does make a difference. See for yourself: visit the New England Home of Budweiser in Merrimack, New Hampshire.

Financial Policy Passed By Senate After Extensive Modifications

by Jeri Covey

After many, many hours of debate and explanation, and being tabled for a vote several times, the "Policy Statement on the Financial Responsibility of the University of Vermont" (S. 4) was approved by the SA Senate. The amended version of the bill was passed unanimously with two abstentions.

It is the amendments to the policy statement that are the most interesting aspect for the whole proceedings as they seem to imply a very basic difference of philosophy between the executive and the legislative branches of the S.A. The proposal as originally drafted by Tom Grant, SA Treasurer, would have eliminated all University Consolidated Accounts held by SA recognized organizations. All SA monies, defined by the original proposal as the money collected for the Student Activity Fee, dues paid by member of individual organizations, money earned by individual organizations, and money earned by SA investments, would have to be kept only in SA Accounts. The previous temporary policy passed last year and tradition has allowed SA recognized organizations to hold both a SA Account and a University Consolidated Account; the SA Account held the money appropriated to the organization by the SA and the Consolidated Account, which was only under bookkeeping jurisdiction of the SA Treasurer, held the money collected in dues or earned by the individual organization. If the original policy had been passed the SA Treasurer would have had review jurisdiction over all monies held by an individual organization, even money that the organization had earned on its own. This would have meant that the organization could have spent monies that it had earned only if it met the requirements of passing a review of the organization's policy statement and had been previously budgeted in a financial statement submitted to the Senate for approval.

In a very eloquent speech, Terrance Demas, Town Senator, proposed a series of amendments that removed all sections of the statement that was concerned with the merging of University Consolidated Accounts into SA Accounts. Demas said that the proposed policy was "good" other than its concern with the Consolidated Accounts. The individual organizations need "incentive" of Consolidated Accounts to earn part of their own money and he called for a "separate look into Consolidated Accounts," but didn't think that they should be gotten rid of. "Everything that you do is controlled by taking away Consolidated Accounts," he said, "and we don't have to control absolutely everything." This amendment was passed with only four dissenting votes.

This is the basic difference between the executive office of the SA which felt, in the words of Tom Grant, this move is necessary for a "centralized" government and the legislative branch, the Senate, which seems to be in favor of more freedom held by the individual SA recognized organizations, and indirectly, the students. If this reporter is reading the signs right, it is going to prove to be a very interesting year in the Senate.

Another amendment was proposed that put the final decision of how the SA would invest its money in the hands of the Senate and not in the hands of the SA Senate Investment Committee. The Investment Committee shall review each proposed investment and recommend it to the Senate for action. The Senate, not the SA Treasurer as was previously proposed, shall transact each approved investment proposal. This proposal was passed narrowly by a division of the house, that is a vote by proportional representation.

Before the policy statement as amended was brought for a final vote, President Bill Sisco commented that it didn't matter whether it was passed or defeated because "this is less than what we had before." However, the Senate seemed to feel otherwise as the amended policy was passed unanimously with two abstentions.

After the vote Dean Powers pointed out that the preamble of the policy statement read that the Student Association was responsible only for the SA Accounts of the SA recognized organizations. This would mean that only the University has jurisdiction over the University Consolidated Accounts of the SA recognized organizations, the Consolidated Accounts of the organizations would not even be under the bookkeeping jurisdiction of the SA Treasurer. All Purchase Order Vouchers for Consolidated Accounts will be settled directly with the University Accounting Office.

In other business, the Senate passed a motion allocating $250.00 to the UVM Rugby Club. Miss Sandy Quimby was hired as a part-time assistant to the SA Treasurer at $2.00/hour. The Senate recognized the Ski Club, the East Asian Cultural Exchange.

Students Inquiring At McGovern Desk in Billings

20-Year Old Student From Brattleboro Running For Secretary Of State

by Jeri Covey

The following are excerpts from an interview with Steve Dunham the Liberty Union candidate for Secretary of State of Vermont. Dunham, a native of Brattleboro, is a twenty-year old student at UVM. He attended Middlebury College before coming here.

Q. What do you think is the role of a third party in Vermont?

A. There are two roles, number one, to eventually win an election, to win elections in the future, and two, to talk about issues, to bring about changes in that way. I entered this race for Secretary of State with one immediate goal in mind and a whole mess of other long-range goals. The immediate goal was to have the voter registration process standardized. The Secretary of State's office should put out information to all the town clerks to make sure there are fair practices involved in all registration processes. I ran in the Republican primary, got 11,000 votes there, my opponent the present Secretary of State was sufficiently convinced by that that he had better make some changes so he decided that he was going to make that basic change to standardize the voter registration process. And my Democratic opponent agrees on that same issue also. So I guess that I have really won the first issue of the election, I can't really say that I could possibly lose the election. We may only get a small percentage of the vote but we win at least one issue in every election.

Steven Dunham

Q. Do you see a rise in the Liberty Union Party in Vermont?

A. I see a rise. I see that there is a statewide ticket in the Democratic Party which says absolutely nothing. For example these tax plans, Tom Salmon has a tax plan that amounts to taking revenue sharing funds and cutting taxes in Vermont by the amount of funds that he is getting from the national government. Actually what he is doing is getting revenue sharing funds and applying them to the most unpopular tax in the state which is the property tax. It means no change in all for what voters are paying for as long as they continue to talk about nothing, things that mean no change for Vermonters. I think that Liberty Union employs some strange tactics in trying to link himself with change when he wants to, and when he doesn't want to he denounces change. He doesn't even use the Democratic name any more when he goes outside of the University of Vermont and the other universities which have a strong McGovern organization. When he comes to the University he is one hundred percent behind George McGovern. But George McGovern and Tom Salmon are not compatible, and Tom Salmon is not doing anything to help George McGovern in his election.

Q. The office of Secretary of State is mainly an administrative job, what is the basic difference between yourself and the other two candidates?

A. I see that the Secretary of State is the overseer of elections in the state, quite obviously he can see all the inequities in the electoral system, particularly involving candidates. Working people aren't allowed to participate in the electoral process in Vermont, if they are employed by somebody else they cannot leave their job for a period of time to run for office and come back and have assurance that they will get their job back. The process has to be opened so that working people can get involved by guaranteeing a leave of absence with benefits of full seniority when the person goes back to work. Even if the person goes three months to go to the legislature every year. I also think that all age requirements for participating in the electoral process should be eliminated. I think that that is totally unnecessary age discrimination. It is unfounded because there is nobody in the state of Vermont that can tell how qualified to make decisions a person is just by knowing his age. You have to know an awful lot more than that, you just can't go and say that all thirty-year olds are capable of voting or that all eighteen-year-olds or seventeen-year-olds are not capable of voting. That is a judgment that nobody can make, and I am sick of having governments make judgments that they are totally incapable of making.

Q. Besides the election processes, what are the other main issues that you are running on?

A. The Secretary of State has discretionary powers over out-of-state corporations. In the licensing he can make them post large bonds if he thinks that they are threatening certain things in Vermont. For example, if they have in the past used false advertising in Vermont. I would use these discretionary powers in two ways; number one, to assure that a high bond be posted so that if a company does not go along with Act 250 or try to find a loophole in Act 250 they would sacrifice the bond. Also, in terms of what kind of working conditions they will have; if there is a suspicion of the Secretary of State that a company is taking a factory in Vermont just for a tax loss, to operate for a number of years and then leave the workers in the plant without a job in three or four years when the tax loss is no longer needed, then I think that they should also be required to post a high bond to take the care of the workers after they close down. I think that if a company has the reputation for strike-breaking they ought to post a bond which can be used for long term strikes if the workers in the state have to organize. I personally don't want to have that power, but I will see that such power is used in the State of Vermont. The Secretary of State is the only one who has that kind of power now.

Q. On the national level which ticket are you supporting?

A. I am supporting Dr. Spock. Q. Why?

Campus GOP Striving For Victory In Final Days Of Campaign

by Dan Haslam

The Young Republicans in Vermont are making an active, intensive attempt for victory in the last few days before the elections.

On the UVM campus, a Republican registration and campaign table has been set up and run in Billings for over a week, concentrating on both national and state elections. Margo Howland, Alan Partridge, Peter Kennedell, and Wendy Nelson are among those who have been donating their time in Billings. Ms. Howland says of anti-Nixon sentiment in Billings, "an unbelievably hostile reaction and attitude," and "we aren't being taken seriously." She observed that being behind the table was like being "in back of a firing line."

An extensive UVM campus canvassing effort is being run by Patty McGeorge. This effort, nearly complete, is hoped to reach 80% of the student body, and Ms. McGeorge observed that some dorms are in the majority for Nixon.

College students are also active in the Chittenden County headquarters. In a recent canvass effort in Burlington, over 500 dwellings were reached by UVM students. The volunteered efforts of the Nixon college team will not stop at election day, either. A forming of a Republican organization on the UVM campus will be announced at a later date.

The state efforts for a Republican success are similar. Ted Dudley, state college coordinator, announced October 29 that there are Nixon efforts on eleven out of fourteen major campuses in the state. In other recent developments around the state, Vermont College in Montpelier supported Nixon in a mock election at 2 to 1 over McGovern. A canvass at Green Mountain College in Poultney held victory for national Republicans at 5 to 1. With 42% of St. Michael's College in Winoski contacted, 49% support Nixon over 27% for McGovern. Twenty-three percent of St. Mike's student body remain undecided.

Democrats Pushing Hard As Ever

by Barbara Frankel

The youthful workers for McGovern have been waging an active, uphill battle on the UVM campus this semester. As election time draws near, they are planning a last minute surge of activity to gain the student vote.

In addition to campaigning vigorously for McGovern, the Democrats are, in the words of leader Scott McKay, "pushing Tom Salmon as hard as we can." They are doing this by a series of events which have included a teach-in held Monday night, October 30, for students who wanted to learn more about McGovern's policy, which included, as speakers, Professor Bill Daniels, speaking on domestic politics, Professor Len Tashman, discussing economic policy, Professor Mark Stoller, speaking on the war and Professor Pete Sebott commenting on U.S. foreign policy.

In an effort to gain a massive turnout of pro-McGovern voters, the campaigners have had a table open in Billings all week to register Democratic voters. They are also planning a door-to-door blitz to register the few remaining unregistered pro-McGovern voters. Additionally, there will be big leaflet drops all over campus in support of McGovern and Salmon. McGovern workers are also recruiting volunteers for election day, who would baby-sit, drive voters to the polls, etc. A bus is scheduled to take UVM voters from Redstone campus to the Adams school to vote on election day.

As one final attempt to get votes, the Democrats are planning a series of small, informal chats designed primarily to secure the undecided vote. Pete Smith, a former Green Beret and a member of Viet Nam Veterans Against the War, attorney Phil Hoff and others will speak to small groups in an effort to convince them to vote for Sen. McGovern.

35 UVM Students In 'Who's Who'

by Linda Goodspeed

On Wednesday, October 25, Jackie M. Gribbons, Dean of Women and chairman of the University's nominating committee, released the names of those students from the University of Vermont who had been nominated to appear in Who's Who Among Students in American Universities. Based on its enrollment, UVM is assigned a quota of 35 senior students who are eligible to appear in the yearly publication which gives national recognition to outstanding students on college campuses.

The students representing UVM this year include: Mr. John M. Ackerson, III, Mr. James Bailey, Ms. Martha Baker, Mr. Eugene Beaudoin, Ms. Virginia Beeson, Ms. Leslie Bieher, Mr. Marcia Browne, Mr. Daniel Bryden, Ms. Christine Burns, Ms. Cynthia Coy, Mr. Craig Dufresne.

Alan Ms. Eve Ekker, Mr. Sanford Friedman, Ms. Nancy Greenleaf, Ms. Kristen Helwig, Mr. Peter Hicks, Ms. Mary Ellen Guziewicz, Ms. Pamela Hinde, Ms. Anne Hopper, Ms. Pamela Johnson, Mr. Randy Mayhew, Ms. Ann McKee, Mr. William McNicol, Ms. Elizabeth McMonahan.

Alan Mr. Glen Ouellette, Ms. Sandra Root, Ms. Sue Shaw, Mr. John Shea, Ms. Tina Silveri, Ms. Martha Stone, Ms. Desire Thurber, Mr. Howard

VanBenthuyssen, Ms. Gretchen VonBerg, Mr. Patrick Wright, and Mr. Jeff Yacker.

In September a selection committee was formed for UVM. The committee included Steven Wood, Mary Kay DePoy, Constance Tidd, Sigmund Heller, Linda Weldy, Mary Ellen Pusanelli (student representatives appointed by the President of S.A.), Dr. Donald Gregg, Ms. Jean Condon (faculty), and Michael Thompson and Michael Weinberg. Nominations were solicited from students, faculty, department chairmen, and administrative staff in an attempt to find as many qualified nominees as possible. Students were nominated according to the following criteria: above average academic performance, participation and leadership in academic activities, participation and leadership in extra-curricular activities, positive contribution and service to the University.

Eighty-two students were recommended to the committee which then had the monumental task of narrowing the list to UVM's quota of 35. A tremendous number of hours was put into the final selection by the committee in a series of five meetings, one of which lasted 5 1/2 hours. The deadline for submitting nominations to the national office was October 16, and within the week Dean Gribbons received notice that all 35 had been accepted. In a couple of weeks, National will write to each of the accepted students above, enclosing a set of forms to be completed and returned to their office. Each member is required to submit his or her own biographical data for inclusion in the current edition of the publication, information for their Placement Service, etc.

The organization maintains a Placement or reference service to assist members seeking employment, scholarships or fellowships, etc. This service may be used indefinitely (even years after graduation), as permanent records are kept on all members.

Each member is given a certificate of recognition by the organization. These certificates are made up and mailed directly to the person in charge of nominations on the campus; and may be presented to the members on any appropriate occasion during the year or at graduation.

There is no charge whatsoever to the students or school. Members may purchase copies of the book in which their personal biographies appear and/or membership key emblems if they wish, but are not required nor expected to do so. Services rendered to all members are the same.

Massachusetts, David has lived the last six years in Vermont. He is a candidate on the Liberty Union ticket.

Q. Why are you running for the House of Representatives?

A. Because I feel that I am the only candidate who would truly represent the young and the students. I feel that there is a definite need for radical social change, and I do not think that my opponents would be capable of bringing this about. I also feel that I offer a definite alternative to the two party system. I am more interested in saying what I really believe, regardless of the number of votes I get. There are many issues that most Democrats and Republicans are ignoring because they are afraid of losing votes.

Q. What issues?

A. Abortion, the legalization of marijuana, free medical care, control of public utilities.

OWN A BIKE?

and CRAMPED for SPACE? I suppose then...

You'll need a safe, inexpensive place to store your bike this winter, of course, wanting it in top condition when the March winds surrender to your pedaling fantasies. Ski Rack offers three end-of-the-trail alternatives.

FOR SAFE AND RELIABLE WINTER STORAGE

PLAN A
Storage of your bike from now until March 1. This alternative also completely insures your bike against rust, damage, or theft, giving you the guaranteed satisfaction of being reunited with your bike next Spring exactly as it came to us.
$9.95

ALSO AVAILABLE
Wheels Straightened
$2.25 ea.

PLAN B
Everything that Plan A includes, plus our special Spring Maintenance Program which includes our fine adjustment of your brakes and derailleurs. We'll also chemically wash and clean the dirt and oil from your chain, brakes, and derailleurs, so that your bike will run better and parts will last longer. In the case of 3-speeds, we will adjust gears and brakes and clean chains. This plan pushes your bike to the peak of preparation.
$14.95

ALSO AVAILABLE
Wheels Straightened
$2.25 ea.

PLAN C
The plan that vaults you over the edge. Not only do we include everything of Plan A and B, but we take the whole bike apart and thoroughly clean everything. In addition, we'll clean and repack the bottom brackets, hubs, and head sets, knowing that a properly lubricated bike is the only truly trouble-free bike. Realistically our mechanics feel this alternative is a must for anyone with a bike over a year old, if they believe in avoiding serious problems next season.
$24.95

ALSO AVAILABLE
Wheels Straightened
$2.25 ea.

Ski Rack's storage and maintenance plans provide realistic solutions to the winter storage and maintenance problems (damage, theft, rust, space) which any bicycle owner realizes. It takes the worry off your hands and insures that whenever you want to ride again, your bike will be right here willing and waiting.

Courses Concerning

Are you a man or a woman interested in history, their role in our changing society? courses concerning women are being offered.

Experimental Program:
Outstanding American Women. Ms. Kaye the lives of selected women in American history: Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Margaret Fuller, Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Margaret Sanz, Victoria Woodhull, etc. placed on their roles as political reformers, social workers, etc. and on their efforts to restrict women's rights.

Arts and Sciences:
Political Science 195: Women and Politics. This course will have three central themes: the behavior of women, the current feminist political movement, and the status of women. The study of political behavior will examine as members of the mass public-opinion for patterns and their behavior as groups-participation in political parties wherever possible behavior will be studied. The current feminist movement will be studied other political movements concerned with of women and the law will examine the current women as well as the potential of the law change. The readings will rely heavily on unpublished papers.

Communication & Theater 195: Outcasts. Phyllis Smith. This course will analyze the current leaders in the women's movement: Gloria Steinem, Shirley Chisholm, Kate Millett, Germaine Greer, and many others will be traced to ante-bellum leaders Mary Wollstonecraft, and others—but the course will be the communications motivating women to re-examine their sex and demand equality.

IRA Meeting: "Trolley" To Play At Next Dance

The weekly meeting of the Inter-Race Association was held in the Harris Mill Recreation room, and was called to order by President Sig Heller at 7:00. Reports:

Sig attended another meeting of the Winter Weekend Planning Committee and reports that plans are being made to hold ethnic dances and international food nights.

The Treasurer, Paul Vey, announced a balance of $3,065 in the treasury.

The Social Committee has arranged for the next dance, to be held November 10 in the MAT cafeteria, featuring Trolley. Volunteers are needed to help set up and clean up.

The Woodworking Shop Committee submitted an estimate of $3000.73 for the purchase of tools and power equipment, less $800 if two power tools were eliminated. Art Department representative Gary Wood spoke against a shop of this size, stating that several hand tools only shops around the campus would be more useful. He suggested closer cooperation with the Art Department. A discussion followed, and it was decided that the Shop Committee first contact the Art Department before continuing.

Old business: The request for $160 for 10 pair of snowshoes passed.

The Allman Brothers concert proposal was discussed. Karen Wedge, director of Student Activities, suggested possible help with the arrangements and expenses from the S.A. concert bureau. Dr. Mier said that since IRA has enough in its treasury to pay for the craft shop it can afford to split expenses and profits with the concert bureau. Ac-Bugbee reminded the council that the fee charged would be $30,000 instead of $15,000 if it goes through the concert bureau. Sig Heller said that he will try to have Jeff Wilson of the Concert Bureau present at the next meeting to discuss matters further.

New business: The Council suspended rules to vote an appropriation of $100 to buy an amplifier to replace the one stolen from Waterman Cafeteria. SAGA will repay $50 of the bill. The motion was passed.

A request was made for $200 to build a ski repair shop in MAT. No action was taken on an inquiry by the representative from Simpson Hall regarding the possibility of cable TV in that dorm, as the cost of installation was too high. The rules were again suspended to vote on a request for $320 to pay Trolley, and poster expenses. The motion was passed.

A suggestion was made to start planning a central calendar for the University. Karen Wedge said there is a Student Activities calendar board downstairs in Billings. No action was taken on this.

It was announced that there would be a ski show November 18 in the MAT cafeteria from 2 to 10 p.m. There will be displays of equipment, a swap shop, movies, and so forth. This event is open to all.

There being no further business to conduct, the meeting was adjourned at 8:10.

Respectfully submitted,

Debate Team Successful At Genesee

The University of Vermont's top debate team consisting of Jay Murray, a junior from Barre, and Sam Press, a freshman from Burlington won their way through the large invitational debate tournament held this week end at Genesee State University. During the eight seeding rounds which were power matched with winners debating winners, the Vermont team won seven debates and lost only one to come out the top seeded team.

Another Vermont team consisting of Karen Olio, a junior from Burlington, and Dan Mulcahy, a sophomore from Brandon won five debates and lost three during the seeding rounds to finish eighth. Since the quarter final round of the elimination rounds pits team 1 versus team 8, Vermont was scheduled to debate the other Vermont team. This debate was not held with the higher ranking team going directly into the semi-finals.

In the semi-finals the Vermont team of Murray and Press defeated the team from Carleton State University 3-0. The final was a close debate pitting the Vermont team against Wooster College of Ohio. Vermont emerged the victor with a 4-3 decision. Trophies of recognition were awarded to the Vermont teams with Murray and Press receiving the Championship Trophy and Olio and Mulcahy receiving the fifth place trophy as the top seeded team among those defeated in the quarter-finals.

Jan Murray, President of the UVM Lawrence Forensic Union, received the trophy designated for the top debater in the Tournament while Sam Press received a certificate for ranking as the sixth best. Dr. Michael Cronin, the coach accompanying the team was given the winning coach award.

Thirty six debate teams, including teams from Iowa, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania as well as other schools from the East participated in this invitational tournament. The subject being debated this year is: "Resolved that the Federal Government Should Provide a Program of Comprehensive Medical Care for All United States Citizens."

This was the second week end of successful participation by UVM debate teams at various debate tournaments.

Last weekend a team composed of Jan Murray and Jeff Potash of Burlington won their way into the Quarter Finals of the United States Military Academy Invitational Debate Tournament. Jan Murray won the trophy as the third best debater in the tournament. A four-man unit consisting of Olio, Mulcahy, Press and Dan Moore placed second in the University of Niagara Invitational Debate Tourney where Sam Press received the trophy as the outstanding negative debater of the tourney. A novice unit consisting of freshman Sally Cook and Mary Ellen Cook, sophomore Cathy Bigelow and junior John Stark emerged with three victories and three losses in the Dartmouth Invitational Tourney. Cathy Bigelow was named the Outstanding Negative Debater.

The next big tournament for the UVM squad will be in Detroit in two weeks. All the debates will be held in front of clubs, high school audiences and college groups with debate coaches and the audiences picking the winners. Wayne State University hosts this unusual tournament each year with the Mayor of Detroit proclaiming the tournament as "Debate Days in Detroit."

Courses Concerning Women

Are you a man or a woman interested in women...their history, their role in our changing society??? The following courses concerning women are being offered this spring:

Experimental Program:
Outstanding American Women—Ms. Kaye Felt. A study of the lives of selected women in American history, such as Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Margaret Fuller, Emma Goldman, Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, June Addams, Margaret Sanz, Victoria Woodhull etc. Emphasis will be placed on their roles as political reformers, radicals, writers, social workers etc. and on their efforts to overcome the restrictions facing women.

Political Science 195—Women and Politics—Ms. Diamond. This course will have three central concerns: the political behavior of women, the current feminist movement as a political movement, and the status of women vis-a-vis the law. The study of political behavior will examine women's behavior as members of the mass public—opinion formation and voting patterns—and their behavior as members of elite groups—participation in political parties and government; wherever possible behavior will be studied cross-nationally. The current feminist movement will be studied in relation to other political movements concerned with change. The study of women and the law will examine the current legal status of women as well as the potential of the law as an instrument of change. The readings will rely heavily on journal materials and unpublished papers.

Communication & Theater 195—Outspoken Women—Ms. Phyllis Smith. This course will analyze the ideas expounded by the current leaders in the women's liberation movement—Gloria Steinem, Shirley Chisholm, Betty Friedan, Kate Millet, Germaine Greer, and many others. Some of the issues will be traced to ante-bellum leaders—to Lucy Stone, Mary Wollstencraft, and others—but the primary emphasis of the course will be the communications which are currently motivating women to re-examine their second class lifestyles and demand equality.

To enroll in the Experimental Program contact Emily Rock at 656-2154; if you can't enroll in any of the above courses but are interested in courses in this area, please contact one of the following faculty members:

Editorial

1972... A Time For A New Direction

Every four years the American people are given a chance to determine the general direction of their country for the next quadrennium. The Presidential election affords every voter a choice of different orientations, rather than specific policies. The President can propose programs at will — but it is up to the Congress whether it wishes to enact them, and if so, how it wishes them to be enacted. The President can influence the Congress by setting the tone for the country, but his powers are limited beyond the leadership role. Only in the gravest national crises does the Chief Executive assume more of the legislative role. In times of relative normalcy, he sets national priorities and attempts to translate them into action.

Therefore, when an incumbent President is seeking reelection, as is Richard Nixon, it is imperative that the voter review all four years of the Administration, and then form a conclusion as to whether the opposing candidate — presently George McGovern — offers the country leadership in a more preferable direction.

We believe that George McGovern definitely offers America a more preferable leadership role to that of Richard Nixon. Looking back at the last four years, we see the following points as salient in President Nixon's administration:

He was inaugurated in 1969 amid clichés of "Bring Us Together" and "cool the rhetoric." Yet Mr. Nixon has consistently alienated certain groups and shown preference to others. In the autumn of 1969 he watched a football game as millions of people demonstrated against the Vietnam War. Mr. Nixon sought, in 1969 and 1970, to place two very mediocre persons on the Supreme Court. Messrs. Haynesworth and Carswell were both Southerners; and Mr. Nixon wanted to bolster his support in the South. Neither men deserved to sit on the nation's highest tribunal. Yet following Carswell's defeat the President saw fit to make a despicable speech in which he accused the Senate (sic) of prejudice against two men because they were Southerners.

Mr. Nixon was roundly condemned in many responsible quarters throughout the world when the United States invaded Cambodia. Yet when American college students demonstrated against the Cambodian incursions, the President labeled them "bums." When an inexperienced National Guard killed four students at Kent State in the wake of demonstrations, Richard Nixon was content to come out with a banality, "...violence begets violence..." Yes, Mr. Nixon, bring us together.

The 1970 Congressional elections, in which Mr. Nixon campaigned extensively, marked a new low point for even an old campaigner like the President. Using his fairly incompetent Vice President as a front man, Richard Nixon continually sought to play on the voters' emotions. In addition to defending his war policies with chauvinistic appeals, Mr. Nixon tried to single out the "radical-left" as responsible for the nation's ills. In another effort to distract the public from important issues at hand, the Administration charged that a leftist press, led by a corp of "effete snobs," was distorting the news. Not since the election of 1884 had the American people seen such political gutter-sniping as was perpetrated by President Nixon. Yes, Mr. Nixon, bring us together, and cool the rhetoric.

1971 was undoubtedly Richard Nixon's year. His achievements on the domestic and international scenes were creditable, and in no way can we diminish them. The change in policy toward China was long overdue, as was the New Economic Policy which temporarily curbed inflation. However, the NEP, as necessary as it was, showed a definite bias toward big business and against the common workingman. Following the 90-day freeze the controls were much stricter on wages than on profits, and many working people are still feeling the effect today, especially since inflation continues to erode the value of the dollar.

In 1971 Richard Nixon also met his most serious defeat — not in the Mekong Delta, not at the Paris Peace Talks, not in the Congress, not on the football field, but in the Supreme Court which he had sought previously to medocrize. We refer specifically to the Administration's attempt to impose prior restraint with respect to the "Pentagon Papers." Never before in peacetime had the American government sought so blatantly to impose a muzzle of prior restraint on the free press. Fortunately, civil liberties took precedence over alleged national security in the hands of six justices. The affair was slightly reminiscent of the Dreyfus Affair in France at the turn of the century. Mr. Nixon's attempt to modify the First Amendment to the Constitution will stand out as the monumental blunder of his Administration.

In 1972 Richard Nixon has made an obvious effort to erase the memories of his incompetence and blundering by pandering to specific, influential groups, once again using emotional issues. In Philadelphia he promised a Catholic audience that he supported public aid to parochial schools, despite the Supreme Court's pronouncements to the contrary. And in New York Spiro Agnew spoke to a Rabbinical Council about U.S. support for Israel. Mr. Nixon has made countless overtures to the "ethnic vote" by taking an anti-busing stand, exacerbating racial tension. It seems that behind every move he makes there is a political advantage to be gained somewhere, among some special interest group. Does Richard Nixon have any firm principles about how this country should be run?

The Nixon Administration has reduced the U.S. combat role in Vietnam significantly. Yet the Navy and Air Force are in their biggest operations since the conclusion of hostilities in 1945 with Germany and Japan. For four years Richard Nixon has made jingoistic appeals to patriotism which would have been better suited coming from Kaiser Wilhelm or Benjamin Disraeli. The record of the Nixon Administration has been four years of meaningless rhetoric (supposedly cooled) which has obfuscated the true intentions and actions of the U.S. Government. Four years of deceit and emotionalism coupled with divisive stands, both at home and abroad. With respect to Vietnam, we really must congratulate Mr. Nixon for bringing the quote "Defeat is Victory" closer to 1972 than to 1984. The slogans of 1969, "Bring Us Together" and "cool the rhetoric" have been as remote to the Nixon Administration as Pango Pango is to Burlington Vermont.

George McGovern has not opposed the Vietnam War from its inception in 1962. However, he was one of the first men in public life to take a firm and definite stand opposing the war, long before it was fashionable to do so.

There has been great discussion about McGovern's plans for the Defense Department, welfare, and taxes. Although his proposals to cut the Defense budget are more than many liberals would like to see, they are still preferable to the bloated Pentagon budget which will survive the Indochina conflict. McGovern did at one time propose a new welfare system in which a family would be given $1,000. What many people fail to realize is that presently there are millions of people who receive more than that sum in one year. McGovern's call for a new Federal tax structure is a courageous stand against a system which undoubtedly favors the wealthy. Furthermore, there will always be a Congress, jealous of Executive power, chopping up a president's programs to conform to its ideas.

In the realm of foreign policy McGovern will offer one which is more realistic to the coming era. Mr. Nixon can talk until he is blue in the face about how the United States must maintain its No. 1 role militarily and economically. But all Americans must face the fact that the postwar situation which left America unchallenged as the undisputed economic power in the world, is changing. Europe has recovered from the war, Japan has recovered from the war, and both will be offering the U.S. serious competition in years to come. New nations which were formerly part of colonial empires, such as India, have to be considered. We feel that George McGovern will be much more apt to take a realistic stance as opposed to a chauvinistic one. Only a fool would seriously think that a man who wants to be President would sell his country down the river.

What George McGovern represents is a striking alternative in tone and orientation to the present Administration. We do not agree with him on all issues yet we feel that his election as President of the United States would be in the best interests of the country and the world. It would be extremely fitting to celebrate America's Bi-Centennial in 1976 with the knowledge that a more equitable society is taking root at home, and a more realistic foreign policy is being expounded abroad. That prospect seems infinitely more possible with George McGovern as the next President of the United States.

A Sensitive Leader For Vermont

Overshadowed by the presidential election, Vermont's 1972 gubernatorial race enters its final days. In our democracy this election is no less important than any other. For the most part the three candidates — Democrat Tom Salmon, Republican Luther Hackett, and Liberty Union Bernard Sanders — have waged a clean, well-fought campaign by addressing themselves to the key issues of Vermont.

Emerging as the candidate who will listen to the people with the most sensitivity is Democrat Tom Salmon. We endorse Tom Salmon for Vermont's next governor.

Indeed, sensitivity is the kind of change Salmon will evoke: sensitive to the needs of 400,000 Vermonters; sensitive to Vermont's environment; by not bending, like the Republican Administration has in its 4-year reign, to land developers who threaten the very vitality of this state; sensitive to changing Vermont's reputation of having one of the highest tax burdens per capita in the United States; sensitive to attempt a change of attitude towards Vermont's welfare mess. And, Tom Salmon will be sensitive to the needs of the University of Vermont community as governor in his relations with the state-affiliated institution while serving on the Board of Trustees as an ex-officio representative.

Tom Salmon cares, and unlike his closest opponent, Luther Hackett, the Democrat has offered the public concrete proposals that he will lead the charge for, as Vermont's top administrator.

In preserving Vermont's essential pastoral quality, Salmon urges a tax program to reduce the rate of speculative land sales. As he rightfully contends, "We must make a commitment to take initiatives at the level of state government, and control...the scatter-type of growth that we have experienced in recent years."

In revamping Vermont's tax structure, Salmon urges substantial reforms in the area of local property taxes; specifically, the tax on a man's home. Under his program, no Vermont household would be required to pay more than five percent of its income from all sources on the local property tax.

In advocating changes for Vermont's welfare mess, Salmon does not take the popular emotional role of condemning welfare cheaters by hiring more Pinkerton detectives to go out and try on people. Rather, he hopes the creation of dignified jobs will help people break out of the welfare cycle.

And, perhaps more essential to the University of Vermont, Tom Salmon as an ex-officio member of UVM's Board of Trustees will strive for a new position to be filled by a student with full voting rights. Unlike Hackett, who would rather have the same process that rocked UVM into one of its most chaotic chapters in December, 1971, when it dismissed political science professor Michael Parenti, ignoring the pleas of the administration, the faculty, and the students, Salmon will strive for equal consideration of all who comprise a university community: trustees, administrators, faculty, and most important, over 8,000 students. A student representative, sensitive to this ideal, with full voting rights will be a step in the right direction.

More than anything else, though, we feel Tom Salmon, faced with a divided and disenchanted Democratic party, is the only candidate, other than an opponent, who received the unequivocal endorsement from the state's largest newspaper, "The Burlington Free Press," has nearly on his own added fire to this 1972 gubernatorial campaign. Salmon has run vigorously these past months to heed Vermonters that government can work to make their lives happier ones.

It will be a close election. It is close because Tom Salmon never gave up running. In the year of the first youth vote ever, students at the University of Vermont must vote to make the difference.

Letter Asks SA Members To Represent

Open Letter to All UVM Students:

Is your newly elected SA representative representing your opinions and desires in his legislative capacity? As two interested and concerned students viewed the meeting of 24 October '72, this was not necessarily the case. During this meeting it was suggested that a question arousing quite some controversy be placed before the entire student body in the form of a referendum. This call for a referendum was willfully, and in our opinion unjustifiably, defeated. During the discussion surrounding these questions one Senator, elected by the student body, and supposedly representative of his entire constituency, stated that he hoped each Senator would vote primarily according to his own personal conscience and then according to his constituent's views. This motion backed by a group of people reflecting their own views and what they secondly consider their constituent's views, was passed. We cannot agree with the ordering of these priorities. We think that each Senator has been elected and entrusted with the job of representing the majority of opinion in his living unit, his personal views notwithstanding. The question can be raised as to whether or not the majority views on issues across the campus are, in actuality, being honestly reflected by the Senate's representative of his entire constituency, stated that he was voting block seen supporting situations such as the one described, in contrast to other individuals concerned with the views of those they represent.

In considering the question we originally placed to you as the students at UVM, we hope you will ask yourselves why these representatives appeared afraid to allow a referendum, a poll of their constituents' opinions.

One of us, as a second year representative finds the situation in the Senate highly undesirable. We both think that each member of the student body should take it upon themselves to look closely into their Senator's attitudes and behavior in the Senate, and if you don't agree with them start the entirely possible proceedings to elect another person who will reflect your views more completely.

With Sincere Concern for our Student Government, Sharon Reed, Susan J. Levenson

Individual Liberty Campaign Issue

By Andrew McLennan

It is unfortunate that perhaps the most profound of what politicians are fond of calling the "real issues" has over the course of the 1972 Presidential campaign received but the slightest attention and commentary. Look amidst the swirling controversy of who can settle Vietnam most to the benefit of the U.S., bombing, the Eagleton affair, and wheel deals with Russia is the question of the future of individual liberties. While the above-mentioned issues are indeed significant and should not be denied their fair share of debate, thoughtful, reflective Americans might well take pause before entering the voting booth on November 7 to consider the Nixon Administration's record on civil liberties; and to decide if indeed the Nixon interpretation conforms to their own.

Individual liberty is a fundamental issue in this campaign because the basis of American ideology is that in the United States individual liberty is a reality. Traditionally this has been the message of America to the world; that here in the United States one is free to order one's life as one pleases, within reasonable limits; one is free to criticize the government without fear of reprisal; one can claim equal protection of the laws and be assured of the right to a fair trial before one's peers. Civil liberties are at the very root of the American experience and tradition; implicit in our very conception of what it means to be an American is the idea of individual freedom. It would be difficult for us to define ourselves as Americans if in fact we were not free.

It is the duty of a citizenry to insure that no matter how centralized and unfederal the government becomes, the exercise of our individual freedoms enumerated in the Bill of Rights remains inviolable.

Today this precarious balance between government and the governed is threatened. It is threatened by a man who claims great respect for the Constitution; and yet whose administration has perpetrated the most far reaching undermining of the great body of law which has buttressed the United States over the decades. The very lack of public debate over the propriety and ethical quality of the Nixon Administration's efforts to subvert the legislative and judicial branches under its sway is eloquent testimony to both its successes and seriousness of purpose, although now, with Election Day less than a month away, it is beginning to creep into view more frequently than in the past. Yet this most subtle of issues is ultimately one of the most significant, for it strikes directly at the question of who we are and who we can be as a people, and as individuals sharing society.

One area where this erosion of individual rights is most advanced is that of wiretapping. While the Justice Department has sought relatively few wiretaps from the courts, it is anyone's guess as to how many telephones are actually illegally tapped each year by the Department in the pursuit of "internal security." The frequency with which cases have arisen in the courts over the past two years suggests that activity in this area is far more advanced than we would like to think. Several times the government has been forced to drop cases when asked to disclose information obtained by wiretaps. Ultimately the government has sought sanction for their right to wiretap virtually anyone it chooses, without the concurrence of the courts, under broad and sweeping interpretation of the constitutional duty of the government to maintain internal security. This proved to be too much even for three of the four Nixon appointees to the Supreme Court, when that body unanimously rejected the legality of the government's claim. Yet the fact that the Nixon Administration could even consider asking for such a broad sanction is illustrative of its character and general philosophy; reminiscent of a holdover Cold War mentality of McCarthyism and the McCarran Act. This McCarthy mentality was perhaps never more clearly in evidence than in March, 1971, when the Nixon Administration informed the Senate Constitutional Rights Subcommittee that it would vigorously oppose any legislation "that would impair the government's ability to gather information on U.S. citizens."

Another area where individual liberties seem under steady assault is the traditional freedom of the press, guaranteed by the First Amendment. Reporters have been hauled before grand juries at an unprecedented rate. The administration has moved to force reporters to disclose their private and confidential sources of information, fully aware that in many instances these are newsmen's only source of information concerning misdeeds and corruption in government! So long as sources can no longer remain anonymous, this well of information will dry up to a trickle; and the public's capacity to scrutinize the behavior and policies of its government will be sharply curtailed. Not only is news reporting relating to government activities circumscribed, but anonymous sources which journalists maintain to keep the public supplied with actual information of developments in other areas of society, such as race relations, are lost as well, as Justice Potter Stewart noted in his strong dissent from the majority opinion which struck down a reporter's right of professional privilege to keep his sources secret.

The government's attempts in this area strike directly at the heart of one of the most precious freedoms enshrined in the First Amendment, the freedom of the press. Nor has the Nixon Administration stopped here. After the Beacon Press released its version of the Pentagon Papers, subsequent to the official Government Printing Office version, the publisher was subject to harassment and intimidation. This is by no means an isolated incident; other examples of this sort of pressure exist.

Of course the most obvious area where an individual President may inculcate the judicial branch of government with his personal philosophy is the Supreme Court appointments he makes. We have watched the progressive Warren Court — the Court that handed down landmark decisions in civil rights, open housing, reapportionment, and rights of the accused — evolve into the Burger Court, the Court which held in Land v. Fiumi that army surveillance of individuals who might be active in anti-war or civil rights demonstrations (including such famous rabble-rousers as Philip Hoff and Thomas Hayes) was not a fit controversy for judicial adjudication.

As of now, the Nixon appointees still constitute a minority — three — on the Court, a moderate vote with the remaining Warren Court liberals. However, should Nixon be re-elected, he may be able to appoint perhaps two more men to the Supreme Court, as Thurgood Marshall is in poor health and William Douglas is getting very old. Thus Richard Nixon could fashion the Court to his liking, and this situation could persist for more than a decade.

Anthony Lewis, in the New York Times on October 9, articulates the issue forcefully. He writes: "A President has enormous influence on the state of American liberty. He sets a tone of concern or contempt by his own discourse. Most important, he makes appointments to the Supreme Court that will define the Constitution long after he has left office. The most disturbing prospect in a second term for Richard Nixon is his likely choice of the prosecutors to police us and the judges to expound our freedoms."

Trial For May Demonstrators

by William Bowman

On May 10th 1972, 52 people were arrested at the Federal Building in Burlington for "obstructing pedestrian traffic", during a protest against our governments illegal and immoral war in Indochina.

While most of the campus was busy with final exams and the prospect of summer vacation these 52 people thought it important to protest our governments actions; especially in a country where silence means consent.

The trial for the protesters was scheduled to start in August, but an unbiased jury could not be selected. The re-trial is slated to begin this week at district court in Burlington. Everyone that wants to come is cordially invited. Come sit in the gallery and watch justice being meted out by Judge Costello and his supporting cast of Pat Leahy and company. Bring your own refreshments.

Nixon Favors Big Business

by Gary Bonadelle

The 1972 Election is less than one week away. Some candidates appear to be doing well and others not so well. Whenever a person criticizes the government, the answer is usually that the people have the control over the government. When asked how, the answer is the ballot box. While this is not the best of situations it is all too true. While we must fight to change that system or make the system work we must also choose the proper people or the one we can have the most faith in. In the broad area of ecology we must accept the problem of the role of the government.

The government can no longer be the reactor but it has to become the innovator and the initiator. The electing of a President is a key aspect changing the role of the government and eventually the role of the ecosystem. Of the two major candidates for the office of President, one has clearly given us a chance to see his rhetoric and his actions. The other espouses environmental action and has a good congressional record to back it. The answer lies in actions. The argument of whom to vote for on the basis of the environment is a simple one. For the past few weeks in this column I have tried to point out some differences between Nixon Environmentalism and Ecological Environmentalism.

One might note that no environmental groups have endorsed President Nixon. It seems hard to believe, but in the area of air pollution, water pollution, water resources, population, energy, public lands, pesticides, transportation, and wildlife, the President's record has been a clear one. Rhetoric has far outpaced action. The action that has been taken has been generally action that would delay or do away with existing laws of environmental value or proposed one. Any action that is or can be pointed to can only be recognized as weaker because of the actions of the administration. The actions taken and not taken have been clearly oriented to industries, and special interests. This has been especially true in the area of energy.

One particular method of action is to take an action or a piece of legislation out of the hands of the initiator and then as the publicity dies away and fewer people are thinking about it, it dies a slow but eventual death. I would never say that the Nixon Administration has not been active, but the problem has been that they have been active on the side of big business and industry. One has only to review the Administration's record on the national forest or on Alaska to see the highly effective work done to benefit the timber and oil industries.

Taking their cues from President Nixon's statements, "We are not going to allow the environmental issue to be used sometimes falsely and sometimes in a demagogic way to basically destroy the system..." naturally administration leaders stopped treating the nation's environmental crisis as a problem deserving priority consideration. The environment was redefined as a function of larger over-riding economic and national security decisions. The White House has begun to treat the environmental as just another passing issue. Politics has been the name of the game and President Nixon is a politician Supreme. Let's not be fooled. Politics is a synonym for power and its concentration has been in the White House. To change this, we evidently have one basic power and that is the ballot box.

There is an environmental crunch on the way. This has been made fact by the scientists of our time. In The Limits to Growth it becomes impossibly clear. There is a question of when. To shed normal, everyday overused terms, one might think of President Nixon as a Maximist. There are three basic stances of people in the world now with regard to the future of the world: The Maximist, The Optimist, and The Realist. Once we accept the fact that an environmental crunch is on the way an analogy might be made. The Maximist, the Optimist, and the Realist are in a car driving down the road. Suddenly they realized that they can't control the car any longer. The pessimist cries for he considers himself as good as dead. The other two argue about how to direct the car. They find a map and see that there is a hairpin turn on down the road. They don't know how to direct the car. The Optimist suggests that they slow down the car and maybe then they can control it. The Maximist says, "Let's put a bigger engine in the damn thing and maybe it will fly!"

Richard Nixon is a Maximist and I am an Optimist which will explain my vote next week.

Letters To The Editor

Reality In Clowns

To the Editor:

The contemporary European influence must be considered in a discussion of Clowns in order to avoid comments on Fellini's "message" or "verdict." Instead of placing the emphasis on plot or didacticism, the involvement of the viewer/reader in determining wherein the reality lies is paramount.

The influence of Alain Robbe-Grillet is important here, for both his novels and his film Last Year At

Marinabed, produced by Alain Resnais, are obviously not intended to present only the way it is but "in fact demonstrate the complexity of reality."

Fellini involves himself in a manner similar to that of the contemporary theater where the player and stage are not divorced from the audience: Fellini is not the judge, but only the attorney playing to the jurors of the audience.

Questions Santiago

To The Editor:

George Santiago says that it is time for the University to go out and recruit more minority students. He says that now there are now 80 minority students (a figure which I doubt) out of 8,000 or 14. This 1% is a greater percentage than the number of minorities in the State of Vermont.

I, for one, see no reason why the University of Vermont should go out and recruit minority students. If these students want to come to UVM, let them come, but they must qualify under the same requirements as the rest of us. Minorities have no right to expect this University or anyone else to make special "arrangements" for them. After all is this not racism in reverse? Giving people special favors is only going to cause more problems than we have now. Why can't we just treat everyone equal?

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Fine Arts Quartet: Interesting Contrasts

by Susan Fickett
The Fine Arts Quartet of the University of Wisconsin in Milwaukee was presented by the Lane Series on Saturday evening, October 28.

Members of the quartet include Leonard Sorkin, violin, Abram Loft, 2nd violin, Bernard Zadev, viola, and George Sopkin, cello. The instruments, if should be noted, were all rare and beautiful Italian antiques, ranging between the years 1731 and 1772.

The performance began with Haydn's Quartet in B minor, opus 64, no. 2 of four movements. This was followed by a contemporary work of Alberto Ginastera, a leading South American composer, and provided a stimulating interlude between the other two more traditional pieces.

The Quartet no. 2, opus 26 by movements, was quick moving and full of energy. Characteristic of many modern compositions the piece was dissonant and frustrating, leaving the attentive listener feeling rather drained at the end of the fifth movement. It provided an interesting contrast to the Haydn quartet, showing the wide possibilities of the three instruments.

the strings with the horns at times grow into the impression of an orchestra tuning up, or at least made one aware of the timpani. It was a mélange of a New York City street at rush hour, laughter, groans and half-finished sentences floating off into space. But then, the interesting thing of it was that with a little imagination it could be anything to anyone.

This was followed, after a short intermission, by Mendelssohn's Quartet in E minor, opus 44, no. 2 of four movements and finally, with an encore of one movement of a Mozart quartet. Everyone seemed thankful for at least the sampling of Mozart which I felt was the best piece of the evening.

The performance of all the quartets certainly was outstanding but I felt that the repertoire chosen by the quartet could have been more suitably geared for a student audience. Most college students are probably not terribly familiar with chamber music as it is, and the rather slow-paced, traditional pieces of Haydn and Mendelssohn were a bit too calming. Perhaps a little Bartok, Beethoven or Dvorak would have made a little difference on that rainy evening gathering of strings.

Danny Davis And Nashville Brass Distinguished As First C&W Lane Series Presentation

The Nashville Brass concert makes the first appearance on any Lane Series of a country and western ensemble.

Danny Davis and the Nashville Brass are authors of one of the most glittering success stories to come out of Nashville, Tennessee. The brilliant new sound of the Nashville Brass burst on the musical scene with a hour-long impact and in just two short years they swept every trade magazine poll as the best instrumental group in country music.

Billboard, Cashbox, and Record World Magazine and the Country Music Association all voted Danny as the Brass top in their field in 1969 and again in 1970 in the general category.

They have performed on the network TV shows of Red Skelton, Merv Griffin, Johnny Cash and Glenn Campbell.

In 1970 they took Las Vegas by storm. They started out with a two-week engagement and were held over for a total of five weeks. Even then the hotel wanted to keep them on, but other bookings made it impossible.

The sound of the Nashville Brass is sensational because of a musical genius named Danny Davis, who believed in his idea for a "new" sound even when the other recording company officials told him it would never sell.

The Nashville Brass has a simple sound, but it's not simple to do, says Davis. "The simplicity of the arrangements requires a lot of restraint."

Danny and the Brass give a "big band" sound to country music. That isn't the whole story, however; the arrangements are modern, unforgettable and have universal appeal.

On his successful Nashville Brass album, Danny plays the lead instrument—either the trumpet or the flugelhorn. The sound of this instrument takes the place of the singer.

The Brass is composed of the finest musicians in Nashville, according to Danny. "The makeup of the band is conventional Nashville rhythm section: drums, bass, rhythm guitar, solo guitar and sometimes a five-string banjo;

plus at least two trombones and two trumpets," Davis said.

Danny Davis had worked in Nashville many times before he moved there with his family in 1968 as an executive producer of the Nashville products for RCA. He produced the records of some of the brightest RCA stars, including Floyd Cramer, Don Gibson, Jim Claser, Dottie West and The Kimberleys.

He has had a long and colorful career for a young man. A native of Boston who attended the New England Conservatory of Music, he was trumpet soloist at 14 with the Massachusetts All-State Symphony Orchestra.

He performed regularly on network radio while still in his teens; later he played with the greatest big bands of all time, including Gene Krupa, Bob Crosby, Hal McIntire, Art Mooney and Freddy Martin. At first he played trumpet. Later he doubled as a singer with Vincent Lopez, Sammy Kaye, Blue Baron and others.

Today, with his Nashville

Brass, Danny still surprises and delights concert audiences when he suddenly sings a song during the middle of the show.

Danny Davis and the Nashville Brass, Grammy award aggregation, acclaimed everywhere for its country music with the big band sound, will perform on the Lane Series on Thursday, Nov. 9, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium. Tickets, $3.75, $4.50, $5.25, and $6, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. Reservations may be made by telephoning 656-3418.

The Nashville Brass was named by "Billboard" as this year's best C&W instrumental group, by "Record World" as this year's top C&W group (both singles and albums), and by "Cash Box" as this year's best C&W band/orchestra.

In the nationally televised Kraft Music Hall TV show on Oct. 16, Danny Davis and the Nashville Brass won the Country Music Association's award as best C&W instrumental group.

Love And Absurdity

by Steven C. Rice

The greatest appeal of an impressionist play is usually its combination of comedy and tragedy. Once the idea is accepted that life goes on no matter how many hearts are broken, there can be deep sympathy for failure and suffering along with laughter at the absurd context of the "offering."

From "An Invitation to the Theatre" by George and Portia Kennedy. Used as a basis to judge an impressionist play's success, this thought must be applied to the Arena Theatre's opening play last week of Anton Chokhov's "The Three Sisters." Directed by Edward J. Feinberg, the three-hour drama, revealing the desperate lives of human beings trapped in a Russian city, was outstanding.

Through four acts, the audience is drawn into the hearts of three sisters whose lives are dull and oppressive. All share a desire to escape this situation by fleeing to Moscow, and, although plans are made for this escape, it never happens. Too many things happen, including a murder.

It is impossible within this limited space to do justice to the many fine scenes; this indeed is always the lament of a reviewer when a production succeeds. When a play flops, it is so much easier to condemn. It is unfortunate also that as human beings, our truest emotions of joy are never properly expressed; they can never be. For example, Laurie Casey's portrayal of the youngest sister, Irina Sergeyevna, was not only "outstanding," "beautiful," or "masterful." It was more than that. There is one moving moment in the play when Irina, alone, her eyes closed, as if in a dream, speaks the reality. Moscow is so far away.

Elizabeth Morrison's portrayal of the oldest sister, Olga, was also more than "outstanding." She represents the resignation of living a dull life; yet, she is always hopeful. She attempts to exude this optimism to her younger sisters during moments of human crisis. Yet, Olga is perhaps the maddest character of all; unlike her sisters, she has yet to feel passionate love, and, ironically, this is perhaps why she is able to survive somewhat better than the rest.

Maria Williams, as Maria, appeared, at times to be struggling. Yet, her love affair with Alexander Vershinin, acted successfully by Charles Towers, followed by the ultimate realization that they cannot live together—ever—is more than well done. Her

The greatest appeal of an impressionist play is usually its combination of comedy and tragedy. Once the idea is accepted that life goes on no matter how many hearts are broken, there can be deep sympathy for failure and suffering along with laughter at the absurd context of the offering.

From An Invitation to the Theatre by George and Fortia Kernodle. Used as a basis to judge an impressionist play's success, this thought must be applied to the Arena Theatre's opening play last week of Anton Chekhov's "The Three Sisters."

Directed by Edward J. Feldner, the three-hour drama, revealing the desperate lives of human beings trapped in a Russian city, was outstanding.

Through four acts, the audience is drawn into the hearts of three sisters whose lives are dull and oppressive. All share a desire to escape this situation by fleeing to Moscow, and, although plans are made for this escape, it never happens. Too many things happen, including a murder.

It is impossible within this limited space to do justice to the many fine scenes; this indeed is always the lament of a reviewer when a production succeeds. When a play flops, it is so much easier to condemn.

It is unfortunate also that as human beings our truest emotions of joy are never properly expressed; they can never be. For example, Laurie Casey's portrayal of the youngest sister, Irina Sergeyevna, was not only outstanding, "beautiful," or "masterful." It was more than that. There is one moving moment in the play when Irina cries out, alone, her urgency to escape. Her eyes look ahead; as though Moscow is before her; yet, her quivering voice, so tenderly, speaks the reality: Moscow is so far away.

Elizabeth Morrison's portrayal of the oldest sister, Olga, was also more than "outstanding." She represents the resignation of living a dull life; yet, she is always hopeful. She attempts to exude this optimism to her younger sisters during moments of human crisis. Yet, Olga is perhaps the saddest character of all; unlike her sisters, she has yet to feel passionate love, and, ironically, this is perhaps why she is able to survive somewhat better than the rest.

Maria Williams, as Maria, appeared, at times to be struggling. Yet, her love affair with Alexander Vershinin, acted successfully by Charles Towers, followed by the ultimate realization that they cannot live together — over — is more than well done. Her hopes of leaving, too, vanish when Alexander must leave near the play's end with his army troops to Poland.

Perhaps projecting best the impressionistic ideal of comedy and tragedy is Terrence Demas as Ivan Romanovich Tchekutykin, a 60-year-old doctor incapable of healing.

For example, there is a fire in the city, Tchekutykin, during it, gets intoxicated. He returns to the house for the three sisters, unable, of course, to walk straight. As humans, we tend to laugh at a drunkard when he sings and dances, forgetting that there are real reasons behind a man's intoxication. For the doctor, the realization of no longer being useful, of being unable to help those who are ill, is too much; following his dance, he explodes, breaking a tiny angel doll. Within this toy is a music box with a merry tune. It is to this Tchekutykin dances; it is to this he smashes.

James Heidenreich as the effeminate, though sensitive, Vasil Vasilovich Solonyov is, again, more than well-done. For this actor, in his first production ever, captures the laughter of the audience by his constant sniping of all the characters, especially his rival, Baron Nicolai Lvovich Tusenbach, performed well by Jeff Edelman. In the end, Solonyov kills the Baron in a duel (not seen by the audience) because he loves Irina, and realizes she plans to marry the Baron for her escape to Moscow.

Other more than credible performances were offered by Ralph Lynch as the three sisters' brother, Andrey, a masterful violinist, but, a failure of a human being; by Jeff Wilson as Fyodor, the content husband of Maria; by Sarah Brooke, the fussy, but clever, Natalia Ivanovna, who captures, unsurprisingly, the love of Andrey.

Also, a special note of credit to a masterful job of set design by Katie Hill and Jeff Sadler must be offered.

Marx Brothers In Their Best Form

by Mike Carson

The man who wrote to the Cynic last week in protest of the burgeoning popularity of Dr. Faustus in the copy was right to a certain extent but after taking what next I mean if we want truly pure writing we will have to eliminate capital letters and subsequently commas periods all manner of punctuation and distinction of one word from the next — and what will we have then gentlemen what will we have then?

Ah, but on the matter at hand, which is infinitely more pleasant. The Marx Brothers are off again (and on again) at the races, and this is my head and shoulders odds on favorite of all their many and various sallies into the world of Cinematic Expression. And this is no hasty judgment, my friends; I have seen the movie five times. Count 'em F-I-V-E.

I am not alone in this preference; it is also Groucho's favorite. And well it might be. Through his portrayal of Dr. Hackenbush it is easy to see that the steady decline of the Marxes' later vehicles did not have to be a predetermined pleasure in the earlier movies. The lines are perfectly tailored, perfectly timed, and he has learned to deliver them to his victims, not at them. Some might think this sabotages his former, nearly superhuman bearing; I think it was a necessary evolutionary step and a worthy one.

The other two are right on target as usual, and the extra pleasure that this film affords us in their performance is simply more of it. There is, for example, an incredible bit where Chico superimposes on his already phony Italian accent a phony Irish lilt. Talk about the many layers of identity. Harpo is a jockey who loses his job for being too honest (although, of course, "you gotta watch him a little," amends Chico).

Now a lot of us wouldn't know art from yuck if it sat down with us for an overnight train ride, and we never will — myself emphatically included. I guess what bothers me is that we pretend to so often. Maybe

I'm just throwing up a cover for my admitted corniness, but I frankly can't see where we get off in thinking that we're so far away from 1933 as to give us the right to roar down a perfectly innocuous song-and-dance number just to test our strength. I don't mean the bit in the barn, which admittedly still throws me for a loop; I mean all the other stuff, and its relatives in the earlier films. The sequences of music and romance can't fairly be cut away from the comedy sequences, just as the Marxes can't be isolated from their historical circumstances at any profit whatsoever. The essence of their comedy was indebted to the world which birthed them, as ours is to our world (unfortunately). Sure this isn't art, but how would we know? I'm not advocating total indiscriminate passivity...but do let the man sing. He's not hurting anything. Besides, I kind of like it. It's so nice, and sweet, and cheerful, you know. There's not much of that around these days. Good straightforward unpretentious corn I'm all for it.

If you get the chance, see this film again and note Sam Wood's direction, which is to my layman's eyes the best that the Brothers ever stumbled against. He perceived and used their physical skills with the kind of sensitivity they begged for. Timing again is crucial, and there are in this film the kind of touches that can be uncovered and admired over the fifth time around. I have no qualms about going for it with, really. To each his own, guess.

Chilling 'Marigolds' Well-Acted, Evokes Mixed Reactions

by Margo Handford
The Lane Series play The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds was presented Wednesday, October 25 to a capacity crowd at Memorial Auditorium.

Starring Academy Award-winning actress Faye Dunaway as the beleaguered Beatrice, Paul Zindel's Marigolds unfolds as the chilling, powerful and positively eerie tale of a fatherless family in direct conflict with each other and the outside world.

The plot was a series of seemingly unconnected incidents at first glance, but upon closer inspection their cohesiveness stood out with startling impact. The acting was superb. Titled, played by Alexander Stoddard, is the introverted, gentle-spoken, daydreaming science person, laughed at for her funny looking clothes and strange ways. She is hard at work on a science project to determine what reaction marigolds will have when submitted to radioactivity in varying amounts. Her sister, Ruth, is attractive, popular, and her semi-detached, boy-crazy, often) and that did not help.

impersonal, selfish, and a meager.

Carol Potter is quite good as Janice Vioy, the completely oblivious semi-finalist out for brownie points that competes with Titled at the science fair.

Heine Room as Nancy, the old grumpy mother (I can't call it living) with the family, is a tragic figure. Unloved and unwanted, she shuffles and cackles, but never speaks. One might ask why she is in the play at all. She helps one to comprehend the unhappy life of Beatrice, whose dreams of success are weighed down with unshakable responsibilities, an unsuccessful marriage, a demented daughter, and Titled. Titled is her one gleam of hope, through which she desires to live her life at the expense of Titled's own plans.

And even this gleam goes out, extinguished by the gamma rays from the marigolds, that stunt and kill all they touch.

I fear the efforts of a fine cast might well have been lost upon the audience. The acoustics were not cooperative at critical moments, the crowd grew restless and shuffled about whenever the stage was matters say. But what was most painfully obvious was the reaction of non-comprehension on the part of the audience. I can't pretend I understood the whole thing myself.

The laughter evoked by lines spoken in bitter irony, the begrudgingly kind acts nullified by the hostile words - was certainly out of place. The points applause received at the end was accented by an atmosphere thick with question marks.

Marigolds has won the 1971 Pulitzer Prize, the New York Critics Circle Award, the "Obie" Award, the Variety Poll Award, the Los Angeles Critics Circle Awards, and five Jefferson Awards in Chicago. Paul Zindel also has a second hit play, And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little. A third play, The Secret Affairs of Mildred Wild, starring Maureen Stapleton, is to open on Broadway in November.

There is hope in this play, and power - and a force that makes Zindel a recognized playwright. Marigolds may well become a classic in the genre of Edward Albee's American Dream and Tennessee Williams' A Streetcar Named Desire.

'Full House' is J. Geils' Product

by Doug Colette

Full House
J. Geils Band
Atlantic SD 7241

The release of this live set from J. Geils raises many more questions than can be answered conclusively.

If the story I heard is true, the Geils band laid down a number of tracks for their third studio album this summer, but after close inspection, decided to scrap them and begin again after a European tour.

Now since it's nearly a year since the release of the band's second studio LP, The Morning After, it's about time for J. Geils' product, that is, something for the market. And commercial motives are dubious justification for artistic creativity.

Besides, why would a live J. Geils album be viable anyway? They're not a jam band like the Allmans, so live versions of previously recorded material offers little that's new (even Magic Dick's virtuoso "Whammer Jammer" however brilliant, is virtually identical to its studio counterpart). In addition, there's no new material included here.

So all that could salvage Full House would be the inclusion of tracks—something with the exuberance of the live J. Geils performance doesn't come across on record and Full House doesn't stand on its own as a musical statement.

The J. Geils group is a terrific rock and roll band, but grounded as they are in blues and r&b, they are limited in what they can do, which is a major reason why the visual stimuli of the band in action and the interchange between them and an enthusiastic crowd makes their concerts so thoroughly enjoyable.

Without the extra-musical attractions, though, this album lacks more than can be overcome by Peter Wolf's ravings and the no-stop programming of the tracks. A new guitar lick on "Hard Drivin' Man" or a wicked boogie coda on "Cruisin' for a Love" can't generate the kind of excitement essential to a real appreciation of this band.

Spotty production, especially on side one, is a further shortcoming: without the chunky punch of bass and drums, the band's sound is nearly emasculated and that's deadly for music once described by J. Geils himself as "music from the groin, not the brain."

If you want good J. Geils, then, it's the first album is

'Fat City' Defies Attempts At Categorization

by Lisa Charis

After one sees a movie like "Fat City," one doesn't particularly feel like responding to such superficial questions as "what was it about?" or "was it good or just o.k.?" Why? Because it is the kind of film that is so effectively real, it drains the mind and body of all trivialities. Consequently when the film ends and the theatre lights turn on, one becomes appalled and ashamed at the difficulty in readjusting from the world of a "Fat City" to "the other world" - the familiar world.

It does the director, John Huston, little justice to conclude that "Fat City" is about a frustrated boxer, or about a poor community of blacks and whites in Stockton, southern California. It is nearly impossible to centralize the theme of this film without missing the profundity of every character and every detail. Similar in direction and theme to "The Last Picture Show," "Fat City" touches upon the same universal problems of man and his society.

Specifically, "Fat City" focuses on the physical and mental struggle of a former prizefighter named Billy Tully, to re-establish his career. Stacy Keach does an excellent job in portraying the role of a frustrated, aging athlete. His developing consciousness of the value of youth attracts him to the boxing potential of an eighteen year old, Ernie. Played by Jeff Bridges (who also starred in "The Last Picture Show"), Ernie is perhaps the most mentally stable of the three characters. And to discuss the third character, Oma, is to perhaps discuss the entire film. While Keach and Bridges exhibit excellent acting, Susan Tyrrel who plays Oma, is outstanding in the true sense of the word. Her proficiency in the art of portraying a promiscuous alcoholic is truly laudable. Never does her obstinacy, vulgarity or immorality overshadow the loneliness and weakness she so skillfully represents.

However, it is justified to maintain that an actor's talent cannot be totally manifested without proper direction. Thus the eulogy is now awarded to John Huston for his expert directing and perceptive conception of the pitiful community depicted in Leonard Gardner's novel "Fat City." Huston has the unique talent of successfully exposing the viewer not only to the misery of three individuals, but to their universal representation of human misery. Through the lives of these few characters, the viewer is subjected to racial discrimination, moralistic values, the question of love, marriage, and adultery, and finally the eternal conflict between the real and the ideal.

Perhaps it is now easier to understand the difficulty of categorizing the theme.

The film, similar in style to "The Last Picture Show," is slow-moving. However, this is an observation based upon a comparison of the movie to others containing more "action," which usually connote violence. The only true violence in this film is ironically controlled; being that of a boxing match between Billy and a black fighter from Mexico City. Even the direction and photography of this particular scene is qualified in that it creates the image of "man against man" and "black against white," rather than provoking any involvement in the match as an athletic event.

This slow pace could easily create resentment and boredom in the viewer who is conditioned by such action-packed films as "The Godfather" and "Deliverance." And "The New Centurions." These films are often characterized by shallow messages and physical violence. This deficiency of physical harm and constant "action" in "Fat City" forces the viewer to probe the dialogue for a broad message. One should recognize the mental "violence" or conflict which in a sense compensates for the missing physical mayhem.

Perhaps with this in mind, it is easier for the viewer to observe the significant juxtaposition of certain scenes. Huston frequently alternates scenes between the rejection of Billy from either his job, Oma or his boxing manager, and the acceptance of Ernie into the boxing world. Thus the overall picture is one of Billy's decay and Ernie's growth. It is also interesting to observe Huston's delicate direction of occasional tragicomic situations. One "bar scene" in particular initiates Oma's and Billy's mutual seduction. Oma has just learned that her black lover is in jail. She proceeds to drink herself into oblivion, but is suddenly alerted by Billy who is seated at the other end of the bar. In a comical dialogue, the two discuss such serious topics as race, morals and trust. While the scene is superficially humorous, its ultimate effect is devastating and depressing.

While some critics contend that "Fat City" is "boring," others such as Archer Winsten of the New York Post, claim it is "a classic of its kind that will defy the passing of years and styles." The key phrase "of its kind" qualifies and justifies what Huston is trying to relate to the public. There is a growing need for the intellectual, investigative film, rather than the film which too often employs violence and insignificant "action" for the sake of visual satisfaction. Perhaps "Fat City" is one of the first films attempting to alert the public to a new cinematic trend.

A. I am strongly opposed to any form of real-estate speculation. I would propose a high land transfer tax. This would discourage land developers from buying huge quantities of land, and building ski chalets and vacation houses for out of staters. This tax would be approximately 90% of the profit on any land transaction which has taken place within five years of purchase, decreasing somewhat each year. This would help the farmer to stay in business, and not be driven out by that prohibitive taxes. This might discourage him from selling his land because of the soaring property taxes. Farming is the most valuable non-polluting industry in the state, and it is important that we encourage and protect it.

Perhaps it is now time to understand the difficulty of understanding the film.

The film, under the title "The Last Picture Show," is a slow-moving, heavily stylized, and somewhat tedious work. It is an observation based upon a comparison of the movie to others, which usually contains violence. The only true violence in this film is a boxing match between Billy and a black fighter from Mexico City. Even the direction and photography of this particular scene is qualified in that it creates the image of "man against man" and "black against white," rather than provoking any involvement in the match as an athletic event.

Thus slow pace could easily create resentment and boredom in the viewer who is conditioned by such action-packed films as "The Godfather," "Deliverance," and "The New Centurions." These films are often characterized by shallow messages and physical violence.

This deficiency of physical action and constant action in "Fat City" forces the viewer to probe the dialogue for a broad message. One should acknowledge the mental "violence" or conflict which in a sense compensates for the missing physical mayhem.

Perhaps with this in mind, it is easier for the viewer to observe the significant juxtaposition of certain scenes. Huston frequently alternates scenes between the rejection of Billy from either his job, Orma or his boxing manager, and the acceptance of Orma into the boxing world. Thus the overall picture is one of Billy's decay and Orma's growth. It is also interesting to observe Huston's delicate direction of occasional tragicomic situations. One "bar scene" in particular illustrates Orma's and Billy's mutual seduction. Orma has just learned that her black lover is in jail. She proceeds to drink herself into oblivion, but is suddenly alerted by Billy who is seated at the other end of the bar. In a comical dialogue, the two discuss such serious topics as race, morals and trust. While the scene is superficially humorous, its ultimate effect is devastating and depressing.

While some critics contend that "Fat City" is "boring," others such as Archer Winsten of the New York Post, claim it is "a classic of its kind that will defy the passing of years and styles." The key phrase of its kind "qualifies and justifies what Huston is trying to relate to the public. There is a growing need for the intellectual, investigative film, rather than the film which too often employs violence and insignificant action for the sake of visual satisfaction. Perhaps "Fat City" is one of the first films attempting to alert the public to a new cinematic trend.

Committee Against The War's Purpose Is Education

by Gene Bergman

The Committee Against the War grew out of last spring's ROTC occupation and the subsequent antiwar actions taken by the UVM student body in response to the war in Indochina, and specifically President Nixon's escalation on May 8, 1972.

The Committee's purpose will be to educate and inform the UVM and Burlington communities about the true nature of the war and mobilize mass opposition to any U.S. interference of the rights of the Indochinese people's to self-determination. To this end the C.A.W. will have a weekly column in the Cynic about Indochina, its peoples, cultures, etc. If you would be interested in helping to mobilize antiwar sentiment in the Burlington-area please come to Conference Room C, in Billings Center, the C.A.W. Office.

"Our people's war is a war waged by the people and for the people. Its aim is national independence, people's democracy and socialism." So wrote General Vo Nguyen Giap, Minister of Defense of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, in National Liberation War in Vietnam. As Chief Architect of the War of Resistance Against the French, General Giap has laid out in his pamphlet the basic political, military, and social aspects of the war in Indochina. Therefore, to understand the true nature of the war a knowledge of what a people's war entails is necessary.

First, a people's war is a war waged by an entire people against native repressive elites and/or foreign aggressors. It is the "mobilization and organization of the entire people for war, building the people's political and armed forces," the embodiment of the mottoed slogan, "the entire people fight the enemy."

Giap termed war a continuation of politics, so that the essence of a people's war is the struggle to gain political control of the state by the entire people. The general premise that the people's war is a political struggle by the people to wrest power from repressive elites can be broken down into two subdivisions, the peoples armies and the rear areas or liberated areas (these subdivisions are still consistent with the idea that it is all the people fighting a repressive minority).

The rear areas or liberated zones constitute the base of support for the people's war. The regions, governed by the revolutionary forces, aid their armies by providing them with material and spiritual aid, food, clothing, shelter, entertainment. These zones, found both in the countryside and the cities are the political centers of the revolution. Linked together they constitute the Revolutionary Government, in effect a nation within a nation.

The People's Armies are the military arm of the People's War, the Revolution. There is a basic unity between the army and the people, "as between fish and water." According to Giap the army "is an army of the people, sprung from the people and fighting for the people" and is therefore qualitatively and quantitatively different from the army of repressive elites who use coercion and force to man their armed forces. The people's armed forces are mobilized into three categories, the regulars, regionals, and people's militia, the central idea being the mobilization of all resources towards waging the armed struggle. Of the three, the militia and the regionals are the most numerous being close to the villages, hamlets, streets and factories and given the responsibility of consolidating and defending the Revolutionary society. All three are engaged in protracted warfare, the general strategy of a people's war which is "a process of continual offensive against the enemy, who is destroyed part by part." Protracted warfare proceeds from chain uprisings or partial insurrections to general offensives to finally a massive general offensive aimed at victory. Each step corresponds to the political and military conditions at hand, each is taken only when the time is proper.

To summarize, a People's War is a Revolution by the mass of the population, in all areas of the country, against indigenous repressive elites and/or foreign aggressors. By means of protracted warfare the People's Armed Forces wage war for National Liberation, National salvation, people's democracy and socialism.

Candidate For Secretary Of State

A. I am strongly opposed to any form of real-estate speculation. I would propose a high land transfer tax. This would discourage land developers from buying huge quantities of land, and building ski chalets and vacation houses for out of states. This tax would be approximately 90% of the profit on any land transaction which has taken place within five years of purchase, decreasing somewhat each year. This would help the farmer to stay in business, and not be driven out by prohibitive taxes. This might discourage him from selling his land because of the soaring property taxes. Farming is the most valuable non-polluting industry in the state, and it is important that we encourage and protect it.

determining the future of the University.

Q. As a member of the Liberty Union Party do you have any major differences with your candidates?

A. No, not really. The Liberty Union Party is made of many people who basically have the same belief, that this country needs radical social change. Of course there are always minor points, but these are usually cleared up with time.

The Senate amended a resolution from last week concerning the use of marijuana. As amended, the resolution now stands: We, the SA Senate, recommend to the City of Burlington that it follow up the lead of Ann Arbor, Michigan and stop further and pass an ordinance stating: the right of an individual to possess the regulated drug, marijuana, in his place of residence. This recommendation is made for many reasons, one of the primary reasons being the belief in the right of an individual to be free of government interference in his private affairs.

In the third intraquad gymnastics meet the Gold slipped the Green 50.6 to 46.6. In the Free Exercise, first place went to Housington from the Gold team, followed by Kent of the Green Team and Foley of the Gold.

In the side horse, Sabourin of the Green team came in first, Mackey from the Gold team was second and Kent (Green) was third.

In the parallel bars the Gold team swept first and second places with Lee taking the number one spot and Mackey following close behind. Sabourin came in third.

WORLD CAMPUS AFLOAT

Candidate For House Of Representatives

A. I agree with him one hundred percent...I agree with him that civil liberties are infringed upon, and that people should have the right to control their own lives and bodies as long as they don't interfere with the rights of others. I think that there should be no regulation of drugs, abortion and other crimes in which the only victim is the one that is involved with the crime. What you do to yourselves or what you do one other consenting person sexually is your business and no one else's. I think that in dealing with the drug problem, drug laws make it worse by making drug prices high thus causing crime, and by creating a paranoia around drugs. I think that the problem can be dealt through the economic-political-psychological-social solutions to the problem; lowering the competition in this society, guaranteeing the survival of every man, woman and child, and general concentration on social individual action being more open. I think that these are the roots of all serious problems dealing with drugs. You should solve them in that way; you don't come close to solving them by making drugs illegal. No other politician running for president is willing to deal with that issue. It is a fundamental way of looking at the problems of this country. Not to go at them in such a way as to make them illegal but to go after the problem itself... neither McGovern nor Nixon are willing to do this.

Q. On the state level do you also support one hundred percent the positions of Bernard Sanders and the other Liberty Union candidates?

A. As far as I know I support them one hundred percent except on one issue, that's the question of the power industry. They, some of our candidates, suggest that the power industry should be regulated; no greater profit than four percent, the executive salaries should not be higher than the governor's, they should not be able to advertise, and that there should not be a reversal of rates, that is the big consumer is getting paid to use more power, I agree with all that; but there has been the suggestion made by Bernard Sanders that they be taken over by the state. I don't agree with that. I don't want to see anything taken over by the state; Bernie doesn't want to see much taken over by the state, but I don't want to see anything taken over. Except, if there has to be financing by the state, then I think that it should be the medical monopoly. It should be broken down and financed by the state without strings attached... I don't think that there should be any nationalization of industry, but I do think that workers controlling the plant on the lower level is the ideal goal to aim for.

Q. Do you have any long-range plans beyond this election?

A. In the next election whether or not we get five percent of the vote, and it is important that at least one of our candidates come down to five percent and hopefully it will be me because the Secretary of State's race is not that important, that people are going to worry about whether or not they vote for the lesser of two evils, the goal in my mind is to see that we have a candidate running for every office in the state. I think with that type of organization that we will have a very strong effect on the State of Vermont.

Determined Effort Leads Cats To 16-10 Win Over Hofstra

When two football teams take the field some of the most unpredictable things can happen. And this was the case this past Saturday when the University of Vermont Catsmen played host to the Dutchman from Hofstra, in a do-or-die game, but exciting game, the Cats extended their win streak to three games by defeating the Dutchman 16-10. This is the longest win streak that UVM has put together in recent years.

But it took a great deal of luck and a last minute touchdown to produce the victory. The Dutchman, led by the incredible play of Tony Newton both offensively and defensively, seemingly had the game wrapped up with only two minutes remaining. But a pass interference call and a fumble recovery in the end zone kept UVM's winning streak in tact.

It appeared as if each team was trying to give up the ball as much as possible. In all there were five interceptions and four fumbles lost for a total of nine turnovers.

UVM broke the deadlock with 13:22 in the half. Quarterback Earl Olson threw a perfect pass to end Dan Leber streaking down the right sideline. Leber took the ball in full stride and raced into the end zone. In all the play covered 46 yards. The extra point attempt by Jakubowski was wide and UVM lead 6-0 with 1:38 remaining in the half.

But the Dutchman came right back. On the ensuing kick off Roger Sicoli returned the ball to the UVM 47. Then Newton went to work. Mixing his plays well Newton and the Dutchman moved the ball to the UVM 12. Newton then ran the ball over on his own putting an excellent fake on Cat linebacker Rich Rostowski. With the extra point conversion by Frank Lyman Hofstra took a 7-6 halftime lead.

Both teams came out fighting in the second half but errors thwarted drives by both UVM and Hofstra. After a scoreless third quarter UVM once again took the lead midway through the final quarter. The Cats stalled on the Hofstra ten and Jakubowski came on to attempt his third field goal of the game. After two unsuccessful tries he finally split the uprights. This gave the Cats a precarious two point lead.

Vermont seemed to have things well in hand with only a few minutes remaining but Olson fumbled the ball on the UVM 18 and the Dutchman took over. Four plays later, Lyman kicked his second field goal of the game to give Hofstra a 10-9 lead with only 2:15 remaining in the game. It now appeared as if the Cats' winning streak was going to be snuffed.

But the Cats, determined to prove they were the better ball club, would not give up. Taking over on the 31 following the kickoff Olson led the Cats to a storybook touchdown drive.

On the first play he hit Leber for a 15 yard gain to the 46. After a 9 yard loss Olson unleashed a long pass to Leber which was broken up on a questionable play. UVM fans and coaches thought there was pass interference on the play but nothing was called. On the next play Olson once again went to Leber and this time the pass interference call was made. This gave the Cats a first down on the Hofstra 22. Olson then hit Leber for a 12 yard gain down to the 10. On the next play Olson scrambled down to the one on what appeared to be a broken play. Barry Vase got the call on the next play but the ball was jarred loose and rolled into the end zone. A Hofstra player lost control of the ball and end Tim Sullivan pounced on it for a touchdown. This provided UVM with the winning margin and with the PAT they went ahead 16-10.

On the following kickoff Newton almost broke loose for a touchdown but an ankle tackle by Glen Martel saved the game and preserved the victory.

This game was symbolic of the type of team UVM has this year. They continue to fight back regardless of the circumstances. The sign of a good team is when it can win even when playing poorly and this was precisely the case this past weekend.

The Cats will be up in Maine Saturday hoping to go over the 500 mark for the first time in many years. A victory could give UVM a second place finish in the Yankee Conference.

Green Beats Gold In Gym. Field Hockey Team Shuts Out Opponents 10-0

Poley came in first in the long house vaulting for the Gold team. But came in second for the Green team followed by Lee of the Gold team.

On the rings, the Green swept all three positions, Reid came in first, followed by Kennedy and Kent.

On the High bar, the Gold team took the first two positions with Lee taking number one and Poley the second spot. Sabourin for the Green team was in third.

The aggregate team score was 79.4, the highest yet for this year. The first meet of the year is at Home when the UVM Cats mount a take on Pittsburgh on Nov. 11 at 1 p.m.

is a liquidated field hockey game Vermont's B Team romanced North Country Community College 10-0, Oct. 26th. Despite the cold weather and occasional raindrops, Vermont outplayed their opponents in all aspects of the game, except goalie saves.

Heather Munro, right inner, lead off UVM's scoring streak early in the first half with two goals. Center Barb Curtis followed suit with two more goals. Miss Curtis played center forward for the first time this game. Previously she played as center halfback, not traditionally a scoring position in field hockey.

By the end of the first half the team was UVM 4, NCCC 0. NCCC had moved into Vermont territory only twice. Both times they were repelled by Vermont's strong defensive players before they could get beyond the 25 yard line and into scoring range. Miss Daquette, goalie for NCCC, had seven saves, while Marty Fain, UVM's goalie, saw no action.

Once again Barb Curtis struck the NCCC goal cage. This time less than 5 minutes into the second half, and Miss Curtis had added two more goals for UVM. Heather Munro tallied two more to bring her game total to four goals. Finally Miss Curtis scored twice more which brought her game total to six goals.

Contrary to popular belief, the field hockey team includes many other players in addition to that dynamic duo of Curtis-Munro. The entire defensive unit did an outstanding job of getting and feeding the ball to their forward line. During the second half, Miss Fogarty, UVM's regular goalie, had no business thanks to the effective hustling of these defensive players. Miss Daquette, NCCC's goalie, made nine saves, a valiant effort.

Now at the end of their season, the Vermont B Team's record stands at 2-1-0. Much of UVM's future hockey teams will come from this freshman-dominated B team. Before the opening game this year, coach Marilyn Chas stated, "We have good depth and the basis of strong future teams." How right she was.

Soccer Team Victorious In Two Contests

UVM soccer finally broke its worst losing streak this past week by defeating first the University of Norwich on their home turf last Wednesday by a score of 6-1. Then they chalked up another victory by outscoring the U. of Maine Bears, 2-1, this past Saturday.

The effect of the first win was certainly dramatic. Having been previously beaten by Norwich at the beginning of the season, 3-1, the soccer Cats, this their first win, must have been nothing but sweet revenge. Prior to their loss to Norgich at the beginning of this season, UVM had beaten the cadets in every outing except in '64 when UVM had only a fledgling soccer team.

Besides just beating the Cadets, the high score served as proof to the Cats that they had the scoring potential, and they could defeat anyone they wanted to.

In defeating the Bears, UVM won its first Yankee Conference meet of the season. It gives Vermont a record of 9-9-0 for the season with the possibility of ending the season with a four game winning streak. This is not much consolation for a team that was supposed to go all the way this season and which was ranked as one of the best in the Northeast, but there is always next year.

In the game against Maine, the first score came at 10:48 in the first half on a boot by Peter Breen. Vinos Maseau got an assist on the play.

The winning score for UVM was made by Bob Buzzell, the left wing, at 26:30.

Maine's lone tally came at 22:10 when Straoul kicked the ball in with an assist going to Brink.

Jim Tart was in the net for the Catsmen. He racked up a total of six saves. Hackett of the Bears had eight.

This weekend the Cats host the U. of Massachusetts, at 11 am. Saturday.

College Editor McGovern

More than six out of ten college editors chose Senator McGovern as their personal choice for President, but eight out of ten believe President Nixon will be re-elected.

This is a principal finding of a survey, made during the week of September 11, by Newsweek and the Associated Collegiate Press. Questionnaires were mailed to more than 800 college newspaper editors.

More than 300 questionnaires were returned and the findings are based on this sample. The results were prepared by Beta Research, Inc., under the supervision of Newsweek.

In response to a question on whether the student editors planned to work actively for the candidate of their choice, 58.9% said no. Despite the fact that six out of ten of the editors chose McGovern as their candidate, only 49.5% of them believed that the majority of the student body of their campuses would vote for Nixon; 2.4% said it was a toss-up; and 15% made no response.

On President Nixon's creditability, 46% said that he is occasionally, usually or generally believable, whereas 76.6% of the editors feel that George McGovern is generally, usually or occasionally believable.

Mrs. Kunin Elected Representative From Burlington District 1-A

by Barbara Frankel

Madeleine Kunin, wife of UVM instructor Arthur Kunin of the department of Medicine, won election Tuesday in Burlington's District 1-A, which includes South Burlington and Redstone Campus.

Mrs. Kunin, a Democrat, claimed to run, basically because of the environmental issue. She stated that in 1973 there will be increased pressure in the state legislature to weaken the environmental laws already on the books. Mrs. Kunin wants new laws and further commented, "You need as many pro-environment people as possible. We have to have laws for the planned growth of this state, so what we consider good and beautiful can be maintained."

She intends to help UVM students by "being in contact with the students and finding out what is of most concern to them." Mrs. Kunin actively supports the motion to make a student a voting member of the Board of Trustees. She also favors lowering tuition for Vermont residents. Mrs. Kunin commented, "The University needs people in the legislature who are sympathetic to higher education. There should be more in common with the legislature and the University so that the legislators could know what they're spending their money for."

Additionally, Mrs. Kunin supports Tom Salmon, who she declared, at first was "a sacrificial lamb who no one thought had a chance." "Now," she continued, "he is a very competitive candidate who would be an excellent governor. A democratic governor would reinforce the two-party system in Vermont."

She feels abortion should not be a question of legality, but rather, a moral decision between a woman and her physician." At this time, she favors leaving the abortion law as it now stands.

Madeleine Kunin, a former English instructor at Trinity College, who holds degrees from UVM and the Columbia School of Journalism is also the mother of four children, ages three through eleven. She feels, however, that "now is the time to run while I have the energy and am interested. I don't want to wait until I'm retired because more young people should enter politics."

VPIRG, Legal Aid, Would Ban Strip Mining In State

by Jeff Ewen

The specter of open pit mining operations is hanging over the eastern part of Vermont. At least two companies are eagerly searching for copper deposits in five towns in that part of the state, and their prospecting activities have been cloaked in an all but impenetrable veil of secrecy.

The five towns—Corinth, Vershire, Sharon, Strafford, and Pomfret—lie on top of what is known as the "Vermont Copper Belt." The metal has been mined in the region previously, as late as the 1950's, in fact, but the mining operations were not large, and none of them involved open pit methods.

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group, in cooperation with Legal Aid, is drafting a bill that would ban strip mining in Vermont. The bill will be introduced into the 1973 session of the state legislature, and is similar to a recent West Virginia law banning the surface mining of coal.

VPIRG first became concerned over the situation when it learned that the Humble Oil Company, one of the two firms prospecting in the area (the other is Prospecting Geophysics Ltd. of Montreal), has obtained leases on several properties in the area that give the company the right to mine by open pit, or strip, techniques, and the right to leave "minerals, tailings, and waste" on the land. It was also learned that Vermont has no laws that control the conduct of mining operations in the state, and the only statutory protection now in existence would come from Vermont's antitrust laws.

Strip mining fear that the state's environmental laws may be ineffective in preventing surface mining should the decision to utilize the copper deposits be made. VPIRG Director Scott Skinner said last week that, "The copper companies obviously feel there's a way around Act 250. That just means they have to get a permit. It may not actually be any bar to large and potentially destructive mining operations."

When asked whether Act 250, Vermont's land development control law, would prevent surface mining, Assistant Environmental Conservation Secretary Schuyler Jackson replied, "I would certainly hope so. It's pretty hard to give a categorical answer to that. There are a lot of factors we have to consider."

According to the Rutland Herald people in the five affected towns are split on whether the copper mines would benefit the area. There appears, however, to be almost unanimous agreement that strip mining would be unacceptable. Area residents feel that the harmful effects of strip mining would outweigh any economic benefit that might be derived from the operation.

Vermont's three gubernatorial candidates, Democrat Thomas Salmon, Republican Luther Hackett, and Liberty Union candidate Bernard Sanders have all said that they would support legislation banning strip

Salmon Elected Governor With 55%; Daniels Wins

Thomas P. Salmon was elected Governor of Vermont in Tuesday's election. Salmon, the third Democrat in one hundred years to serve in that post, defeated Luther Hackett of South Burlington. With 94% of the returns in at press time, Salmon's total was 83,098, as opposed to Hackett's 65,716. Bernard Sanders, candidate for the Liberty Union Party received 1,864, in percentages, that gave Salmon approximately 55% to Hackett's 43% and 2% for Sanders.

In Chittenden County, Salmon received 19,918 (as of Wednesday afternoon) to Hackett's 16,015 and Sanders' 847. In Burlington, the Governor-elect polled 8,751 to 5,078 for Hackett and 360 for Sanders. That gave Salmon a whopping 61% in the city to Hackett's 35% and Sanders' 4%. At Press time, totals for the individual wards were not available. Turnout and total figures for wards one and six would indicate to some extent, the effect of students voting at the University of Vermont.

Governor-elect Thomas P. Salmon

UVM Professor Robert V. Daniels was elected State Senator from Chittenden County in Tuesday's election. Daniels placed second in a field of 12 candidates, second only to Crowley. Professor Daniels, a Democrat, received 17,586 votes. His Burlington total was 7984, Winslow 1500, and South Burlington 2201. In an interview several weeks ago with a Cynic reporter, Daniels stated that he intended to continue teaching at UVM if elected, but on a part time basis. He is the University's leading specialist on Soviet and Russian affairs, and is a former Chairman of the Department of History.

Schools React To Federal Guidelines On Race, Sex

By Cheryl M. Fields

(from the Chronicle of Higher Education)

Cautious optimism and relief that there were no bad surprises: these feelings marked much of the initial reaction on college and university campuses to new federal guidelines aimed at eliminating bias based on race and sex. "There appears to be a feeling among our presidents that the guidelines are manageable for institutions. They answered a lot of questions," said a representative of one Washington-based educational association.

The regulations "reflect a greater amount of realism for the academic institution as opposed to private industry," commented Nellie Varner, director of affirmative action at the University of Michigan.

The new guidelines, drawn up by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's Office for Civil Rights, outline the responsibilities to provide equal employment opportunities that must be met by colleges and universities holding federal contracts.

Remedial Action Outlined

They detail the kinds of remedial action that colleges must undertake if their past policies have discriminated against women and minorities. Such actions include setting goals for hiring, the expansion of recruiting practices, analyses of job classifications and employee salary data, establishing hiring and promotion criteria, and providing pregnancy and child-bearing leave without loss of seniority. J. Stanley Pottinger, head of the Office for Civil Rights, released the guidelines recently.

Quota Fears Eased

To improve communications with the academic community, Mr. Pottinger also announced that he intended to appoint a permanent advisory committee to work with his office on problems involved in eliminating bias against women and minorities on campus.

The guidelines assuaged fears that the demands for hiring goals might force colleges to set employment quotas, Michigan's Ms. Varner indicated, because they clarified that "good faith effort" to employ more women and minorities would be taken into account by civil rights investigators, as well as the actual attainment of a specific hiring goal.

The guidelines will not answer all colleges' questions about how to proceed in eliminating bias, however.

Some persons responsible for affirmative action programs on their campuses commented that the regulations, probably by necessity, were too general to deal with all the problems at their institutions. These still must be worked out with regional and national civil rights officials on a case-by-case basis.

For example, said Robben W. Flemming, president of the University of Michigan, although there is distinction between goals and quotas, and although we accept goals and will try to reach them, "the distinction can be thin in some cases."

The practical problems involved in implementing hiring goals sometimes could lead to an informal kind of quota system, said Sheldon E. Steinbach, staff associate of the American Council on Education.

Hiring the Less-Qualified

If, after three years, a department chairman had not reached his institution's hiring goal despite strong efforts, Mr. Steinbach said, he might be tempted to reach his numerical or percentage goal by hiring less-qualified persons. This actually would turn the goal into a rigid quota, even though the new guidelines explicitly state that they do not require the hiring or promotion of unqualified or less-qualified persons.

It is also difficult, he said, to project realistic goals at institutions where "civil rights" is in the number of positions available. Positions at these institutions will open up only through resignations, illness, death, or retirement, and these factors are hard to predict accurately.

On the other hand, hiring goals can protect a college or university against "arbitrary" demands from government investigators or women's groups, said Cyrene Pondrom, assistant to the chancellor for women's affairs at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. "Goals are a protection for the university as well as for women and minorities," she said.

Loopholes

Some women have expressed concern that the wording of the guidelines may provide loopholes that will allow some departments to avoid hiring more women.

Since the guidelines say that "in many institutions the appropriate unit for goals is the school or division, rather than the department," said Bernice Sandler, head of the Association of American College's project on the status and education of women, "some women are concerned over whether there will be accountability on the departmental level in regard to hiring goals."

Ms. Sandler said there were fears that if goals were reported by larger units such as schools or colleges, some departments within those units would be able to get by without hiring many more women, and a few departments would do all the hiring to fulfill the college's numerical or percentage goal.

In addition to the HEW guidelines, a number of other steps are being taken in federal agencies:

—The Office for Civil Rights is working on guidelines to help implement provisions of the Higher Education Amendments passed in June which require, among other things, nondiscriminatory admissions policies at public coeducational colleges and all graduate schools.

—The Labor Department has announced its intention to require that public institutions as well as private colleges maintain written affirmative action plans, even if no complaints of bias have been filed.

—The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which now has jurisdiction over individual complaints of bias on campus, has hired a political scientist to spend the next year developing guidelines that will help the commission to deal fairly with sensitive academic and institutional problems.

Jack Anderson, Taming Of The Shrew, & Look Back In Anger

SASpeakers is presenting Mr. William Gilbert, Chairman of the Vermont Public Service Board in Billings North Lounge on Thursday November 16 at 2:00 pm.

Mr. Gilbert will speak on the subject of Environment, Public Utilities, and Government control. The speech is free and open to all. A question answer period will follow.

SASpeakers, in cooperation with the Department of English, will present Franco Zeffirelli's THE TAMING OF THE SHREW. The film, which is more or less based upon the Shakespeare play, stars the Burtons - Richard and Elizabeth.

The film will be shown twice - on Tuesday, November 14 at 7:30 pm in Benedict Hall, Life Sciences Building and on Wednesday, November 15 at 3:10 in 101 Votey Hall. Admission is $1.00 per student.

Lily Tomlin, who was scheduled to appear in the Lane Series on November 20, has been postponed to February 2. Miss Tomlin, the comedienne star of TV's Laugh-In as Ernestine, the nasal telephone operator, is preparing a TV special during the last two weeks of November and therefore must forego live concerts during this period. The TV special will be released early next spring.

For further information, call 656-2029.

SASpeakers reminds everyone that John Osborne's LOOK BACK IN ANGER, starring Richard Burton, Mary Ure, and Claire Bloom will be shown this Saturday evening in Life Sciences Hall starting at 7:30 pm and 9:30 pm. Admission is $1.00.

Richard Burton portrays Jimmy Porter, an "angry young man" with a mixture of anarchy and cheerful malice. He is restless, full of pride and given to blistering remarks which make him few friends. Mary Ure plays his wife Alison, driven to distraction in the small top-floor flat in the northern town in which they live. Claire Bloom, the third member of the triangle, is a young actress whom Jimmy hates with a fire that is but one step behind passion.

Also involved in this intimate relationship is Cliff, played by 22-year-old Gary Raymond, and Jimmy's old friend, Ma Tanser, portrayed by Dame Edith Evans. It is toward her that Jimmy shows his rare flashes of sympathy.

Some two years ago the cult of the "Angry Young Man" burst upon the world, triggered off by an explosive play "Look Back in Anger," which shot its hitherto unknown author, John Osborne, to fame as one of the most talented writers of our decade.

Dan Rather, CBS newsmen, who had been scheduled by SASpeakers for a speech later this semester has cancelled his engagement due to conflicts in his schedule at CBS. SASpeakers hopes to have Mr. Rather come to UVM next semester.

To replace Mr. Rather, SASpeakers has contracted with Washington Post columnist Jack Anderson for a November 28 date on campus. Further information about the speech will be in future issues of the CYNIC.

An Election Afterthought

President Nixon won re-election in a landslide victory this week, making the slogan "Four More Years" a reality. However, massive the Republican victory was on a national level, we can all rest assured that the two-party system is alive and well. Nowhere is this more apparent than here in Vermont. Tom Salmon's sizable victory in the gubernatorial race speaks well, not only for himself as a candidate, but for the independence in thought which Vermonters have demonstrated.

Hopefully the new Democratic administration will bring a new direction to the State Government. And hopefully, one of the basic changes will be the policy toward the University of Vermont, which sadly enough, has been low on the list of priorities in Montpelier for the past four years.

The Crow's Nest

IRA Seems Healthy

by James Anthony Pietrovito

In case some of you thought I had flown the coop, dream on. I didn't make it to print last week, as I was having my wings clipped. I will strive not to have any future interruptions of work here.

While spending that extra time at my main nesting place in Chittenden Hall last week, I began thinking of the Inter-Residence Association (IRA) and decided it measured up as a main component of Student Activities at UVM. In general, residence hall governments vary from campus to campus in structure and effectiveness, as much as the different campuses and the variety of student housing situations vary. Many residence hall governments are a part of an overall student governing body (i.e., S.A.) while others operate as independent entities. A number of institutions for higher learning still maintain a "hands-off" policy towards student participation in residence hall governing.

Regardless of the structure, whether or not and to what extent a residence hall government is going to be effective is the main issue as far as I am concerned. Several things will determine the potential of this effectiveness which I would like to illustrate through a description of IRA at UVM. The Residence Hall Handbook 1972-1973 provides one with a more than adequate description of the history and function of IRA from the executive board through student participation and communication to the various programs. Key among the determinants of effectiveness I have alluded to is how this student governing body is received and perceived by the so-called "powers that be" in the University. I feel safe in saying that the Office of the Dean of Students is a strong supporter of IRA, in as much as it responded to the expression of a need for a governing body for resident students some four years ago by having its staff help students to write the IRA constitution. This support is perhaps amplified in that the forming of IRA was not in opposition to the administration, but an addition to the service provided by the Dean of Students and Director of Residence Halls Office. A second determinant is student participation. The two years of existence out of its three, which I have had with IRA, I feel it has been able to work with leaders who were responsible and earnest sometimes against much adversity, namely lack of student support and participation. This I feel is a third and perhaps the most crucial determining factor of a governing body's effectiveness. Last year it was difficult to get the IRA representatives to the meetings and difficult to get people to hold offices in some cases. However, this year attendance of meetings has been excellent, even nearly perfect! The last determining factor I would like to mention is IRA's dealings with the Residence Halls staff. First, I think the residence halls' staff has done a great deal to help IRA reach its present level of effectiveness. It has provided direction and when necessary moral support for IRA when things weren't doing too well. Now that IRA seems healthy it provides the Residence Halls staff with a listening ear for resident student concerns and an organizational body for programs and activities according to those needs expressed by students. This allows the staff to remain advisors and not recreational directors.

At this point in time I feel IRA at UVM has reached a great degree of effectiveness. It has in the past year, and is now providing for the needs of residence hall students in the way of building improvements, dining hall conditions, new programs (i.e. the wood working shop, pottery shop, ski repair shop, bicycle shop) and service functions such as helping the UVM rescue squad. However, I feel it now has also reached a point of decision as to its boundaries. In recent weeks IRA has discussed holding a large concert and/or a large dance. I don't feel these activities are within the expressed purpose of IRA's existence. Besides, it duplicates the function of the S.A. Concert Bureau in the case of a concert and is providing a campus-wide activity in either case, which should be the function of S.A. Perhaps IRA should make its wishes known to the S.A. concerning these activities but I definitely feel it should not provide them itself.

I think the general operation of IRA should be an example to the student body of student control and organizational effectiveness by students for students. Maybe it will provide some clear water in the muddy stream of student politics at UVM. I'll watch carefully from the Crow's Nest.

For UVM Commuters, An Ambitious Plan To Eliminate Auto Congestion By Paying To Park

by Gene Beaudoin

The question of parking is an old one. It's as old as the car itself. At the University of Vermont it's not quite that old but it certainly goes back a long way. Ask any administrator about parking and you will soon see that the answers are as old as the questions. What most of us don't realize is how questions at UVM relate to one another. In the column today I intend to make a few questions appear in the proper context and also present some very clear answers.

What does the juggler have to do with parking? One of the major reasons that we have the juggler is that the Administration and the Board of Trustees believed that we had to do something to make it look like we recognized that we contributed to the traffic and parking problem on and around the University of Vermont. The shortcomings of the juggler are history, but the Board and the administration have proven to be very short-sighted and not good planners. What about the parking? Oh yes that was the question, wasn't it?

Before I go on I would like to note a spot of brightness in the administration. If you haven't noticed, one horrible looking parking lot or whatever it was between Williams Science and the Old Mill has been redesigned in a logical parking spot for two or three cars for handicapped people and a walkway. Three cheers for Proctor Lovell! But, meanwhile...

The scene is set: 7:30 am on any day (work day) at UVM. In come the horde of cars, almost all with single occupants. They park in their various assigned lots (usually) according to their class at the University. Here then are perhaps the two basic problems of the University parking problem: Who parks where, and number of occupants per vehicle. I might add here that the following solutions are not faculty oriented or staff oriented, or student oriented but rather solutions that will be objected to by many except those who understand the nature of the problem and also that of the answers. I have yet to hear a good argument for differential parking that isn't remedied by getting up 10 minutes earlier. We pay a lot of money and with a tuition increase inevitable the faculty and staff argument's mean less. The following are some of the answers:

1) The price of the sticker will be based on the number of people that will ride in the car. The price for driving to an on-campus lot (Votey, Waterman, Allen House, Agricultural Building, Library, Housing, Hills, and others except gymnasium are on campus lots) for a lone occupant of a car shall be $100 per school year to be paid one-half each semester. (To allow for changes). The price for two occupants per vehicle shall be $50 per school year. The price for the sticker for three occupants shall be $30 per school year. The price for 4 occupants shall be $20 per school year. The most inner campus parking lots shall be reserved for cars with these stickers. (Don't ask questions until you have read it all!)

2) For ONE dollar, stickers will be issued to any faculty member, staff member, or student who will park in a peripheral zone and wait for an exact schedule bus (either a BRT or a "UVM Special"). The peripheral parking areas shall be one of the following depending on arrangements made by the University: Mammoth Mart, Sunset Drive-In Theatre, a parking lot near or at Ethan Allen Shopping Center, a parking lot at either Plaza I or II or Zayre, a parking lot near Shaker's Plaza, and one or two others near these as needed. A word to the traffic planners: The following is a list of the major traffic routes to the University and also a list of their appropriate route to parking lots:

Traffic Route
Rt. 7 from the South
Rt. 1-89 from the North or South
Rt. 15
Rt. 1 and North Ave.
Williston Rd.
Parking Lot Mammoth Mart
Zayre or Plaza I or II
Travel on 8-89 from Wm. to Zayre
Sunset Drive In or Ethan Allen
Shaker's or Zayre

3) Books of tickets shall be made available for a lessened price for the Burlington Rapid Transit for people who live in Central Burlington.

4) University Place shall be closed off and re landscaped except for an official access road. A bus stop and turn around shall be located here.

5) Metal cycle ramps shall be made up against curbs as they are in most mid-west cities. There are also important for the handicapped and are long overdue.

6) The University shall spearhead the effort to help arrange federal monies where possible in cooperation with local governments.

7) Cars in violation shall be towed as quickly as possible.

All expenses of towing to be paid by the owner of the car. It shall also be fined.

8) A method of collection of fines shall be established for faculty and staff in addition to the one for students.

9) Every effort will be made by the University to keep the buses on schedule and also shall spearhead the drive for bus lanes which are common in other areas of the country.

10) A clearly marked zone for visitors will be made and all other cars other than visitors shall be towed and fined.

11) Cars registered to owners in dorms shall not be allowed on the main campus.

12) All cars must be registered.

13) The price of the sticker for other persons not in any of the already mentioned classes shall be $20 and the only parking zone for this group will be the gymnasium parking lot.

14) Parking shall be eliminated on: North Prospect north to Loomis (a very dangerous winter zone), College St. down to Williams, on Pearl down to Williams, and on Manchester north to Loomis.

15) The handicapped shall have clear priorities in parking.

16) If a person has more than the allotted number of people in his car on a given day he must still park in his assigned zone. If he has less occupants he must park in the appropriate zone.

A couple of clarifications. The business men who own or run the various parking lots as mentioned would more than welcome having a captive audience in his parking lot.

The price of a UVM policeman is expensive in that it would take manpower to check various lots in the morning. This would be only an initial cost after the early days when cars are towed first and paid for later.

There are weaknesses I recognize this but I also see a very clear, very important need. One outcome of the new system might just be arriving at campus not upset or upright at the traffic and the same would hold for going home in the evening. The system must pay for itself. I believe this is possible. Tying into BRT, use of federal funds and subsidies and other means must be used to avoid using general fund monies or any other monies that would have become general funds if they were not reallocated before arriving in general funds. Also the burden of knowledge about the system must fall on the individual. It is not complicated. The University shall mail all appropriate materials to all people involved (including BRT schedules).

Let's get the lead out and begin.

The Vietnam Disaster- Its Sad History

by Gene Bergman
Committee Against the War

The education which the Committee Against the War hopes to provide to UVM and Burlington about the war includes promoting direct involvement with anti-war actions. In addition to theoretical and factual information this column will give notice to the various activities taking place around Burlington which the Committee feels merit the attention of peace-loving people around the area. At the Burlington Courthouse on Thursday, Nov. 9 at 3 P.M. the jury drawing for the first of the antiwar trials will be held. These trials are the result of the Burlington 1972 spring antiwar mobilization which culminated in the ROTC occupation and the arrests of 53 antiwar activists at the Burlington Federal Building on May 10. Organizational work is also needed for the Nov. 18 national antiwar demonstration in Boston. Anyone wishing to help organize the Nov. 18 mobilization should come to Conference Room C or call John Franco at 655-1677.

IS THE VIETNAM WAR A PEOPLE'S WAR?
With the conclusion of the first Vietnam war of resistance and the signing of the Geneva Accords in 1954, two independent, temporary political zones were set up in north and south Vietnam. Their union was to take place no later than 1956 under internationally supervised elections. However, the creation of the Diem regime in the south successfully undermined reunification. It was in the reign of the Diem regime that the seeds for rebellion started.

The first Diem years were devoted to creating a nationalist aura around the Saigon government, including the creation of a distinction between the national resistance against the French and the communist movement in Vietnam. However, the government became increasingly corrupt and inefficient through Diem's desire to control everything himself... from the moment of his assumption of power, Diem spared no effort to eliminate every form of opposition to his regime." (Source: Lotus in a Sea of Fire, Thich Nhat Hanh, 1967). To this end, "in 1956 he abolished elections for village councils and mayors, in 1957 his mobs smashed the press of the one legal opposition party." (Source: I.F. Stone, Weekly Vietnam Reader). These measures "eroded the respect of the population for the regime... when the war broke out, it seemed to be a renewal of the war of resistance against western imperialists and their puppets." (Hanh).

The result of the massive repression by Diem was the formation of the "Nam Bo" (South Vietnam) Resistance Veterans Organization" in March 1960 which issued a proclamation announcing that it had taken up arms in self-defense. "On Dec. 20, 1960, a provisional central committee of southern resistance leaders created the National Liberation Front of 'South Vietnam' (Source: Vietnam Reader, B. Fall) which was "an attempt to ally all the forces of opposition against Diem. It is common knowledge that there are many patriotic, non-communist elements in the NLFSV. They joined the Front because they agreed that they must oppose the regime of Diem and the policies of the Americans. The intensity of Diem's efforts to eliminate all forms of non-communist opposition served eventually to assure the strengthening of the Front." (Hanh). The program of the NLF contains ten major points with the emphasis on a "government of national democratic union", an "independent and sovereign economy", "agrarian reform", "the development of a national and democratic culture and education", the "guarantee of equality between the various minorities and between the two sexes", and the promotion of a "foreign policy of peace and neutrality." (The Program of the NLF, 1960. Vietnam Reader).

By the mid 1960's the NLF was commanding a majority of the population. The country is under a degree of communist control, the internal security situation in SVN has become critical." (Pentagon Papers, Gravel Edition). Gen. Khanh, the head of state in SVN after Diem's fall in 1963, said that the NLF controlled 57% of SVN's rural population (Chronology, Vietnam Reader). This groundswell of popular resistance was met by increased U.S. interference. In 1962, U.S. military personnel in SVN totaled 4,000. By 1965, the total stood at 27,000. In 1966, it was increased to 285,000. In Dec. 1967, to 362,000 and by Tet 1968, the total was 549,000. Still the resistance movement grew. Bhuddists, students and workers took to the streets, the Saigon government changed hands three times and / Secretary of Defense McNamara said the military situation had deteriorated. (Chronologies, Vietnam Reader, Vietnam, Gentlemen, Vietnam Reader).

In Feb. 1968, with the NLF and other opposition groups having the support of the majority of Vietnam people, the NLF Tet offensive was launched. Attacks on 36 of the 44 provincial capitals were made and uprisings in the cities started in support of the NLF. "Hue was captured early in the offensive and held until its end. The Tet offensive began with an attack on the U.S. embassy in Saigon" which was captured and held for a day. (Pentagon Papers, Bantam Edition). The massive Tet offensive by the NLF revealed the fallacious optimistic progress reports by the U.S. military. (Appendix, Vietnam, Gentlemen), and showed the depth of the Vietnamese resistance movement. The Saigon regime was saved only through massive U.S. troop and airpower, as it was placed in a "defensive posture around towns and cities." (Pentagon Papers, Bantam Edition). In effect, the Tet offensive proved that it was the Vietnamese people who were rising up against a repressive regime in Saigon and only through massive U.S. interference could the dictatorial elite remain in power.

For the last four years the Vietnamese resistance movement has had to cope with "Vietnamization", the Nixon policy of replacing U.S. combat troops with SVN troops and carry out "pacification". They have had to cope with massive repression like the arrests of 40,000 civilians in the single month of Oct., 1971 (Tin Sans, 2/2/72), the detention of 100,000 civilians in Saigon prisons, (Hearings on U.S. Assistance, Aug., 1971), and the forced urbanization of peasants so that the majority of south Vietnam's population is now urban when only one decade ago 9 out of 10 Vietnamese lived in the countryside. (U.S. Army Handbook for Vietnam). Still the NLF has succeeded in securing large areas under its control, the U.S. has succeeded in destroying large sectors of the Saigon army and, according to the U.S. Commanders in Chief of U.S. Forces in S.E. Asia, gained control of half of South Vietnam. The massive uprisings that characterized the Tet offensive have only been circumvented by the Saigon regime's massive repression.

The people's resistance movement in which the people of Vietnam actively rose up against the Saigon elites and the Americans still continues. It can safely be said that since its creation in 1960, the SVN Resistance movement has always been a popular force which has mobilized the people against the ruling elites and foreign aggressors. The south Vietnamese people have been engaged in a People's War for ten years, and have been on the verge of total victory twice. The People's War in SVN will not end until the Saigon regime and the U.S. government relinquish their repressive political control over the people of Vietnam.

The White House is carefully minute detail of this event because it knows American people responded to other events, the 1972 Republican Convention example.

The Committee to Elect the President Democrats will nominate Ted Kennedy. Republicans plan to make one of their money behind the Presidency. In fact Committee prepared for the 1976 campaign already drafted a speech to be given to national television concerning the rich.

There is a new catalogue in Christmas the University Book Store and the Other, which represents a very simple act different kind of shopping. It's a catalogue produced by a non-profit organization in Boston and is being controlled by a group of people who are presenting the products of poor people's community. Community Development Corporations, or CDC's, are community-owned, community controlled economic units located in poor and minority communities across the country. CDC's are structured so that any "surplus" they make goes back to the community, creating more jobs and funding needed service projects.

The emphasis of the catalogue is not on the products but on the communities that produce them - their struggle and their hopes. Each section begins with a brief story on the CDC and then presents the products. Interlaced through the catalogue are cartoons, quotations and parables which link the efforts of Third World communities in this country to gain self-determination with those of the international Third World.

Over 200 products are listed; most sell for less than $5.00. They range from back packs (from a Chicano-controlled CDC in Fresno) to toys (from an Appalachian CDC) to jeans (from a predominantly Black CDC in Mississippi) to homemade fruitcake (from a rural CDC in Georgia).

Agnew Too Conservative

Would You Believe Pat Nixon In 1976?

by Stuart Dadopoulos

Knowledgeable sources at the White House have informed this writer that President Nixon will not be backing Spuro Agnew as the Republican Presidential nominee in 1976. Mr. Nixon, so the theory goes, believes that Mr. Agnew is too conservative and would not be able to maintain the Great New American Majority Mr. Nixon has built up during his tenure in office. Most other nominees, like Senator Percy, are too liberal and Mr. Nixon would not think of supporting them either. My sources have learned that Mr. Nixon had intended to surprise the Republicans and the rest of the nation as well by appearing before the Convention in 1976 and placing in nomination the name of none other than Patricia Nixon. This is not as farfetched as it seems, as many women have succeeded their husbands in political office. For example, Mrs. Wallace, the Governor's first wife, succeeded George Wallace as governor of Alabama. There are other examples also.

In fact, the White House is so sure that Pat Nixon will win the nomination that it has already begun secret plans for her campaign. Former CIA and FBI employees have been hired and given Mexican Bank accounts. Special actors have been brought in; John Wayne and Ronald Reagan the most well-known, to give Mrs. Nixon lessons on how to act surprised when she is nominated by her husband and when she wins the nomination. Mr. Wayne and Mr. Reagan were chosen for the wonderful job they did in acting surprised when they won the Academy Award and when it was revealed that there was no state income tax paid to California. The White House is carefully planning every minute detail of this event because it knows how well the American people responded to other such spontaneous events, the 1972 Republican Convention being a prime example.

The Committee to Elect the President believes that the Democrats will nominate Ted Kennedy. Thus the Republicans plan to make one of their major issues big money behind the Presidency. In fact, so well is the Committee prepared for the 1976 campaign that it has already drafted a speech to be given by Mrs. Nixon on national television concerning the rich in politics. I have even given a copy of that speech and I would like to give you a few excerpts from it.

(Camera zooms in on Mrs. Nixon, who is sitting at a desk smiling. Her make-up is carefully in place.) "Good evening ladies and gentlemen. I would first like to thank the Committee to Elect the President for providing me with this time. Let me just say that I could have ignored the subject of big money behind presidential campaigns as my opponent has. But I did not want to shy away from that important issue because I am not a quitter. (Mrs. Nixon stands and walks over to an adjacent couch where Mr. Nixon sits attentively smiling.) And by the way, Dick isn't a quitter either. Neither does he wear those fancy tailored suits and ties that my opponent has been seen in. All he has is a good old Republican cloth suit and tie. (Mr. Nixon does not flinch and continues smiling.) Let me just make one thing perfectly clear. All that talk you hear about the rich being the only ones able to run for the Presidency is hogwash. To prove my point I would like to do something almost unprecedented in modern American political history. Although I do not know where my campaign contributions have come from, I have urged my campaign director, the honorable G. Gordon Liddy, to disclose the sources. However, let me just say that I would like to go one step further. I would like to give you a complete run-down of my financial history. (Mrs. Nixon continues to give a detailed account of her financial history, starting with the first money she ever received from the tooth fairy all the way up to the last amount she spent on a present for her husband just before their second honeymoon - a box of No-Dose.) Dick and I have tried to live within our means and have never accepted any illegal money from anyone.

We have lived a honorable life, a just life. We believe in America. We would never do anything to hurt this country. Therefore on election day I ask you to make the final judgment. Should only the rich be elected or should the average American be given a chance? Oh yes, there was one other thing. My husband Dick was on the radio the other day saying that the one thing he always wanted to do was to play professional football. Well, someone in Burlington, Vermont must have heard him because the other day we received an official N.Y. Giants football outfit. (Camera shows photograph of Mr. Nixon in uniform.) Let me just say that Dick has enjoyed that more than anything he ever had. And our little grandson Eddie Cox, Jr. had a name plate made up for the back of the jersey. It reads Dick the Bruiser. No matter what happens we are going to let Dick keep that uniform. Thank you and good night."

'Shop The Other America'

There is a new catalogue in the University Book Store which represents a very different kind of shopping. It is produced by a non-profit group in Boston and is being sold at cost. It's called Shop the Other America, and presents the products of ten community development corporations. Community Development Corporations, or CDC's, are community-owned, community controlled economic units located in poor and minority communities across the country. CDC's are structured so that any "surplus" they make goes back to the community, creating more jobs and funding needed service projects.

Vermont Utilities And Outside Interests

by William Bowman

In an earlier column I spoke of the fact that Vermont utilities are mainly controlled by out-of-state interests, and because of this Vermonters are being forced to pay higher rates for material goods, education, etc.

Following are the specifics on Vermont's two largest electric utilities, Green Mountain Power and Central Vermont Public Service Corporation. These facts were taken from an article by Lee Webb, a professor at Goddard who has been doing research on the economic problems of Vermont.

Ten of the largest stockholders in Central Vermont Public Service Corporation have out-of-state addresses. The out-of-state absentee stockholders are drawn from the ranks of the biggest banks and stockbrokers in the United States. Many of them have their headquarters in New York. Only two Vermonters are listed among the ten largest stockholders of the two largest Vermont private utilities. These facts are documented in the files of the Federal Power Commission, in Washington, D.C.

The largest stockholder in Green Mountain Power is the Wiramal Corp., which gives its address as: c/o The First National Bank in Jersey City, New Jersey; second largest is Aird Island, Inc., Box 4087, Broadway and Bridge St., Albany, New York, and Bosworth & Co., c/o Bank of New York, Box 1384, New York, New York.

The largest stockholder in Central Vermont Public Service Corp. is Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis of New York, one of the largest stockbrokers in the United States. Second largest is another stockbroker, Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, which is the largest stockbroker in the world; and the third largest is Masliff One & Co. c/o Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company of Springfield, Mass.

The Federal Power Commission files reveal that out-of-state interests control Vermont's utilities and yet the citizens are told that they must accept rate increases, and the attendant pollution of the Vernon Nuclear Power Plant to keep Vermont's utilities free of out-of-state control. The fact is that rate increases directly benefit the banks and stock brokerages, that control the utilities.

What Vermont needs to do is to control the utilities that operate within its boundaries. Any profits made from the electric, gas, oil or other public services should be re-invested in the state, to help lower the cost of living, and provide better services for the citizens of the state.

On Minority Students

No Special Favors At UVM

by George Santiago

In the November 2, 1972 issue of the Vermont Cynic, a young man questioned an article which I wrote concerning the minority students here at the University of Vermont.

He states that he doubts that there are 80 minority students in the student population. If so, I think he should speak to Dolores S. Stocker, assistant to the president of UVM, or Milton Randle, minority advisor.

As for the recruitment of minority students, I believe any school should go out and try to recruit not only whites, but also Blacks, Puerto Ricans, Chicanos, Orientals, etc. White people are not the only ones in this country and who have died for it, or has made it what it is today.

I don't see what the University is doing for minority students as "special favors," but as the giving of the opportunity to those who qualify and never had the chance to develop themselves to the fullest of their potentials. Under this presumption does the University accept minorities, also because they are academically qualified to enter into this university. The University helps minorities in financial aid, and tries to prepare them in high schools to cope with college education. I feel that these opportunities should not just be given to a handful of Tokens. Especially when so many other minorities have and are being oppressed and exploited.

As for it, being racism in reverse, I don't think many people would agree, especially the Administration, for you are calling them racists toward their own kind. I see it, rather, as the opening of true educational facilities to the oppressed minorities in this country.

So I say to you Mr. Tom Barnard, that before you question or criticize something you should learn the facts, especially if you are going to make them public. "For it's better to be quiet, and let people think you're a fool, than to be loud and remove all doubt."

Halloween & Big Brother

Fifty little monsters? Well, there were ghosts, devils, witches and ghouls carving pumpkins, dunking for apples, playing games and eating treats, right alongside the queens, princesses and good fairies - not to mention the fifty more - big masked marauders who attended and enjoyed the Big Brother/Sister Halloween Party at St. Anselm's Chapel.

Little eyes grew big, smiles tended to fade, but only temporarily, as the Big Brothers and Sisters, waltzed into the party with their ugly masked faces and funny clothes. Perhaps, security seemed missing for some of those children as they turned to find their big brother or sister, and found instead a stranger.

But as everyone became accustomed to the strange outfits, the excitement couldn't be overlooked as each child picked out his or her own pumpkin to carve (pumpkins were generously donated by Allenholm Farms in Milton). And pumpkins soon were a variety of Jack-o'-lanterns.

This party was the first group function of the Big Brother/Sister program. This program is designed to allow a volunteer to establish a close one-to-one relationship with a child from the community. The program is unstructured in that the Big Brother/Sister can get together with the little brother/sister at their own mutual convenience, hopefully about once a week. The children are referred to this program for many different reasons - if one parent is absent from the home, if the child needs more outside stimulation, some counselling, or perhaps just for companionship.

The hope then is that the Big Brother/Sister will not be just a substitute parent or teacher, but by being a friend and companion may be able to fill the missing link in the child's experience. The need for Big Brothers and Sisters within the Burlington Community is great and volunteers are urgently needed. The time commitment involved is usually stated to be a year, but the personal experience involved is a friendship and who can put a time limit on that?

Beginning this fall, OVP is establishing outposts on two college and two high school campuses. Utilizing the manpower of UYA, volunteer coordinating centers are being developed at Johnson State College, St. Michael's College, at Bellows Free Academy, and at Winooski High School.

On each campus the programs are actively recruiting and placing volunteers, providing project planning guidance and support. Space has been provided by the schools, equipment has been rounded up and programs are working!

At Johnson, Sarah Taylor is heading up the OVP office which is located in the learning center near the library. Sarah is working with B. Mallinaus, a member of the faculty, who helps as academic facilitator for OVP designed field projects. Plans are being formulated to assist a family in building a small house so that they do not have to live in their bus again this winter. The father has been incapacitated and as he has only half a lung cannot provide for his wife and three children. A community "barn" raising event is being planned to build a home if materials and resources can be found.

At St. Alban's, Colleen Sweeney, who used to work as a staff member in OVP, has established a Volunteer Center at Bellows Free Academy. Colleen is an alumna of this High School and is quickly proving capable of making a significant contribution in her capacity as a returned BFA'er. She has turned a former cloakroom into the volunteer office, has organized a staff of interviewers, trained them and utilizes them as facilitators in her developing volunteer network.

At BFA volunteering is seen primarily as an extracurricular activity. However, students are learning a great deal about their community, its problems, people's needs, how to organize a response, plan and implement projects. Colleen is exploring ways relationships can be developed with the formal learning process.

St. Michael's College in Winooski welcomed back Mike Applebee who graduated last spring. He is a former president of the Crown and Sword Society and was active in volunteer activities as an undergraduate. Now he is a graduate student at UVM in Student Personnel Administration in Higher Education and is developing the Office of Volunteer Programs at St. Mike's.

Student at St. Mike's organized the first student rescue squad and Fire Dept. in the state and have long been active in community projects. Mike is helping pull things together and assist the administration in supporting such activity.

St. Mike's students are working with all kinds of community agencies, have developed a basketball team with kids from the neighborhood, had 200 students show up at a meeting called to see who would be interested in being Big Brothers and have made real progress in "getting it all together".

At Winooski High School where Betsy Gentil and Chuck Franzoni are working there are two levels of programming involving both the High School and J.F. Kennedy Jr. High School which are right next to each other. Betsy and Chuck have been engaged in "rapport building" in the early weeks and will be helping develop a volunteer program.

The Winooski program will involve bringing volunteers in to projects and activities in the school as well as encouraging Winooski students to go out and offer their services to community projects and agencies.

The OVP Clearinghouse Extension Project reflects OVP's interest in involving student from campuses all across the state. Toward this end, two state conferences on volunteering, field work and community service have been held this fall. The first was held here at UVM in Sept. and the most recent at Berklyn Manor in Lyndonville on Nov. 3-5. Represented at these conferences have been students from Middlebury College, St. Mike's, UVM, Trinity, Goddard, Lyndon, Johnson, Norwich, Windham, and Green Mountain College.

The conferences have provided opportunity for sharing information on how projects work, academic arrangements, and problems in community work. It was agreed that in a small state like Vermont students should know what is happening at each school, communicate and organize around specific action projects, plan for more effective information services on where needs and placement opportunities are.

There are just a few of many ways the information system can serve the area. It will provide more effective and more personal service by reducing the time between the recognition of need and its fulfillment.

The recruitment, information and referral and planning dimensions of OVP have been strengthened this year. Chris Mayhahn, a junior majoring in psychology, is serving for the office as recruiter. He studies information from people

Information Retrieval System Is Developed

OVP is currently developing an information retrieval system to effectively make available current data on community volunteer and social service resources to facilitate meeting the needs of residents.

The first step in this process is the development of a volunteer skills bank. Linda Raymond, a senior marketing major, and Clarke Thibault, a senior math major specializing in computers, have worked through the summer and fall defining the content of the system and getting it to work. Now, when a student comes into the office he fills out a form which includes a check list of skills. The volunteer's name is then added to a master list of skills. When a request comes to OVP for a person with a certain skill, a staff member need only look in the list of skills to find a qualified person.

The next step is to collect information about all local social service agencies; problem areas they handle; fees; eligibility; requirements; etc. This data can be used to help people in need by quickly locating the agency that can best handle their problem. This information will also help pinpoint overlaps or gaps in services in the area.

As an example of how the system could work, let's say your next door neighbor beats his kid. What could you do? Call the police? Social Welfare? Children's Aid Society? Instead of having to call 3-4 agencies to find the right one, a person with this or any problem could call the information retrieval number, explain the situation, and be referred to the person in charge of the most appropriate agency.

Another way the skills bank concept could work is: Bill Jones wants to fix his porch himself but doesn't quite know where to start. He does not want a carpenter but he'd like to know someone who can give him some practical advice. He calls the information retrieval number. We look through the files and find that Chris Smith has carpentry skills. He is contacted and is available. Chris meets with Mr. Jones and helps him get started on his porch fixing project.

These are just a few of many ways the information system can serve the area. It will provide more effective and more personal service by reducing the time between the recognition of need and its fulfillment.

Referral Agencies Elderly: Green Mountain Nursing Home, Interfaith Senior Citizens, Birchwood Nursing Home.

These projects are designed to give companionship or help to educate the elderly. Much of the work includes arts and crafts. While some older people need companionship, others need physical help like aid in being fed. There is a special need in these projects for men.

Medical: Youth Services - to work with trainers in the care and prevention of athletic injuries. At the MEDICAL CENTER HOSPITAL, the volunteers provide help in transportation.

In the MODEL CITIES HEALTH PROGRAM the volunteers help in transporting children to dental appointments. With ZPG many types of work is available for the volunteer. ELIZABETH LUND HOME is still another project where volunteers help.

MENTAL HEALTH: The primary project in this field is the Waterbury State Hospital. Students work in the art center, library, and in the Youth Treatment Center. Students help individuals to develop social skills. They are care for various long term patients, help tutor children, help produce video tapes, and help teach homemaking skills. Work is usually on a one-to-one basis.

SOCIAL ISSUE ACTION: At the Dept. of Corrections students work with delinquent youths. Crossroads is another project where students work with ex-offenders. Students also work with VPIRG and the Consumer Protection Bureau. Students help with the recycling project at Charlotte.

A LOOK AT THE OFFICE OF VOL

OVP Projects Coordinator's Council Organized

OVP assists students in two ways. First, it provides information sent in by agencies and community people on needs for volunteers. This includes assistance in matching students to projects, referral and follow-up on who is working where. This referral service is provided on a broad basis to all students, faculty, staff and interested community people.

Secondly, OVP assists students who want to develop projects to meet needs not specifically met by any social agency. OVP will assist in the planning process with ideas information on resources and people who may be doing the same or similar things. In OVP there are people who will help talk through an idea. Also, there are services, telephones, typing, mimeographing, bulletin boards, publicity, recruitment and transportation procedures, all available to help a student get his project off the ground.

A Project Coordinator's Council has been formed to assist OVP in carrying out these functions. The council is helping develop guidelines to assist in the planning process. There is a project guide "Your Own Thing: How to do it" which is available for students who want to develop a project. Such factors as these have been suggested as important to consider in planning: What evidence is there that the project will meet a real community need? Can the project continue long enough to meet this need? Will it be meaningful work so that students will stay involved? What resources are already committed to meet this need and how will this project relate to them? What skills will volunteers have to have? How many volunteers will be needed? Goals will have to be established for the project.

It will be supported by outlines of specific tasks to be performed to reach these goals. A time frame will be worked out. Budget and finances will be dealt with. If money is needed, resources will be searched out.

Students who have been through this process and are actively running projects will serve as members of the Project Coordinators Council and will assist others and help them avoid the pitfalls and benefit from the successes they have had.

All projects are autonomous, student operated and controlled. OVP provides assistance, services, information and so forth, but students provide the initiative and energy and are responsible for the achievement or failure of any project. Ideally student projects will mature into functioning, independently funded, enduring projects meeting real needs, doing their own recruiting, etc. OVP is meant to function as a sort of mid-wife, assisting such projects at birth but allowing them to thrive on their own afterwards.

Students who are successfully operating such projects can have a further impact through the work of the Project Coordinator's Council. All project coordinators who have benefitted from OVP assistance, either process or financial, are welcomed to be a part of this council. Council and developing OVP projects include: Adopt A Grandparent

Tony Blake, P.C.BHS Humanities, Perry Bove and Kathy Sutherland, P.C.'s Kappa Alpha Theta Birchwood Nursing Home project, Susan Brooks, P.C.; Urban Center Tutoring, Ellen Burke, P.C. Bell, book and candle, Becky Burr and Chris Burns, P.C.'s; Senior Ceramics, Terry Cahill, P.C.; Big Brothers/Sisters, Sue Geier, P.C.; Sink or Swim Big Brothers, Mary Hill and Debbie Kelly, P.C.'s; OVP Actionfest, Fred Hunt, Charlie Palmer and Pete Trono, P.C.'s; Wheeler Tutoring, Cheryl Kuebler, P.C.; Friends of Red Rocks, Patti O'Brien, P.C.; Orthopedic Divisional Therapy Program at MCHV, Clark Pace, P.C.; UVM - Rescue Squad, Jack Schmidt, P.C.; Barnes Tutoring Project, Cathy Wood, P.C.; Corrections, Augusta Wilberding, P.C.

OVP is a partnership between the UVM administration and students. UVM provides space, staff, and operating expenses for the office, administration services in funding (UYA), planning, publicity, accounting, etc. Students provide programming funds for student projects, transportation of volunteers, publicity materials, seed monies for projects, etc. via appropriations from SA.

The OVP Student Project Coordinator's Council will be responsible for overseeing the project development process. New projects will be reviewed and applications for funding evaluated. Issues related to volunteering as a learning service process will be explored. Recommendations to OVP staff for improvement of services will be made. Expenditures of student funds will be the responsibility of the Council. (Students who operate projects are spending their own money to do so). The Council will increase in effectiveness as new projects become stronger and Project Coordinators take a more active role in its deliberations. The Project Coordinator's Council meets on Wed. nights at 7 pm. in OVP.

In August, the University Year for Action (UYA) Program received a second grant from the federal government, thus enabling it to expand its total number of UYM/UYA volunteers from 32 to 50. Nationwide, UYA celebrated its first anniversary last month by receiving full programming status along side his cousins - Peace Corps, VISTA, Foster Grandparents, and others.

Overall guidelines for the new group of UYM students are the same as they were for the January Group. To be eligible, applicants must be fully matriculated UYM students enrolled (or planning to enroll) in UVM degree programs. Undergraduates commit themselves for a semester to full-time service to UYM communities. Graduate students, though not encouraged to do so, can enroll for longer time blocks. In addition, UYA volunteers are asked to live both at, and at the same economic level as, the communities they are serving. To this end, they receive a subsistence level, living stipend, roughly equivalent to that which VISTA's receive.

The first month of UYA volunteer service is largely given over to a variety of training exercises designed to orient the student to the UYA program guidelines, to his project, and to that low-income constituency which he'll be serving. The August training cycle, for example, began with "old" and "new" volunteers alike living together for a week on Isle La Motte and participating in a variety of group dynamics exercises and modular-training seminars. Community and University representatives participating in those seminars included Scott Skinner

(VPIRG), John Dooley (Vermont Legal Aid), Craig Murray (American Civil Liberties Union), Steve Gold (Drug Rehabilitation Program), Paul Fagan (Children's School), Beverly Moore (Welfare Rights), Tom Hudebath (UVM Environmental Program), and Dean Corrigan, Bill Bright and Bob Carlson from the University of Vermont College of Education.

At the Dept. of Corrections students work with delinquent youths. Crossroads is another project where students work with ex-offenders. Students also work with VPIRG and the Consumer Protection Bureau. Students help with the recycling project at Charlotte.

Red Rocks Park is still another place where volunteers help. Here they help with nature trails and the people that use them (young, blind, etc.).

DAY CARE:

Burlington Housing Authority, Kinderhaus, Burlington Headstart, Christian Nursery Center, Home Enrichment Center, and Ira Allen Kindergarten are all project where volunteers work.

Volunteers work in various capacities as aids, teach preschool skills, work in various activities, help with speech therapy and on the playground and others.

SPECIAL REQUESTS:

There is a list in OVP of various special requests that come in to the Office. These are usually not from existing projects. They range from being a companion for a 28 mentally retarded man to helping to restore a sawmill at Waterbury. They are as varied as the needs of the individuals in the community. The needs change from week to week as noted on the list in OVP.

YOUTH CENTERS:

Volunteers work with youth of various ages in all of the following: SHAC, Big Brother or Big Sister, the Next Thing, Baird's Children's Center, Sink or Swim, Scouting, Sara Holbrook Center, Youth Services Center, Waterbury Teen Center, and others. The work is in helping with the recreation, educational, crafts, arts, guidance and many other programs.

TUTORING:

Tutoring takes many different forms at many different places. It can be one-to-one or with groups of young or old. In any area of study there is a need for students to be tutors. Some of the projects are: BHS, ASPIRE, Urban Youth Center, Shaker Mountain School, Champlain School, Mountain Road School, Thayer, Wheeler, Barnes, and others, like Adult Basic Education. COME TO THE OFFICE AND SEE THE ENTIRE LIST - WE NEED YOU.

If anyone has any questions about the Office of Volunteer Programs, their offices are located on the East Balcony in Billings Center, telephone 656-2062.

Urban Center Hosts Many Activities

Milk cartons, paints, newspaper and all kinds of paraphernalia are strewn about. A couple of volunteers are working with a group of kids helping them to create things of their own. Other kids are painting or doing sculpture or other things.

But the end result is more than just the milk carton creation. The child has had fun. In addition he now has a friend who can help him with more than the art project of the moment. Through the volunteer and the work he does a shy and reclusive child can become a child who enjoys interacting and having fun with other children.

The Urban Center has many such projects going on. Many kids do not have fun when they are with other kids. Through the medium of art or drama or one of any number of activities kids can forget their fears and enjoy themselves. To give the kids a good group experience could be just what they need to express themselves.

There are also other types of activities going on. Some kids want to learn how to cook or sew or work with wood. Again, as with the other activities, kids can enjoy themselves and learn something. The exact nature of the activity is not the crucial issue since most kids enjoy learning anything new. Many times the kids can learn this new activity - and then teach it to a friend. It is also a great thrill for the child to be able to teach a new volunteer something which he has learned from someone else.

The Urban Center also wants to work with the parents in such areas as nutrition and other related areas. Volunteers are needed to get this off the ground. The concept of working with both the kids and their parents is an exciting possibility.

Other programming areas for the parents are certainly open to suggestions. The basic skill a volunteer needs to work with either parents or kids is enthusiasm. Enthusiasm is highly contagious.

Winooski Mobile Classroom Aids High School Dropouts

The field project of the UYA is the Winooski Mobile Classroom. It was initiated last year by UYA students from UVM. The classroom is in conjunction with the Winooski High School. The UVM/UYA students who are in the program are Dale Edminster, Tim Hilliard, Bonnie Morse.

The program provides for students from the Winooski High School who have dropped out of school or are about to. The reasons vary for the problems encountered with each of the students. One of the common ties between the students at the Winooski Mobile Classroom is the rejection of the traditional classroom for one of many reasons or a combination of reasons. The program lasts for up to a year depending on the student and when they entered the classroom. The students who are at the Classroom now are a combination of newcomers and also some who will go back to the High School in January.

The best description of the various aspects of the classroom comes from the students themselves. "It's a better way to learn because you have a better chance of liking what you learn. We get to help choose what we are going to learn about."

"It's different because the teachers are our friends and because of that we want to learn from them."

"We even helped build the place itself."

"We get to take field trips. Our last one was to Mount Philo and before that we went to other places like Boston, In Boston, we saw the USS Constitution, an Aquarium, a big museum, and lots of other things. We saw the ocean and even threw some of the teachers in. Dale didn't like that too much."

"When we got back we wrote reports about what we had seen there."

How's the attendance?
"It's good, everybody comes because they like it...well, that's why I come anyhow. We sort of feel like we're a part of something here."

"Most of the stuff we do means something and to me that's what matters. If there is one thing I hate it's to sit in a classroom and get bored with stuff that doesn't mean anything anyhow."

How does everyone get along?
"It's good, everybody comes because they like it...well, that's why I come anyhow. We sort of feel like we're a part of something here."

"We get along okay. We get along well with the teachers. Sometimes they don't get along so well with us. We all give each other a hard time when somebody comes in late. It's mostly fun."

"The guys get along fine."

"We'd get along better here than in the high school..."

What's an average day like?
"In the morning we plan what's going to happen that day or week. Sometimes we plan farther ahead than that. We talk about other things in the morning too, like what we like to learn about and why."

"In the afternoon or sometimes in the morning we have somebody come in and talk about some topic or other. Or we do something we had started some other day. Like at the end of last year we were writing a play and we were going to do it. It was a good play and the white man and the Indian."

"We also play games in the afternoon sometimes. Like today we're supposed to be playing football but instead we're talking to you."

I'm sorry.
"No that's okay we like talking to you about the program."

What time does the day end?
"It ended about an hour ago."

The Project Coordinators Council meets on Wed. nights at 7 pm. in OVP.

In August, the University Year for Action (UYA) program received a second grant from the federal government, thus enabling it to expand its total number of UVM/UYA volunteers from 32 to 50. Nationwide, UYA celebrated its first anniversary last month by receiving full programming status along side her cousins - Peace Corps, VISTA, Foster Grandparents, and others.

Overall guidelines for the new group of UVM students are the same as they were for the January Group. To be eligible, applicants must be fully matriculated UVM students enrolled (or planning to enroll) in UVM degree programs. Eligible students are expected to be full-time students for a calendar year or full-time service to low-income communities. Graduate students, though not encouraged to do so, can enroll for lesser time blocks. In addition, UYA volunteers are asked to live both in, and at the same economic level as, the communities they are serving. To this end, they receive a subsistence level living stipend, roughly equivalent to that which VISTA's receive.

The first month of UYA volunteer service is largely given over to a variety of training exercises designed to orient the student to the UYA program guidelines, to his project, and to that low-income constituency which he'll be serving. The August training cycle, for example, began with "old" and "new" volunteers alike living together for a week on Isle La Motte and participating in a variety of group dynamics exercises and modular training seminars. Community and University representatives participating in those seminars included, Scott Skinner (VPIRG), John Dockery (Vermont Legal Aid), Craig Murray (American Civil Liberties Union), Steve Gold (Drug Rehabilitation Program), Paul Pagan (Children's School), Beverly Moore (Welfare Rights), Tom Heddeth (UVM Environmental Program), and Dea Corrigia, Ben Bright and Bob Carlson from the University of Vermont College of Education.

Following the week at Isle La Motte, "new" volunteers began a period of on-the-job-training during which time project priorities and goals were articulated and job functions delineated. Also during this time, most new volunteers began living with low-income families for a three-week period. Where possible, families were chosen from among those served by the agency with whom the volunteer was placed. These live-in arrangements gave, both families and volunteers an opportunity to share, in a manner not possible in a more formal agency setting, common experiences, aspirations, and frustrations. Finally, in conjunction with faculty advisors and UYA staff, UYA volunteers finished their academic programs for the current semester.

UYA volunteers come from a variety of academic backgrounds as the following breakdown attests: College of Arts and Sciences: 14 students from 9 departments; College of Agriculture and Home Economics: 15 students from 4 programs; College of Education: 16 students from 6 programs; College of Medicine: 1 student; Experimental Program: 2 students; Votex: 2 students. About 25% of the UYA volunteers are graduate students, 50% are seniors, 20% are juniors, and the rest are sophomores.

Most volunteers see their involvement with UYA from one or more of three learning contexts: a) as a supplemental field experience to their academic major; b) as a pre-professional or vocational training experience (this may not necessarily be in conjunction with one's major - for example, a history major involved in a Welfare Rights law project because he intends to go to law school); c) as an existential learning experience apart from, or in addition to, one's professional academic interests. It is important to determine, with each initial UYA applicant, the learning experience which he expects to gain from the program. Only then can a volunteer's academic program be designed and integrated with his project placement.

UVM/UYA students are able to earn course credits under three general auspices. First, they can sign up for courses relating to their projects, but contract with individual faculty to fulfill requirements for those courses. Secondly, through an adjunct-faculty arrangement with the College of Education, UYA administrators are able to assess and grant some credit to UYA volunteers for the field experience itself. Thirdly, it sometimes happens that a UYA volunteer has to take a course in "regular" fashion (i.e. attend class, write papers, take exams) to fulfill concentration or other requirements. He is permitted to do so if the course would not appreciably duplicate his project commitment by making abnormally heavy academic demands. In sum, then, UYA students do not "receive" 30 hours of credit simply by virtue of being in the program. Rather, each student has a highly individualized academic program aimed at integrating his project needs with his personal and academic needs.

How are UYA Projects Developed? The ACTION agency has specified eight key program areas within which UYA projects are to be developed. Those areas, and the number of UVM/UYA volunteers currently in each, are as follows: Administration of Justice (2), Consumer Protection (3), Economic Development (0), Education (15), Environmental Protection (0), Health (10), Housing (4), Social Services (15). Eighty percent of the UVM volunteers are placed in "projects" - a term which indicates a number of volunteers working together for the same specific objective.

Some of the current UYA projects are: consumer protection; the UVM Day Care Center; The Winooski Mobile Classroom (working with drop-outs from the Winooski School System to get them a year's high school credit); Mobile Medical Van (providing health care to rural areas); TAP Water (Bringing running water and sanitary facilities to rural Vermonters); Burlington Housing Authority (low income housing). The remaining UYA Volunteers for reasons of geographic isolation, or special skills, or small sponsoring agencies - are placed singly with agencies as "Special Placements". Currently, UYA volunteers are working as "Special Placements" in Welfare Rights, legal aid, drug rehabilitation, Canaan High School, Planned Parenthood, and SHAC.

Ideas for UYA projects come from a variety of sources including low-income people (Welfare Rights) agencies, (Burlington Housing Authority), faculty (Mobile Medical Van), students (TAP Water), and UYA staff (OVP Clearinghouse Proposal). In mid-November we will be submitting a new group of project proposals to Washington for January startup. Those desiring to submit project proposals to the Office of Volunteer Programs for inclusion are urged to do so by the end of October. Further information on project guidelines can be obtained from OVP. Similarly, those students interested in applying to UYA should do it now.

Final interviews for new applicants will be conducted during the two-week period beginning November 13th.

Con Brio's Sounds Coming From Billings

UVM's CON BRIO ENSEMBLE will present a concert in the Main Lobby of Billings Center on November 9th at 8:00 pm. The concert is sponsored by SASpeakers in conjunction with the Billings Center Governing Board.

The program offered by the CON BRIO will include the following works: Four Songs by Samuel Barber ("Sure on this shining night", "A nun takes the veil", "Secrets of the old", and "Nocturne") sung by soprano Shari Fleming and accompanied by Marie Vogelmann, piano.

Professor Robert Wignem will perform Haydn's Second Sonata for Trombone (1963) accompanied by Marie Vogelmann.

Joseph Haydn's Quartet in G major for guitar, flute, violin, and viola opens the second half of the concert.

The concert will begin at 8:00 pm and admission is free.

Philip Tickets for the concert will be available at the Information Desk in Billings Center starting Monday, November 6 at 10:00 pm. There will be no preferred seating.

The Billings Center Main Floor will be closed off for the event from 6:00 pm until after the concert. This will be to enable the room to be set up and to guarantee silence for the performance.

The concert will begin at 8:00 pm and admission is free.

Visual Effects Outdo Music At Chicago Concert

by Doug Collette

Chicago's concert at Patrick Gym last Saturday was easily one of the most professional rock and roll concerts I've ever seen. Every aspect of their stage show, from the blazing theatrical lighting to the effortless manner in which the band charmed out their music, was refined to the ultimate degree.

But while Chicago looked magnificent, the music they played simply could not measure up to the visual grandeur. All seven members of Chicago are intelligent, capable musicians and their music, refreshingly simple and never pretentious, isn't so mundane as most of the stuff that achieves equal popularity on top-40 radio. However, it never really reaches its full potential. The juxtaposition of material from each of their LP's reveals the disparity between their earliest work, such as "Beginnings", in which I can catch a glimpse of the kind of truly substantial and sophisticated rock and roll Chicago could make, and more recent efforts such as "Dialogue" from their fifth album which sounds like Chicago is trying to recapture the spirit, substance and direction of Chicago Transit Authority.

The problem seems to be the band's tremendous commercial popularity which has prevented them from allowing their evolution as a musical unit to progress naturally. I really believe Chicago is sincere in their attempt to move in some new directions. But as long as they continue to put so much emphasis on their best known pieces, I seriously doubt whether they are going to be able to retain their personal sense of musical identity. They place their new music at the top of their set, as if they're just getting it out of the way and hearing them play it, I sense an almost desperate groping for a connection that would unite the band in something distinctive. And sadly, they don't seem to be able to get in tune in the necessary fashion.

The audience at UVM seemed well-satisfied with what they got, but I have to wonder if the same can be said of the band. It is possible for an artist to strike a balance between being true to himself and being true to his audience and I think that sooner or later Chicago is going to have to make a choice along those lines. Otherwise, the alternative would seem to be a further musical stagnation and I don't think Chicago can afford that.

Cats M

by Rick Steinberg

This past weekend, the University of Vermont football team, with a three game winning streak on the line, headed North to take on the Bears of Maine. The Bears also had a winning streak of their own, having defeated the Cats in their previous 50 encounters at Orono. At the end of the contest only one win streak would remain.

With just over 6 1/2 minutes left in the game it looked like the Maine hex would hover over the heads of the Cats for another two years. UVM trailed 14-0, looked extremely flat and appeared to be headed toward their third conference defeat putting them below the .500 mark.

But as was the case in last weeks 16-10 win over Hofstra, the Cats put on an extraordinary show in the final minutes to turn the game around. Two late touchdown drives, capped by a two point conversion with 1:05 remaining in the game gave the Cats a stunning 15-14 victory. This extended their win streak to four games. Their finest showing in a 3-2 record finish as the UVI upset game, the UVM disaster to were held rushing and would be penalty. The defensive team, although yards, the attack was overcome. The respectable touchdowns gave the Bears

CLOSE TO THE EDGE

Atlantic SD7244

Both Emerson, Lake and Palmer and Yes draw from a wide range of musical sources in what is primarily an attempt to fuse the stylistic complexity of classical music with the direct power of rock and roll.

For E.L.P., however, eclecticism is their main drawback. One can so easily recognize this influence here and that influence there that an overall reaction to their music might very well be: "Well, I've heard it all somewhere before, in a number of places."

Emerson, Lake and Palmer do not have a readily identifiable music that can truly be called their own.

Triology suffers most from glaring lapses of eclecticism in which the juxtaposition of different idioms is laughably incongruous. The superficial flash of Emerson's keyboard technique only makes the faults of the band more obvious while obscuring not only his own talent and skill, but that of his two partners.

On the other hand, Yes have synthesized their influences into something approaching originality. Close to the Edge is probably their most ambitious work and suggests that if any of these classical/rock/electronic bands is going to achieve something truly distinctive, then Yes may be the ones.

Cats Make It Four Straight

by Rick Swoborg

This past weekend, the University of Vermont football team, with a three game winning streak on the line, headed north to take on the Bears of Maine. The Bears also had a winning streak of their own, having defeated the Cats in their previous 50 encounters at Orono. At the end of the contest only one win streak would remain.

With just over 6 1/2 minutes left in the game it looked like the Maine hex would hover over the heads of the Cats for another two years. UVM trailed 14-0, looked extremely flat and appeared to be headed toward their third conference defeat putting them below the .500 mark.

But as was the case in last week's 16-10 win over Hofstra, the Cats put on an extraordinary show in the final minutes to turn the game around. Two late touchdown drives, capped by a two point conversion with 1:05 remaining in the game gave the Cats a stunning 15-14 victory. This extended their win streak to four games and gave them their first Yankee Conference showing in many years, posting a 3-2 record. The Cats could finish as high as second should URI upset UConn in their game the weekend after next.

The first half was a total disaster for the Cats. They were held to only four yards rushing and any sizable gain would be nullified by a penalty. They were plagued by penalties both offensively and defensively all afternoon, amassing 110 yards in all. Although Olson threw for 140 yards, their weak running attack was to much to overcome.

The defense played a respectable first half, but two touchdown passes by Ron Cote gave the Bears a 14 point lead.

Maine's first score came at 14:36 of the first quarter on a 55 yard drive aided by a pass interference call. The touchdown came on a 14 yard pass from Cote, who found AB-Conference end Dave Paul standing all alone outside the endzone. Paul took the ball in unassisted. The PAT by McConnell gave the Bears a 7-0 lead.

Their second score was a result of the Maine defense trapping the Cats in their own zone and forcing a short punt. The Bears got excellent field position taking over on the Cat's 29. Cote wasted little time and three plays later hit sophomore end Steve Leathe on a 27 yard touchdown pass. McConnell once again converted the extra point and the Cats were now two touchdowns down. This is how things ended up at halftime. In the second half the Cat defense played exceptionally well and kept the game within reach. They limited the Bears to 9 yards rushing and 34 yards passing while holding them scoreless.

Swimathon Brings In Money

This past Sunday, Nov. 5th, members of the men's and women's swim teams organized a Swimathon, to raise money for new lines for the swimming lanes. Sponsors were solicited to pay a certain amount per lap. The swimming was continuous from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. The estimated monetary gain of this event was between $600 and $800.

Three of the outstanding performers on Sunday were head coach for the men, Lee Leggett and Sandra Farrell, head coach of the women's swim team. Also in on it was Paul Reinhardt, an assistant coach for the men's team.

The first meet for this year is slated for November 18, when the women host an Invitational Meet.

The men's team, who went 10-0 last year, start their season early in December.

Women Perform Well Against Strong Opponents

by Joan B. Mollica

Over the past weekend UVM's field hockey team traveled to Yale University and played three games in the Northeast Intercollegiate Tournament. Eleven teams participated including: University of Mass., University of Rhode Island, Radcliffe, University of Bridgeport (Conn.), and Yale. Vermont played URI to a tie, and defeated both Southern Conn. State College and Fitchburg State College (Mass.). This tournament brought UVM's season to a close; it was an undefeated season with eight wins, no losses and three ties. In the first game at Yale, Vermont tied URI 0-0. Although Vermont outplayed their opponents, Vermont could not put in altogether to score. UVM's goalie, Val Gardner did not make any saves in the first half, and tallied only two in the second half. Next UVM took on (and over) a game with Fitchburg State College. The score was UVM 4 and Fitchburg 1. Coach

Maryn Chase commented "that UVM took out their frustrations of the first game and poured six goals into the cage." Scoring for Vermont in the first half were: Pam Jones, Sue Murphy, and Marty Fain with one each. Pam Jones scored twice more in the next half with Nancy Lovegren (continued on page ten)

THE INSIDER

On the night of October 23, the Varsity Hockey Team started practice at Gutterson Field House. There was an air of excitement and optimism as the more than fifty candidates skated onto the ice for the first session. Obviously, there were a few new faces and some that were missing. The loss of graduating seniors Ted Yeates, Sam Simmons, Ned Grant, and Bob Hodde will surely be felt; however, we feel that we have the talent and depth to fill those holes.

The high scoring first line of last year is in good health. Fred Hunt with his cannon-like shots, and more than ample speed, appears ready. Captain Pat Wright is coming off a knee injury and is as strong as ever. The consistent scoring ability of Ted Cote will be a constant threat to our opponents. The other nine forward positions are indefinite as of this writing, and the fierce competition for those jobs is molding us into a well conditioned unit under Coach Jim Cross.

With our first games coming up over Thanksgiving vacation (R.P.I., St. Lawrence, and Clarkson), the pressure is mounting. This tension sometimes creates some unorthodox occurrences.

Goalie Steve Eckerson lost two contact lenses on two different collisions with on-rushing attackers in the same practice. On another occasion, Freshman center Tim O'Connell had to leave his skates behind and show us his Zamboni driving talents as the regular Zamboni driver was "missing." Our two managers Joe Foley and Paul Aleksovski are in typical rare form. What more can be said.

Finally, there are a few universal questions everyone in the locker room is asking. When are we going to see the improvement to the rink, promised at the end of last season; namely the plexi-glass and the new seats? Is Paul Aleksovski ever going to learn how to blow a whistle? And will Coach Cross ever explain to us just what he meant when he said at the beginning of a drill, "Be careful! We don't want any head-on conclusions!"

UVM Hockey This Saturday

This Saturday, November 11, The University of Vermont Hockey Team will make its first appearance of the year at 6:30 p.m. They will host the Montreal Jr. "B" Flyers, an amateur team from Canada.

The Montreal Flyers, the same club that Vermont's Roger Mallette played for, has produced such standout players as Vermont's Yeates brothers, Ted and Jim, and several other top Eastern Collegiate hockey players.

Saturday's hockey game is sponsored by the University's Centennial Club and all proceeds will go towards its grants-in-aid program. Cost of the game for everyone is $1.00.

The Lite Side

by S. G. T. Callihan

This past semester, and in particular two weeks ago, I went mountain climbing (or if you will, rock scrambling) with several of my friends. On our excursion two weeks ago, we happened across a member of the opposite sex, ambling about on one of the lesser peaks that lead to Camel's Hump. Not expecting anything of this nature on the mountain, we were curious as to what her name was and what she was doing on the mountain.

For the sake of not embarrassing this person we will only say that her initials were J.H. (although this is not necessarily true), and she explained she had gone hiking with five others, one of whom was suppose to have known where the trails were. She further explained she had only consented to go on (as she termed it) "this idiotic hike", so that she could get away from UVM on a Saturday and prepare herself to tackle Mary Fletcher Hill.

Having been at UVM for several years ourselves, we sympathized with her desire to get away from the place on weekends. Ever since they did away with Saturday morning classes, there hasn't been much to do on this first day of each weekend. We, my friends and I, admitted the University was no longer the Shang-ra-la we once knew.

Having lead sheltered lives on campus, we had never heard about any excitement on the top of "Fletcher Hill." We asked her to elaborate.

She told us that contrary to popular belief, skiing was not the biggest winter sport on campus. By far the cheapest and most exhilarating sport was that of traying.

She went on to say, "After ripping off, excuse me, borrowing several trays (courtesy of SAGA), you proceed to the hill behind Mary Fletcher, and, firmly affixing one's posterior on a tray, you prepare to maim one's self by zooming down the hill." This she said constitutes fun for modern college students.

Those surviving the first run are rewarded by the fact they can make another run. Those that do not survive are rewarded by knowing the UVM (You Haul) Rescue Wagon will arrive soon, and these poor victims will give the rescue teams some more practice.

Right about this time we were disturbed by some idiot running up the trail, his fifty pound back making him seem more an astronaut than a hiker. Assuming he was the "all knowing" trail boss and rather than be shackled with him for the rest of our hike, my friends and I silently stalked off into the woods, leaving J.H. to fend for herself.

The title track covers the entire first side in four interwoven movements. Yes are more successful in mood, texture and color, less for the sake of appearance than for the fulfillment of a musical conception; each musician looking toward a definite goal rather than simply displaying unorthodox instrumental/vocal technique as an end in itself. Rick Wakeman's keyboards serve the crucial function of integrating twentieth-century electronic sound into a framework in which the straightforwardness of rock and roll tempers the grandiose classical elements, fusing in a music very nearly revolutionary.

Side two displays a more basic approach. "And You And I" is another multi-instrumental piece, based on acoustic guitars and the high-pitched vocal harmonies that are one of Yes's trademarks. The concluding track, "Siberian Khatru," is proof that, when they want to boogie, Yes are at no loss.

The pretentious fakery of E.L. & P. pales in comparison with this well-thought out and expertly executed album.

GERONIMO'S CADILLAC
Michael Murphy
A&M SP 4358
JOHN DAVID SOUTHER
Asylum SD 5055

It's difficult to achieve a spirited musical treatment of intelligent, mature songs, but Geronimo's Cadillac is an album.

Michael Murphy's songs are honest, emotional statements and each one of them is given a direct, sensitive instrumental complement. The compositions reach their fullest potential as the musicians utilize their expressive talent. That neither the songs or the playing suffers for the communion makes this album much like a Rod Stewart LP. In addition to which, Murphy is a capable practitioner of the dynamics of mood, able to achieve shifts with the subtlety of Van Morrison.

All of which is equally true of John David Southern whose music possesses a rather sober simplicity, despite its basically airy tone. Southern draws on a variety of influences, but even when they are most overt, as in "The Last One" or "Jesus in the Rain," you can feel his speaking for himself through these idioms, the connotations and associations inherent in the music made irrelevant by the force of Southern's personality. The most notable aspect of this LP, however, is the completeness and maturity in the songs and the musicianship. John David Southern cares so much about his music that he's waited until he was truly prepared to construct a first-rate record. And he surely has. This LP ranks with the records of Peter Frampton and Loggins and Messina as superb efforts, debut albums or no.

Soccer Ends With Tie Game

by Tom Farris

This past Saturday, UVM played host to the University of Massachusetts in soccer, and came up with a 0-0 tie for their efforts. This came to close one of the worst seasons for the UVM soccer team since it went to the intercollegiate route in 1964. The one worth-while aspect of this tie is that even though we didn't win at least we didn't lose either.

Some may wonder why this is beneficial, after all it is really a nothing sort of victory. In answer, at least to this reporter, those teams that end the season winning are usually psyched up for the next year, while those that have a losing trend, carry this over to the next season, and start the season demoralized. UVM will, hopefully, bounce back from this year's disastrous season and once again be a strong contender for the Yankee Title.

This week's game was rather boring with only a few exciting moments. Both sides had chances to score but failed to capitalize on them. Several of chances UVM had came on head shots off corner shots but the shots sailed over the cross bar.

UMass had its chance for victory in the closing seconds of the second half when a shot was booted in, but hit the post and was deflected.

UVM had control of the ball for most of the game. It was a real challenge for UVM to score. UMass's defense was set up so that they had, at times, five or six people back in front of their goal and UVM had to resort to the long kicking game, in an attempt to score.

Jim Taft went all the way in the net for UVM and tallied up 11 saves. His most spectacular save occurred when a UMass wing broke clear of the defense and went in alone on Taft. Taft came out of the net and blocked the shot on his chest and definitely saved the day for UVM.

The Cats, who ended this season 2-10-1, will lose only four seniors, Pete Birge, Jack Connelly, captain Jack Shea and Vince Maesau. With twelve people returning, UVM should have the experience needed to make a good team next year, and will perform better than they did this year.

U.S.S.C. (Eastern Intercollegiate Synchronized Swim Conference) Competition at Forbush Pool, UVM on November 11th 9:00 to 5:00.

Tournament Closes Season

Vermont played Southern Conn. State College's second squad and won 1-0 in the third and final game for Vermont in the tournament. Marty Fain scored in the opening minutes of play for the only goal of the game. "UVM totally dominated play but excellent goalkeeping thwarted UVM's numerous scoring attempts. We outshot them about 47 to 3," stated Miss Chase.

Southern Conn. State College, University of Mass., and Bridgewater State College (Mass.) were considered the strongest teams in the tournament. Miss Chase was pleased with Vermont's "very creditable performance in their first appearance" and felt that "next year UVM could expect to be paired against stronger opposition."

Special congratulations to: Junior Pam Bateman, center halfback, who was selected as the outstanding player on the team; to Freshman Pam Jones, right wing, for her three tournament goals—all in one game; to Marty Fain, left inner, for a season total of 13 goals to make her UVM's top scorer in 1972.

In the eleven games UVM played this season they tallied 37 goals against their opponents while holding the opposition to 10 goals, an average of less than one goal per game. UVM's goalie, Val Gardner, amassed thirty-nine saves throughout the season and set a record of seventeen saves in one game against Middlebury.

Cats Extend Win Streak At Maine

But more was needed than a fine defensive effort to produce a victory; the Cat offense had to move. The defense gave them a golden opportunity halfway through the final period. Defensive left tackle John Memphis scooped up a fumble by Bear halfback Jack Lomborghini on the Maine 30. The Cats giving Olson excellent protection, finally put things together. After moving 13 yards down to the 17, Olson hit Tony Jones as a down and out pattern and Jones took it in for the score. Jakubicki's conversion left the Cats only 7 points down.

As had been the case throughout the half, the Bears played cautiously on offense hoping to sit on their lead. This strategy proved costly. After failing to move the ball, the Bears were forced to punt with only a few minutes remaining in the game. A poor punt by Mike Porter, going out of bounds on the UVM 46 gave the Cats their second break of the quarter.

Olson's first pass was batted down, but on the following play a screen pass to Barry Visen gained 24 yards down to the Maine 30. Olson then threw for 10 more to Tony Jones giving the Cats a first down on the 20.

Another completion, this time to Coon, coupled with a 7 yard run by Visen put the ball on the 5. Olson then hit Tim Sullivan with a perfect pass in the endzone. The Cats now trailed 14-13 with only 1:05 remaining.

Coach Faltinsen decided to go for the win and UVM lined up for a two point conversion. Olson once again found Sullivan in the endzone and Cats went ahead to stay 15-14.

For the second straight week, the Cats produced in a unified come from behind victory in the final minute.

This game revealed the nature of years team. They never give up, always feel they can win, and give 100 percent throughout the game. With this attitude the Cats have produced four straight victories and may very well end up the season with two more wins.

Next week, at Centennial Field, UVM will take on Northeastern, a team riding a five game win streak of their own. Once again a win streak will come to an end.

Gymnastics Season Opens

The University of Vermont gymnastics club, opens its 1972-73 season this Saturday (Nov. 11), hosting the Plattsburgh St. gymnasts at the Roy L. Patrick Gymnasium, beginning at 1 p.m.

Plattsburgh is coached by former Olympic mentor, Bud Beyer, while the Vermont club is coached by Tom Dunkley.

Vermont will be paced by captain Jake Foley and Chris Kent, two of the top all-around gymnasts in the area. Kent was the 1971 State High School champion, while Foley placed eighth in vaulting at the 1972 NCAA New England Championships.

John Kenecaley, a sophomore, and freshman, Fred Lee, will add strength to the all-around competition for the Cats, while returning specialists include Dave Housington, Cliff White, Dennis Sabourin and last year's captain, Doug Mackey.

Following Saturday's home meet, the Vermont gymnastics club will host the Ridgewood

(N.J.) Gymnastics Club, coached by Vermont alumnus, Tom Pomer, on Nov. 18, also at 1 p.m.

This Saturday's meet with Plattsburgh is free and open to the public.

Maybe the way to change the world is to join a large corporation.

We don't make a lot of noise, but this is where it's really happening. You see, a large corporation like Kodak has the resources and the skill to make this world a little more decent place to live. And we intend to do what we can to see that this is exactly what happens.

Take our home city, Rochester, New York for example. We cut water pollution in the Genesee River by using natural bacteria to dispose of untreated wastes. We cut air pollution by using electrostatic precipitators in a new combustible waste disposal facility. We helped set up a black enterprise program in downtown Rochester, and we've been experimenting with film as a way to train both teachers and students—including some students who wouldn't respond to anything else.

And we didn't stop with Rochester. Kodak is involved in 47 countries all over the world. Actively involved.

Why? Because it's good business. Helping to clean the Genesee River not only benefits society... but helps protect another possible source for the clean water we need to make our film. Our combustible waste disposal facility not only reduces pollution... but just about pays for itself in heat and power production and silver recovery. Our black enterprise program not only provides an opportunity for the economically disadvantaged... but helps stabilize communities in which Kodak can operate and grow. And distributing cameras and film to teachers and students not only helps motivate the children... but helps create a whole new market.

In short, it's simply good business. And we're in business to make a profit. But in furthering our business interests, we also further society's interests.

And that's good. After all, our business depends on society. So we care what happens to it.

Kodak

What Is The Of Cam

by Alan Wolfe

From The Chronicle of Higher Education
Nearly a decade has passed since the campus rebellions of the 1960's. From beginnings, there was general agreement that some changes were needed in American colleges and universities. Student radicals would have had the support they did (and faculty administration would not have felt so guilty defensive) if archaic institutions and practices had not been in need of considerable change.

Now that the turmoil has subsided, what happened? What changes were made? How much effect have the attempts at change had?

The most significant change has been attitudinal one. Younger faculty members who completed graduate school and started teaching during that decade will have a difficult time being totally conventional. Whatever happens to them, social scientists who keep their eyes and ears open simply had to discard conventional theories about American politics and teachers of every subject could no longer ignore the faces that had a habit of appearing from time to time in their classrooms.

Similarly, students are not quite the same. Those who have suggested that students returning to the 1950's for their inspiration just hoping. That decade was characterized by a general fear of change and an acceptance of rules. American students in 1972 may no longer

Jack Anderson To Speak

Washington Columnist Scheduled For November 28

SA Speakers will present Washington Post columnist Jack Anderson on Tuesday evening, November 28 at 8:00 pm in the Patrick Gymnasium. Mr. Anderson will replace CBS Newsmen Dan Rather who cancelled due to prior commitments.

Anderson is perhaps best known for his work in uncovering the US's pro Pakistani bias in the conflict between that country's India. He is also known for his uncovering of the ITT affair which included the donation of $400,000 to the Republican party after the Justice department decided favorably in a case involving the company. He is also known for his attack on Senator Thomas Eagleton which possibly cost the Senator his chance for the Vice Presidency.

Here is a part of a transcript of one of Anderson's question and answer periods at another college.

QUESTION: Have you ever been prosecuted for publishing secret documents?

ANDERSON: There is no law which prevents me from revealing classified information. There is a law, however, against a person giving it to me. Daniel Ellsberg, for example, is

Medical Aid To Indochina Passes Senate, But Faces Referendum

by Jeri Covey

The major issue up for discussion at the Student Association Senate meeting was the motion for the allocation of $3,000 to the Committee Against the War for the purpose of donating this sum to Medical Aids to Indochina. In a financial committee report Treasurer Tom Grant recommended that this motion not be passed.

Grant stated four reasons for his recommendation: 1) it would not provide services for UVM students, 2) there were other alternatives for raising the money, 3) there was no precedence for such an action and recommended that if the motion was passed that it go to a student referendum for a final decision, 4) and that the $3,000 is not available to be spent now. The other alternatives that Grant mentioned are to set up a committee to solicit money from students individually, to work in cooperation with the Ethan Allen Club and the American and International Red Cross, and to work in cooperation with the Medical Department of UVM.

The argument was brought up by Glen Austin, Senator from Mills Hall, that this allocation might be unconstitutional because the SA Constitution states that SA monies shall be allocated for the purpose of recreational, social, educational, and cultural functions of SA members. Gene Bergman, Davis Hall, said that the motion should be passed because the Senators should feel "an obligation to the people of Indochina to come to their aid." This statement was countered by Sharon Reed, Gamma Phi Beta, that the Senators have an "obligation to our constituencies first", and that we "should not confuse obligation with sympathy."

Terry Demas, Town Senator, argued against the motion saying that "our moral commitment is 'to go out and get the money.' He said that everybody with a pet charity comes to the SA for money and that this is just an easy way out, it would be "more to the point to allocate money to fund a drive" to raise the $3,000.

A roll call vote was taken on the motion to allocate $3,000 to Medical Aid to Indochina through the committee Against the War, 20 in favor, 23 opposed, and 11 abstentions. The Senate then called for a division of the House; this is a vote in which each Senator's ballot is weighed proportionally to the size of his constituency. The vote was in favor, 54.99%, opposed, 38.94%, and absent, 6.07%. The motion was passed.

Those Senators that voted for the motion were: Jim Hope, Austin Hall; Buckham; Barb Taylor, Burgess; Christie; Jim Judd, Converse; Gene Bergman, Davis; Karen Nolte, Redstone; Steve Karl, Robinson; Mike Burns, Simpson; Janet Goss, Tupper; Phi Delta Theta; and the following Town Senators, Steve Goodkind, David Mahan,

Debating Tournament At UVM This Weekend

This Friday and Saturday throughout the campus University of Vermont there will be heard many debates going on during the 27th Annual University of Vermont Invitational Debate Tournament. Schools from throughout the northeast including Kent State, Army Navy, Dartmouth, Brown, St. Lawrence University, University of Massachusetts, University of Maine, Boston University, Syracuse, Norwich, Plattsburgh, Geneseo, Rockport, and Bowdoin will be attending. From 30-35 debates will be held simultaneously in the Waterman Building, Lafayette Hall and Voter Headquarters. For the tournament will be in the Billings Center under the direction of some 200 non-debating students.

Every year, Pershing Rifles furnishes the transportation for the guests from the place where they are staying to the debate rooms. Overall manager and director of the tournament is Linda Weldy, a junior at the University. Her assistant is Sharon Reed, who will be in charge of procuring and assigning better than 200 chairman-time-keepers that will be needed. In charge of transportation is John Withers of Pershing Rifles, while Mary Ellen Pisanelli is the chairman arranging for the Saturday evening banquet.

The University of Vermont will enter at least 8 Novice debaters and a minimum of 4 Varsity. All together they will have 36 debates during the weekend. Schedule of Events are as follows:

Registration, 4-6, Sberston

S.A. Has A New Albatross

The SA is currently attempting to revive the defunct publication, The Albatross, a campus wide system of course evaluation. Students are presently forced to enroll in courses about which they often know little or nothing. With the exception of occasional comments gleaned from acquaintances, enrollment decisions are made with no knowledge of what courses will entail. Attempts to remedy the situation have failed in the past largely because of "the difficulty involved in correctly discerning relevant information from the previous editions of the Albatross. The new edition will attempt to serve the needs of students and not the faculty or administration, making it more readable and therefore, more valuable to students.

The SA has devised a new questionnaire which will enable them to publish a systematized evaluation for most courses offered in the University. The questionnaire will be administered in class by students, except when permission to do so is withheld by the professor.

The questionnaire is composed of twenty eight questions, twenty three requiring yes-no responses and five multiple choice. The data will be assembled and published in booklet form with the percentage totals for each response listed.

The revised Albatross will be available to students in the spring, prior to the time of pre-enrollment for the fall semester. "Anyone wishing to see the questionnaire in advance or offer suggestions regarding its format is requested to stop at the SA office in Billings Center before December 1.

Students We're Denied Ballots; Who Was Responsible?

by Barbara Frankel

Neither City Hall nor McGovern leaders want to claim responsibility for between fifteen and fifty UVM students who had registered with the Democratic notaries and were subsequently told, by the Burlington Bd. of Elections, when attempting to vote, that they were not listed anywhere. They were therefore unable to cast their votes.

According to Scott McKay, who was one of the campus leaders for McGovern, problems were mainly caused by a new computer checklist which wiped many names from the list, including his own. McKay commented: "Some of it could have been our fault, as there is a possibility that some notaries lost forms or took down incorrect facts." However, the Democrats, McKay contended, took a list of all people, they had registered down to City Hall, and did not lose any of these papers. "Any form that the notaries gave us, got to City Hall. A few people had trouble, but they were notified", he added. Democrats ran checks on all of their registered voters and could not find any discrepancies between their lists and City Hall's. McKay repeated that while the fifteen new Democratic notaries may have been at some fault, he feels, the forms were lost somewhere at City Hall. He requested that all students who had problems voting contact him at the Young Democrats.

Registration forms were given to the people whom they registered. One of their notaries stated, "We didn't have any problems. Everything went well. Everyone we registered was able to vote." Dick Cassidy, one of the Democratic notaries, voiced his opinion, "To my knowledge, no one that I registered was unable to vote. I thought, however, that there was going to be a problem on Election Day, so I checked the lists and all of those that I had done were registered."

The Office of Voter Registration at City Hall has been very upset by the lost forms. According to officials there, they have searched thoroughly and cannot find the missing papers. They claim no politics were involved and that the loss must have occurred in the McGovern camp. According to Chief Clerk Hendry, "During election time there is always confusion and if any forms were lost it was purely by accident. In any case, it was not our fault."

In addition to the controversy over who is responsible for the lost forms, the fact remains that these students were not allowed to vote. The experiences of UVM student Tom Legan seem typical of these. Legan registered last semester with the Democrats in Billings Center. When he went to vote, he found his form was in order and proceeded to his local Burlington poll on Election Day. Once there, he was told that his name was not on any list and that he could not vote. Legan went to several other polling places and City Hall in a vain attempt to vote. He claims to have spoken to at least fifty other people with VPIRG Would Save The St. J. & L.C.

by Jeff Ewen

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group will probably oppose the abandonment of the St. Johnsbury and Lamolite County Railroad, a 99-mile line running from Swanton to St. Johnsbury through Vermont's Northeast Kingdom. Although no action has been taken by VPIRG's trustees as of yet, it appears likely that the organization will at least go do record as being opposed to the line's demise.

The railroad's owner, Samuel Pinsky of Boston, has applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to abandon operations along the entire length of the line. According to the railroad, continued operation of the road would require track and roadbed repairs costing at least one million dollars, a sum that the company just doesn't have.

Vermont has faced the prospect of the line's demise once before, in 1966, when the former owners of the St. Johnsbury and Lamolite County asked the ICC for permission to cease operations. At that time Pinsky, the owner of several other small railroads in New England, agreed to

First Woman In UVM-Sponsored Management Training Program

by Dan Haslam

Mrs. Joy Haslam, currently a secretary in the Graduate College Admissions Office, will leave her position to become the first woman in a management training program sponsored by the University this year to promote women and minorities within the University.

Mrs. Haslam describes her current elevation as a success for herself and her sex, saying, "I've been breaking barriers all my life." During her college years she was the first woman business manager on The Cornell Bulletin, the school newspaper for Cornell University. Her unusual college career included flying lessons, and the summer of 1948 she spent bicycling and thumbing her way around Europe via American Youth Hostel "seeing the ravages of war."

Her working career started that same year, and she was the national executive secretary of Pi Lambda Theta, a national honorary society for women in the field of education. After her marriage in 1950, she was secretary to the manager of the College Club in Seattle, Washington.

During the years that followed Mrs. Haslam retreated from the professional world, now saying that, "A woman should give her family and children the benefit of her presence for the years which are most important for the family and children's development." She believes that her retreat professionally did not interfere with her own development. She worked voluntarily for community betterment as well as for her two alma maters, Emma Willard School and Cornell University.

She returned to an academic community in 1963 when she came to UVM on a part-time basis with the Medical College admissions office. She feels her admission years from the working world had their effect on her. "I had to learn what an electric typewriter and dictaphone were." In the UVM community Mrs. Haslam has worked in the offices of Military Science, the Student Directory, the Bookstore, and the film library as acting film librarian. She joined the Graduate College in 1965, and describes its growth as "physically 800%, and the staff has more than doubled."

Her most recent interest in the women's liberation movement is that "A woman should be educationally prepared to meet any crisis that might confront her family. She should be prepared to promote herself if she should be forced back into a solitary existence. In my case as a recent widow, I find my business senses are sharpening themselves for a redirection, a new growth of myself." On the liberation movement as a whole, she feels "It has definite value as a promoter of women's causes, but the methods of achieving women's goals could be more constructively moderated." She states her biggest personal complaint as being "If a working woman contributes to Social Security, then she should also collect from Social Security her full benefits regardless of her marital status." Mrs. Haslam pointed out that currently, a woman pays into Social Security and generally never sees a return on this tax investment.

Before her prospective position with the UVM, Mrs. Haslam was chairman of the N.A.E.C.A., a publicity committee, an organization of UVM employees concerning working conditions and benefits at UVM.

She describes herself as an avid sportsman, in swimming, golf, and tennis, and she has been active in the Patrick gym with the "grunters and groaners," other UVM secretaries working for physical fitness exercises and jogging. "We are all attempting to build up our endurance," Mrs. Haslam commented.

Bring Back Old Toys So Others Can Enjoy Them

Toys for Tots has become an annual project at UVM; its purpose is to provide area children with Christmas toys. In the past, toys have been distributed by OVP through the Department of Social Welfare, and various senior centers around the state. Members of senior centers have offered to repair broken toys and then distribute them. Toys have also been given directly to Baird Center, Brandon Training School, etc. Many students go home over the Thanksgiving recess and can bring back toys that are not being used any more. If you wish to give, the toys should be in good condition or repairable. Toys can be dropped off at Tau Epsilon Phi (383 College Street), Kappa Alpha Theta (215 South Prospect Street), or the Office of Volunteer Programs (Billings Center) at any time. Your toys will help a child to have a merry Christmas.

being indicted for giving secrets to the New York Times, but the Justice Department, so far as I know, is not prosecuting the newspaper. I'm in the same category as the New York Times. I receive the information; I do not steal it. In the first place, if they accused me or anybody else of stealing the documents that I have published, I would simply say: What do you mean, stealing? You want to know where they are? I'll be glad to tell you where they are. They're in Kissinger's safe, right where they've always been. How could I have stolen them? He's got them. I have copies but he's got the originals. Nobody stole them. Somebody may have made a copy of them, but then, after all, whose are they? Do they belong to Kissinger? I would have to argue that Kissinger is the thief. It was he who originally took the information that belonged to you and me, information that we were entitled to have. And I would be glad to go to court to prove that before a jury.

The doors to the speech will open at 7:30 pm. Tickets will be available at the door for all those who are not members of the Student Association.

Admission is free to SA members and $1.50 to all others. It should be explained that the Speaker's Bureau is now charging admission for faculty and staff members because it is felt with the student activities fee that students are already paying their entrance. Rising speaker's costs (up over 55% in the past four years) have necessitated a charge which indicates an audience member's fair share in the presentation of the speaker.

purchase the line and keep it running on the condition that the railroad's shippers pay a temporary surcharge, on each carload of freight handled, and that the St. J. & L. D.'s connections provide it with more interchange traffic. Unfortunately the promised increased revenue and traffic have, for the most part, failed to materialize.

Since taking control of the line, the Finsky management has invested about $2 million dollars in the line, but, according to Finsky, the company has run out of money.

The effects of the railroad's abandonment would be widely felt in northern Vermont. According to the state's Agency for Development and Community Affairs, three major plants located on the line have indicated their intention to close if the road ceases operation. Approximately 160 jobs, with an annual payroll of $1,250,800, would be lost, and this would result in lower tax revenues for the state combined with increased outlays for unemployment compensation and welfare. Many of the businesses served by the St. Johnsbury and Lamotte County that have not indicated an intention to close if the line folds have stated that the higher transportation costs that would be incurred if they were forced to ship by truck would be passed along in the form of higher prices for the area's consumers. This would particularly hurt the region's farmers, who would suffer from increased grain and fertilizer costs.

VPRG's Fred Jagals said that alternative employment opportunities for those left jobless by the demise of the railroad appear to be few. Jagals also indicated that the lack of rail transportation would hinder any efforts to attract new industry to the Northeast Kingdom.

The state is currently looking for a buyer for the troubled line, but it may have to help finance the railroad's rehabilitation before any potential purchasers agree to buy the property. Several companies are reportedly interested in such a deal, but none have yet made a firm commitment.

It is also conceivable that, if a buyer cannot be found, the state might purchase the line and lease it. Such a proposal would, however, face strong opposition in the deficit-conscious legislature.

Called the Dean's Student Advisory Board, Waterbury, Vt., 74; Robert Richardson, East Hardwick, Vt., 71.

Students Voice

For the fourth year, undergraduates of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics are bringing student viewpoint and advice to College administrators.

Monthly, the Dean's Student Advisory Committee meets with Deans Dove, Donovan, Kelly, and Davison to express their views on University programs, policies, and future plans. Each member is also asked to bring a different undergraduate to the six meetings held during the school year.

Thus, 42 different students are given an opportunity to express their opinions on working conditions.

Don't Talk, Walk For

There are a lot of people in this tight little world to whom hunger is a way of life—for many a way of death. It's a slow, unmerciful death where there isn't enough food to live on but too much to kill you right off.

CROP, the Community Hunger Appeal of Church World Service has been working with people overseas since 1947. CROP not only feeds hungry people and helps them produce more food, but finances cooperatives, family planning clinics, and agricultural scholarships.

At noon on Sunday Dec. 3rd, there will be a "Walk for the Hungry," leaving from Patrick Gym. We will walk together through Burlington, Winooski, Essex Jct., back to Patrick Gym. The entire walk will be ten miles, but a Walker can go fewer miles if he chooses. Each Walker will get as many people as he can to pledge a certain amount of money for every mile he walks and this money will be sent to CROP.

Called the Dean's Student Advisory Committee, this year's group consists of Jill Davidson, Suffern, N. Y., '74; Brad Eldred, Waterbury, Vt., '74; Robert Ide, Danville, Vt., '74; Barbara McConnell, Princeton, N. J., '75; and Karen Richardson, East Hardwick, Vt., '73.

Students Voice Your Opinions And Be Heard

For the fourth year, undergraduates of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics are bringing student viewpoints and advice to College administrators.

Monthly, the Dean's Student Advisory Committee meets with Deans Dowe, Donovan, Kelly, and Davison to express their views on University programs, policies, and future plans. Each member is also asked to bring a different undergraduate to the six meetings held during the school year.

Thus, 42 different students are given an opportunity to express their opinions on operation of the University, and to bring to the attention of the deans and department chairmen other questions needing attention.

At each meeting, one of two departmental chairmen of the College faculty are invited to meet with the deans and student advisors. Thus, during the school year, every department chairman is involved with the student group.

Dean Thomas W. Dowe says, "This plan of giving student representatives a voice in policy making and future planning of the college is working extremely well. Both the deans and department chairmen look to this advisory committee as a sounding board for current student opinion and advice for planning the future."

Members of the Dean's Student Advisory Committee also serve as members of several standing faculty committees of the College. For example, Brad Eldred is a member of the College Honors Committee; Robert Ide, the Studies Committee; and Barbara McConnell, the Curriculum Committee.

The six students on this committee cannot possibly come in contact with all the questions, problems or suggestions, of the college members. Listed below are the names and phone numbers of the students. Please contact us if you wish to attend a meeting or tell us your thoughts.

Young Socialist Alliance National Convention

by Pam Reeves

On November 23-26 well over a thousand young radical activists will assemble in Cleveland, Ohio for the twelfth annual Young Socialist Alliance National Convention. The convention will bring together hundreds of members of the Young Socialist Alliance, Young Socialist for Jeanne and Pulley, and many other leading activists from different political movements and high school and college campuses.

According to Andy Rose, national chairperson of the Y.S.A., "This convention is going to discuss questions facing many young people now that the election campaigns have ended: what are the lessons of the seventy-two elections? what strategy and tactics are effective if you want to change society?"

"We will be charting a course of action for building the anti-war movement, the feminist movement, and struggles of Black and Chicano youth, as well as building a powerful socialist youth movement."

Participants in the convention will be able to hear and discuss reports by Y.S.A. members concerning the struggles and suggestions for supplemented by workshops and panels in which activists from these movements can exchange experiences.

At the convention there will also be reports on the situation of the revolutionary movement in different parts of the world. International guests are already confirmed from England, France, Australia, Canada, and New Zealand, and are expected from many other countries as well.

Also from around the world there will come reports from people who are involved in defense. Organizations dealing with political prisoners and repression. There will be a panel on "Imperialism's Anti-Arab Witch Hunt." A panel will be held on political repression in Latin America with a representative of an Argentinian defense organization. Vijaya Wickrama, a representative of the Ceylon Solidarity Campaign will speak on "Political Repression in Sri Lanka (Ceylon)."

A representative of the New York based Committee to Defend Soviet Political Prisoners will speak on the stepped-up campaign of repression against socialist dissidents in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

will be held with representatives from the African Information Service, the Pan-African Liberation Committee, and a representative of the Young Socialist Alliance.

In addition to these panels several films on revolutionary movements around the world will be held during the convention. Members of the Young Socialist Alliance here on the UVM campus urge all students and young workers who are interested in fighting for the struggles of the oppressed to attend the convention and help build the mass movements for social change.

On November 3, 1972, a tropical storm hovered over Vermont. Within 36 hours, four and one-half billion tons of water fell on the state. "The 1972 Vermont Flood" will be reviewed in a program seen Tuesday (Nov. 21) at 7:30 p.m., and Wednesday (Nov. 22) at 1 p.m.

the same problem, not all of whom were students. Legan commented, "I assume it's the fault of the people who are signing up voters - a notary public has probably caused this misfortune. As far as I understand it, registration slips weren't turned in or were improperly notarized. The registration desk obviously was not properly set up. In the future I will take measures to make sure my name is on the list. It was just so unexpected. You just naturally expect your name to be there. The woman at the polls said it happened to older people, but they were able to go to City Hall and get slips saying they could vote. Students just couldn't vote."

There will be an inter-sorority, fraternity ping-pong tournament which will begin Friday night at SAE.

Don't Talk, Walk For CROP

There are a lot of people in this tight little world to whom hunger is a way of life-for many a way of death. It's a slow, unmerciful death where there isn't enough food to live on but too much to kill you right off.

CROP, the Community Hunger Appeal of Church World Service has been working with people overseas since 1947. CROP not only feeds hungry people and helps them produce more food, but finances cooperatives, family planning clinics, and agricultural scholarships.

At noon on Sunday Dec. 3rd, there will be a "Walk for the Hungry", leaving from Patrick Gym. We will walk together through Burlington, Winooski, Essex Jct., back to Patrick Gym. The entire walk will be ten miles, but a Walker can go fewer miles if he chooses. Each Walker will get as many people as he can to pledge a certain amount of money for every mile he walks and this money will be sent to CROP.

Can you do more than talk about how lousy SAGA is-there are so many people who have so little and so many people complain because the peaches have parsley on them.

Each person can help CROP. When each one cares about others, changes can happen. Walk with the walkers or be a sponsor for CROP on Dec. 3rd.

Roller Derby Comes To UVM . .

The Student Association Concert Bureau announced its presentation of Roller Derby this Tuesday evening at the Patrick Gymnasium.

Following the formula that has made the skate game the nation's fastest growing sport over the past decade, the IRDL (International Roller Derby League) again is going all out with its concept of regional home teams in the 1972-1973 season.

Essentially, there are two home clubs-The Chiefs in the East and The Pioneers in the Midwest. From late October through mid-April these two excellent Roller Derby teams will play home games at many arenas throughout their regional turf, giving as many fans as possible a chance to see in person the same fine skaters they see each week along the IRDL Television Network.

The Chiefs termed the home club of the East meet the visiting 1971-1972 pennant-winning Jollers this Tuesday night right here on campus at 8:00 P.M.

Lately the IRDL has been performing at several colleges and universities. The teams travel with a 30 man crew and their own Roller Rink. The Concert Bureau and crew will also assist in the set-up. The rink, which will be situated in the basketball court will be surrounded by chairs (room permitting) Bleachers will be used to house onlookers. Doors will open at 7:00 P.M. and the skating commences at 8:00.

Medical Aid For Indochina?

Exactly what direction the Student Association Senate is headed in is anyone's guess. However, one thing which is certain is that it's not the right one. A motion was passed Tuesday night which would appropriate $3,000 to Medical Aid to Indochina. Fortunately, the issue is still subject to a referendum, for there are serious doubts as to whether this move would have the backing of a majority of students at UVM.

The fundamental issue at hand is, do we wish our Student Activities Fee to support such an endeavor? Medical Aid to Indochina is neither an educational, cultural, nor recreational cause. It is a humanitarian effort. Perhaps the Senators who voted "yes" for the appropriation are confused between their personal sympathies and the proper role of the Student Association. All students should reflect very carefully on the upcoming referendum. Do we wish to set a dangerous precedent by directly supporting a charity which carries strong political overtones? These are the questions which the Senate is obviously ignoring, and which may yet backfire in the end.

A Review Of Nixon's First Four Years

by William Bowman

Post election time always represents a slump in political activity, especially for the candidates who lost and their supporters. It is a time for reflection, but not discouragement. Our goals remain constant; we often forget that change is a slow process. We can learn a valuable lesson in patience and courage from the Vietnamese people.

For more than a thousand years the Vietnamese people have been fighting for their independence. The Chinese invaded Vietnam numerous times with the hope of colonizing that country; the Chinese were driven off. Vietnam was made a French colony, the people persevered, the French were finally defeated in 1954. No sooner than the French left, the United States stepped in. Vietnam is now fighting the most materially advanced country in history; and winning. The Vietnamese people have not given up, neither will we.

Richard Nixon was re-elected by a landslide; what does that mean? Barring assassination, it means that we can expect "four more years" of what we have gotten to know all too

Should PIRG Be Purged? A Look At Its Validity And Practices At UVM And In The Country

by Dick Parker

The recent publication of a food price survey conducted by VPIRG causes this writer to seriously question the necessity, or even validity, of the VPIRG. The survey purported to indicate the differences in food prices at various supermarkets in the Burlington area. It was reported that there were in fact some stores that did have slightly lower prices on some food items. While this seems to be very high minded activity, there are some questions that can indeed be asked. It is just as simple for the individual shopper to do his/her own price comparisons and in fact many do so. How many individuals does VPIRG believe will change their shopping habits as a result of such a survey, when weighing the small amount of money saved compared to the convenience of shopping at a neighborhood store? Probably very few. While I could not guess as to the cost of the survey, I doubt very seriously if it was worth it.

There are now PIRG's in many states. They have been spawned originally by Ralph Nader, who views PIRG as a mechanism which can redirect the "peace" movement toward the issues of environment, consumer protection, and corporate and governmental agencies in the lives of the average citizen. Past mistakes of the "peace" movement cited are: (1) The lack of continuity and (2) the use of violence. This is overcome within the PIRG structure by funding from mandatory student fees and violence is simply overcome by substituting other forms of intimidation. VPIRG was organized through Nader contacts on college campuses in Vermont. After a heavy public relations effort, the contacts sought the signatures of a majority of students. Having accomplished this, VPIRG was then able to gain a mandatory increase in student fees, which are turned over to VPIRG for its exclusive use. At UVM the fee is $3.00. The fee is collected regardless of individual views or the issues that VPIRG addresses itself to.

At campuses in other states, PIRG leaders have resisted all attempts to have the student signatures on the petitions validated. No effort is made to determine the authenticity of the signatures, if all were actually students or if some signed more than once. Was this the case at UVM?

When collecting signatures, VPIRG provided only a very vague explanation of the organization's intent and the programs it contemplated. Appealing phrases such as "the public interest" and "consumer protection" are and were used. This writer's concern centers around the mandatory increase in student fees for all students, even though many oppose VPIRG's methods. There is a refund procedure. PIRG groups are aware that student apathy and the small amount of money involved will prevent large numbers of students from seeking refunds. They seek to limit refunds by scheduling them during the first very busy days after classes start, and then for only a brief period. (At Oregon campuses, refunds were grudgingly made at first. As more students sought refunds, procedures were cancelled and now no refunds are given at all. Could this happen in Vermont?)

It would seem that if VPIRG is as virtuous as it tries to make the public and students believe, then financial support can be obtained voluntarily without coercion. Another fact is that PIRG research and criticism are directed solely at business and government, and consistently overlook big labor and its excesses. Have PIRG groups demanded representation on a union's board of directors as it has on companies?

What has PIRG accomplished? In Connecticut, a study was made of the M-1 Rifle. In Oregon, where they apparently have plenty of money, PIRG had a skindiver floating down the Columbia River checking for sewage, after that state had already completed a long, costly survey of the problem. Other activities included compiling lists of "warming" industries in a state, researching transportation patterns for wheelchair and exposes on small and large businesses.

Is PIRG political? They claim no involvement in campus politics. But, at Austin University in Texas, PIRG advocates

'Limits To Growth' For World's Future

by Gene Beaudoin

Less than a year ago the Potomac Associates and the Club of Rome got together on a book that was a "Report on the Predicament of Man" as it was aptly titled by the Club of Rome. Many who will read this column have yet to read the small concise book. It should be required reading by anyone who expects to live for at least the next twenty or thirty years. I believe the book to be of great value. Many other people do not believe that the book of all that is said. They are not alone, who would say that the wave has already broken for the book and respect to it and to the sort of intellectual movement that surrounded it has broken as well.

Limits to Growth is a study of the world ecosystem. It is based on the idea that man cannot make decisions that have as many variables as a global system without the aid of the computer and some systems analysis. The first point on which I would support the book is that it is a global model. For what it's worth, it is the first global model and that would have been justification enough for the book. I would assume that those who would criticize the book would be among the first to want to improve on the model. After all that is the nature of scientific inquiry.
